Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; although I want to say to the Senator that that money has never been expended. We built a dredge with a portion of the previous appropriation. We had been paying 15 and 20 cents a yard for dredging. Under the wise policy of the Government we built a dredge and did the work for 5 cents a yard. The whole project could have been completed, as Col. Ludlow desired to have it done, with a 10-foot channel, because for half the distance to Lake Michigan we have a 10-foot channel now, and in some places a 12-foot channel. In the other half we have only 5 or 6 feet. We want to complete the project, and I give the Senate notice that as soon as I can have influence enough with the Engineers' Department to revive the Ludlow plan with reference to Grand River I shall give you no peace until that natural highway has been opened up from the chief city on the western side of our State to Lake Michigan.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a few moments ago the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] sent to the desk and had read an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post, in which it was stated that the river and harbor bill was made up of unjustifiable appropriations in large part, and, as I understood the article, the terms "graft" and "pork barrel" were used. I desire to know if the Senator, in his reading of the Saturday Evening Post, has ever come across any agitation for an increase in the rates of second-class mail matter?

Mr. KENYON. I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. BRYAN. Has the Senator ever observed in the Saturday Evening Post any agitation in favor of increasing the postage rates on second-class mail matter?

Mr. KENYON. I have not observed it in the Saturday Evening Post, though I have observed it in other places.

Mr. BRYAN. Has the Senator observed it in any of the magazines which refer to items of the river and harbor bill as being made up of "graft" and "pork"?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know how many magazine articles have referred to the pending bill in the way which the Senator suggests. I do not think the article which I had read said it was "graft" or "pork," but said there was an impression in the country that "pork" might enter into it.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, has the Senator seen in any of the magazines an agitation in favor of increasing the rates on second-class mail matter?

Mr. KENYON. I have not.

Mr. BRYAN. Now, Mr. President, I want to read from the report of the Postmaster General for the year ending June 30, 1913:

> Although second-class matter constituted approximately 62 per cent of the aggregate weight of the domestic revenue-producing mail, it produced only 4.98 per cent of the postage derived from such mail. The difference between the receipts from second-class matter and the expenditures chargeable thereto is not as disproportionate, yet it is so great as to deserve the most careful consideration with a view to fixing more equitable postage rates on the several classes of mail so that the revenue from each may be more nearly commensurate with its cost for handling and transportation. The commission created in 1911 under a joint resolution of Congress to investigate the subject found the cost of handling and transporting second-class matter, exclusive of certain expenditures regarding which exact information was not at hand, to be approximately 6 cents a pound, and recommended that the postage rate thereon be increased from 1 cent a pound to 2 cents a pound, such charge being regarded as reasonable and a step in the direction of the equalization of the postage charges on the several classes of mail.

Then the Postmaster General proceeds to recommend an increase in the rates on newspapers and magazines.

I understood the Senator to say—and of course it is a fact—that the Saturday Evening Post has a large circulation and necessarily avails itself of the second-class mail rates, and therefore pays 1 cent a pound for the carriage in the mails of its paper, which costs the people of this country 6 cents a pound; so that the people of this country lose, according to that estimate, 5 cents a pound for every pound of the Saturday Evening Post or of any other magazine carried through the mails; and it is a strange spectacle to me that they undertake to say that items in the river and harbor bill, which save in freight rates millions upon millions of dollars to the consumers of this country, constitute graft, but that a contribution by the Government of 5 cents a pound on second-class mail matter is entirely appropriate.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he sits down?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I was not engaged in any defense of the Saturday Evening Post. If the situation the Senator presents is true—and I assume, of course, that it is—and the Senator is a member of the committee which would have the power to report a bill to remedy that situation, and that condition, as the Senator presents it, is absolutely wrong, why has not something been done?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not undertake to say that the carriage of second-class mail matter for less than it costs the Government is waste.

Mr. KENYON. Well, I do not believe I would agree with the Senator on that proposition.

Mr. BRYAN. The rate is sought to be justified, of course, because of the educational value of second-class matter.

Mr. KENYON. There may be justification in that regard; that is true.

Mr. BRYAN. There have been many hearings in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in an effort to adjust the various rates. It is claimed that first-class mail matter pays twice as much as it costs to carry it and that second-class mail matter is carried at a loss of 5 cents a pound. Those figures are arrived at from the reports of commissions appointed by Congress to investigate, and the Postmaster General states it here as a fact, but it certainly is a contribution by the Government for the benefit of those who avail themselves of the second-class mail privilege. If the people get it back because of the educational advantage derived, then there is no waste, no graft; but certainly it comes nearer being a subsidy than the items found in the pending bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if this postal matter is wrong, it ought to be righted, and I would join with the Senator in an effort to remedy it; but if it is right, as the Senator seems now to say, on the ground of educational advantage, then there is nothing in the Senator's argument.

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President; I think the rates ought to be raised. I think, perhaps, it might be well to let the news matter solely go perhaps at a loss, but where they double the size of a magazine for advertising and reap great benefit and great profit, it seems to me that they are in poor position to criticize the appropriations by Congress for rivers and harbors for the benefit of the people of the entire country. I do not desire the Senator to understand that I concede that the rates ought not to be raised; but I asked the Senator the question so that perhaps he and the editorial writers on the papers and magazines might consider that there is less justification for the rates they enjoy and there is more subsidy from the Government to them than in perhaps any other appropriations that come out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, it is a source of very painful surprise and regret to me to see such a disposition on the part of serious-minded Senators to cast such terrible reflections upon Members of their own body. The intimation—in fact, the direct charge—that the rivers and harbors bill contains "pork" or "graft" is certainly a very serious reflection upon every member of the Commerce Committee of the Senate who prepared the bill, and upon every Member of the House of Representatives, which passed those items of it that were sent to the Senate by the House.

What is "pork"? I have never heard any definition of it; but under the common acceptation it surely means that Congress is attempting to divide, to scatter around in different States and congressional districts, improper, unwarranted appropriations of public money in order to benefit some Representative or Senator.

What is "graft"? It is the receipt of a sum which you have no right to receive—an unlawful, an unjust sum. One public man recently gave utterance to the sentiment that many of the items in the river and harbor bill are "a humbug and a steal." Do the Senators who criticize this bill consider that any items in it are "a humbug and a steal"; and if so, what are these items? I should like to have them rise in their places and say what items in this bill are a humbug and a steal. What items are "graft"? What items in this bill are for the personal benefit of some Member of the House of Representatives or of some Senator?

Yet, in cold blood, that is what they mean by charging "graft" and "pork." They mean that some Senator has secured an appropriation that was unwarranted, unjust, that he had no right to secure, or that some Member of the other branch of Congress has secured an appropriation for his district that he had no right to secure, that is not warranted by the benefits to commerce to be derived from that public appropriation.

Sir, it is certainly a source of the greatest surprise and regret to me that Members of this the most dignified legislative tribunal on earth should make such accusations against their fellow Members. That is what it means, however, and you can not make anything else of it. They make those accusations without pointing out the items, without giving a bill of particulars, without treating us, sir, as any ordinary thief is treated; for when a man is indicted for stealing he is served with a copy of the indictment, and that indictment charges specifically just what is alleged to have been stolen. The time, the place, the circumstances, the article, and everything connected with it are notified to the alleged thief, so that he can answer intelligently. Yet here, in this great, solemn body, we are charged practically with thieving, with robbing the Government, with taking what we have no right to take, with using the funds of the Republic in order that we may be returned to our places in the Senate or our places in the House, and yet we are not told when and where and how we did it. It is all general, and it comes, in the main, from people who do not criticize a certain class of river and harbor appropriations.

You have heard no criticisms on this floor of appropriations for harbors. What are harbors? They are railroad terminals. How many criticisms have you heard of appropriations for these railroad terminals? I have heard none, and I have been listening very carefully; but I have heard plenty of criticisms, Mr. President and Senators, of improvements of streams which are competitors of railways. There may be no significance in that, but it is the fact all the same.

How do we originate an appropriation in the House or in the Senate? What is the initial step before we can start a so-called "pork barrel" measure? It is to order a survey.

That survey is made by the Engineer Corps of the Army. The district engineer, if he regards the project favorably, reports on it to the division engineer. He in turn reports favorably to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors if he thinks it is worthy. Then the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors makes its examination, in many instances an independent examination, and reports favorably or unfavorably. After that is done, the matter has to run the gauntlet of the Chief of Engineers; and not until it has received the approval either of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors or the Chief of Engineers is it considered to have legislative status.

A project that can receive the approval of all these eminent engineers must have a great deal of merit in it. There is no finer band of men in the Union. Who are these engineers? They are selected from the very flower of the young men of America, appointed to West Point by Representatives, Senators, and the President himself, subjected to a most critical examination before they enter, required to undergo a very hard course of study, and the 10 honor men are the ones who constitute the Engineer Corps. They have honorable positions for life. They retire at a comfortable salary at the age of 64 years. They are as disinterested a body of men as it is possible to find. In the whole history of this Government we have had only one scandal connected with river and harbor work in the Board of Engineers, and even in that case many people believed the man was not guilty. And before Congress makes an appropriation for a river or harbor, before it has legislative status, it must run the gantlet of this board.

Several years ago Congress created the National Waterways Commission, of which the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was chairman. It was a commission composed of a number of the very best men in Congress: Senators Theodore E. Burton, of Ohio; Jacob H. Gallinger, of New Hampshire; Samuel H. Piles, of Washington; William Alden Smith, of Michigan; F. M. Simmons, of North Carolina; James P. Clarke, of Arkansas; William Lorimer, of Illinois; and from the House of Representatives D. S. Alexander, of New York; Frederick C. Stevens, of Minnesota; Irving P. Wanger, of Pennsylvania; Stephen M. Sparkman, of Florida; and John A. Moon, of Tennessee. It would be very difficult to find an abler body of men. Now, what do that great commission say about the Engineer Corps and about our method of making river and harbor improvements? At page 78 of the final report of the commission submitted in 1912, quoting from their preliminary report of 1910, they say:

> The commission would advise that without a careful and unbiased examination of proposed improvements of the nature now required by statute no project should be adopted by Congress. Numerous propositions have been made for the creation of a board of public works, or other body, which shall decide upon the feasibility and desirability of propositions for expenditures on rivers and harbors. The commission is unwilling to recommend a change of this kind, and points to the fact that the past recommendations of the Engineer Corps have been carefully prepared, and with a degree of expert knowledge and comprehension of the commercial needs of the country which could not well be supplied by any other body or organization. The advantages which attach to the Engineer Corps are obvious. The members are in the permanent service of the Government, and are free from those influences which would inevitably be brought to bear upon men in civil life. Those engineers now engaged in the work are carefully trained in the planning and execution of these improvements, and have special qualifications for judging the feasibility and the cost of proposed river and harbor projects. They also have a good general knowledge of the probable commercial results which would accrue, though on this point their opinions have not been regarded as conclusive. In this connection the commission would call attention to the necessity for an increase in the membership of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. President, this report—which, let me repeat, indorses in the most unqualified language the Engineer Corps of the Army—was made by that great National Waterways Commission, of which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who is now criticizing this bill so severely, was chairman. Let me say to you, sir, and Senators, that practically every project in this bill received the approval of the very Engineer Corps which Senator BURTON'S commission says is the ideal agency for Congress to have assist it in this work.

There are only two items in this bill, and these small ones, which did not receive the entire and cordial approval of the Engineer Corps—one the Arcadia project, in Michigan, costing $25,000, a project which has been under way for many years, but the continuance of which they did not recommend; the other, a project at Lake Contrary, on the Missouri River, where $75,000 was appropriated several years ago contingent upon a like sum being appropriated by the local people. These people were so poor that they could not contribute the $75,000, and this bill removes the requirement of the local contribution. In all other respects, so far as I know—and I studied every item of the bill—everything in it meets the approval of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. President, as one member of the Commerce Committee, I studied this bill for days and weeks and months as carefully as I ever studied any measure in my life. I was a member of the subcommittee charged with framing the bill. We gave hearings to everyone who desired to be heard. We criticized every measure as carefully as we could, and if there be any "graft" in the bill, if there be any "pork" in the bill, I do not know it. I say here and now that if there be any—and any one of the Senators inclined to be so critical will point it out, will show it, will convince me of it—and I believe I am a fair-minded man—I will rise in my place and move to strike it from the bill.

We do not claim infallibility for the Commerce Committee of the Senate. We are just as liable to err as other human beings. Mistakes may have crept into this bill. We do not deny that. Perhaps there are mistakes here, but I believe the committee is about as fair as other committees, and if you will point out any mistakes we will gladly strike them out.

No one has attempted to criticize more than 3 per cent of the 350 items in the bill. There has been criticism of 9 or 10 items out of 350, aggregating about $5,164,000 out of a total of $53,000,000—3 per cent of the items, aggregating in cost less than 10 per cent of the bill; and I wish to say to you that when it comes to defending those 10 items you will find that there is no mistake and no "graft" in a single one of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, before the hour for the unfinished business arrives, I desire to make a correction in a statement I inadvertently made a little while ago. I said that there was an item in the bill which showed that at the head of navigation there was one-tenth of an inch of water in the stream. I meant to say one-tenth of a foot, and I want that correction to be made.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I do not know that I care to say anything else, except to repeat that, to my mind, it is outrageous for reputable journals to criticize and abuse a great piece of legislation like this without going into details, without showing us the alleged mistakes and giving us a chance, as fair-minded, honorable men, to correct those mistakes. I appeal to these newspapers and journals to point out, to give a bill of particulars, to give us a chance to correct the errors, if any there be, and if they can show any considerable percentage of error or mistake in this bill, then they will do far more than I believe it is possible to do, because, in my judgment, it is a better bill than even the "ideal river and harbor bill" of 1907.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15613.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. WORKS rose.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Gallinger	Page	Smoot
Borah	Hollis	Perkins	Sterling
Brady	Jones	Poindexter	Stone
Brandegee	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Bryan	Kern	Ransdell	Thompson
Burton	Lane	Reed	Thornton
Camden	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Tillman
Chamberlain	Lewis	Shafroth	Walsh
Chilton	Lippitt	Sheppard	Warren
Clapp	McCumber	Simmons	White
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Crawford	Newlands	Smith, Md.	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] has the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I understand that during the morning hour the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] declared that unless the trade commission bill were pressed immediately to a vote he would move that the river and harbor bill be made the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. After to-day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. After to-day. I have no exception to take to the statement of the Senator from North Carolina. I think he is justified in feeling some impatience regarding the progress of both these bills.

I wish to say, so far as the trade commission bill is concerned, that conditions have thus far impeded me in pressing the measure vigorously to a vote, though I have made an effort from time to time to obtain unanimous consent for a vote. It is obvious to me now that the Democratic Party, which is responsible for this legislation, will have to see to it that a quorum is maintained here, and that a vote is obtained at an early day.

With reference to the past I have to say that the delay has been due to the fact that there have been some differences of opinion upon this side regarding section 5 of the bill as to whether the granting of the power to determine unfair competition is a delegation of legislative power, as to whether the phrase has sufficient legal significance to enable the commission to enforce it, and other questions of that kind. These doubts could only be removed by a thoroughgoing debate, which we have had, and I am inclined to believe that, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, those doubts have almost entirely disappeared.

There has been a disposition, however, on both sides to delay a vote upon this bill until the entire so-called trust program could be laid before the Senate by the committees having jurisdiction. It is well known that there are three measures which are being considered—the trade commission bill, the so-called Clayton bill, containing legislation supplementary to the Sherman Act, and the so-called Rayburn bill, or the railroad-securities bill. The latter has nothing to do with the question of trusts and may be eliminated from consideration, although, of course, it is desirable that we should have an early report upon that subject; but the other two bills are in a measure interlocking.

Last week we adjourned upon Thursday until Monday in the expectation that the Interstate Commerce Committee would be able to report the securities bill by the following Monday and that the Judiciary Committee would be able to report the so-called Clayton bill at that time. So far as the Interstate Commerce Committee is concerned, we found it exceedingly difficult, because of the absence of members, some of them from the city and others from the meeting, to secure such a continuous session of the committee as would result in a report of the bill, though we made substantial progress, and I think at the next meeting we will be enabled to report upon that measure.

So far as the report from the Judiciary Committee is concerned, that committee has been upon the point, as I have understood, of reporting it every day, the expectation being that upon the following day the bill would be reported, and yet five or six days have elapsed. We are told, however, that the committee is now about ready to report and that the bill will be reported either to-day or to-morrow.

I wish to say that whatever may be the action of the Judiciary Committee with reference to that bill, it is my intention to press this bill to a vote and to bring as far as I can all the powers of insistence to bear upon that subject. I would ask first, however, as an easy way of disposing of the matter, that unanimous consent be given for a vote upon this question on Monday.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask for a vote on Tuesday.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator, to spare him a needless waste of time in going through such requests for unanimous consent to vote on this or any other bill involving a grave change of governmental policy in the question of the regulation of corporations, there will be no unanimous consent given to this or any bill on any day until every bill has been thoroughly and exhaustively debated, so that there may be at least an approach to some preliminary understanding of the meaning of the terms employed in the bills; and that date, that happy date, I consider to be remote by the period of weeks, if not months.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. LIPPITT. In addition to what the Senator from Connecticut has said, I must confess that I am greatly surprised that the Senator in charge of this bill is himself willing to ask to-day that a definite time be fixed for the final vote to be taken. The Senator is aware that only this morning some members, a few members, of the Interstate Commerce Committee have been considering some important changes in section 5 of the bill. Only yesterday, I think it was, I received a communication from the chairman himself suggesting a very radical change in section 5.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from Nevada to make a short statement, which turned out to be a rather long one. I do not want to yield for a general discussion of this subject.

Mr. LIPPITT. Will the Senator allow me just to finish the few words I was going to say?

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator confines his statement to a few words, I will yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. It will not be very long, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield further?

Mr. WORKS. I yield further to the Senator from Rhode Island upon the statement that he will say but a few words.

Mr. LIPPITT. What I was trying to say is that these very important amendments are now being considered by the Interstate Commerce Committee largely at the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada himself, and it seems to me radically illogical that at the time such changes are being proposed, and being proposed, as I understand it, with the approval and at the desire of the Senator from Nevada himself, who is in charge of the bill, he should expect that a definite and nearby date should be fixed for the final vote on the bill. Certainly, if the committee and the Senator himself think that the bill should be radically changed, he ought not to begin trying to fix a date for its final consideration until we at least know what those changes are to be. I understand that even this afternoon the committee is to have a meeting to consider the proposed changes, and I merely suggest to the Senator that under those conditions the suggestion of a final vote is inopportune.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The amendment to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers simply relates to a court review of the action of the commission with reference to unfair competition, concerning which there are amendments pending now before the body. They are printed and are before the Senate for its consideration. Those amendments are to be disposed of by the Senate. It is customary for committees while bills are being considered to meet from time to time and counsel together with reference to pending amendments, but such meetings are not intended in any way to delay the consideration and determination of the bill.

I give notice that from to-morrow on I will press the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WORKS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. One of the most thoughtful and capable Members of this body is addressing the Senate on a subject of great importance. There are present at this time 11 Members of the Senate, and during most of the time the Senator from California has been speaking there have been, including the Presiding Officer, but three of the majority present. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gallinger	Newlands	Smoot
Brady	Gronna	Norris	Stone
Brandegee	Hughes	Overman	Thomas
Bryan	Johnson	Page	Thornton
Burton	Jones	Perkins	Townsend
Camden	Kenyon	Ransdell	Walsh
Catron	Kern	Shafroth	West
Chamberlain	Lane	Sheppard	White
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Simmons	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Mich.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. THOMPSON, and Mr. TILLMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. CLAPP and Mr. ASHURST entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WORKS resumed and concluded his speech, which, entire, is as follows:

Mr. President, we have now definitely entered upon what has come to be called trust legislation. The term is misleading as applied to the three bills now before the Senate. They extend far beyond the effort to regulate or even control the trusts. I have examined these bills as they came over from the House and they have filled me with amazement. If the business of the country is dishonest enough and oppressive enough to justify such legislation as is proposed by the three bills, our condition would seem to be hopeless, and to remedy conditions by law impossible. To attempt it would work no practical good and add to the burdens of the people who deal with the business concerns sought to be regulated. We have one commission, known as the Interstate Commerce Commission, with almost plenary and unlimited power in regulating in some respects the business of common carriers. We propose by one of these bills to extend this power enormously and in respects most vital to the corporations in the way of controlling, absolutely and without limitation by this commission, their right to issue shares of capital stock, bonds, or other securities, thus giving the commission the power to say what investments shall be made by such corporations and for what purposes. It involves, necessarily, the power of the commission to prevent any railroad corporation from extending or improving its railroad line or from new construction of any kind. In other words, it gives the commission the arbitrary and unlimited power to say what a railway company may do in the way of construction, whether new or by way of extension or improvement of its existing line. Under the provisions of the bill no common carrier can build a new line or improve an old one on borrowed money without the consent of the commission. And in order to secure this consent the carrier must lay bare its entire business and financial affairs and submit to an examination and inspection of its books and papers and that of its officers, agents, and attorneys in a way most humiliating and unjust to business men of integrity and business probity. In addition to this, we propose to create another commission of five persons and vest in that commission equally arbitrary and unlimited power over corporations and associations, and incidentally private individuals, not common carriers, but engaged in interstate trade and commerce, and authority to determine whether any such corporation or association is engaged in unfair competition, and with inquisitorial power that is extended to its subordinate employees, as broad and as offensive to all ideas of freedom and independence in business as in case of the other commission. I have tried to analyze the three bills and resolve them into tabulated and brief form for my own convenience in trying to arrive at the object and scope of their provisions and their probable effect if they are enacted. I submit this analysis with the hope that it may help other Senators to grasp the meaning and effect of the bills more readily and conveniently. It is as follows:

MEMORANDA OF PROVISIONS.

1. Interstate trade commission bill.
   a. Federal trade commission of five members created.
   b. Appointed by the President, by and with the advice of the Senate.
   c. Term of office seven years.
   d. Salaries, $10,000 a year each; secretary, $5,000; assistant secretary, $4,000; total, $59,000 a year.
   e. Commission authorized to appoint attorneys, special agents, accountants, experts, examiners, and other employees, as many as Congress will appropriate money to pay.
   f. Commission given power:
      1. To investigate any corporation or association doing an interstate-trade business whenever and as often as it pleases.
      2. To require any corporation to furnish any information it calls for at any time, without limitation.
      3. To prescribe forms of annual reports from such corporations, and to compel the making of annual reports and special reports without limit and at any time.
      4. To make public the information it obtains.
      5. To prepare decrees in suits brought by the Attorney General.
      6. To investigate and determine whether decrees procured by the Attorney General are being carried out, or are being violated, and what, if any, other or additional decree is advisable.
      7. If it finds that anyone has violated the antitrust law, to report its findings and the evidence to the Attorney General with its recommendations.
      8. Have access to all books and papers of such business.
      9. To investigate trade conditions in other countries.
      10. To prevent unfair methods of competition.
      11. To hold hearings affecting any concern whenever it pleases, to determine whether its methods are unfair or not.
      12. If it finds they are unfair, to issue an order restraining and prohibiting the use of the same.
      13. If the order is not complied with, to bring an action to enforce compliance.
      14. To issue subpœnas, compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and production of evidence, and to administer oaths.

   The bill imposes severe penalties for failure or neglect to comply with any of the orders of the commission.

2. Bill to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, known as the Clayton bill.
   a. Forbids any person engaged in commerce to discriminate between different purchasers of commodities with the purpose or intent to thereby destroy or wrongfully injure the business of a competitor of either such purchaser or seller.
   b. Makes it unlawful for any owner or operator of a mine to refuse, arbitrarily, to sell its products to a responsible person.
   c. Forbids any person to lease or sell a commodity on condition or understanding that the lessee or purchaser shall not deal in the commodities of a competitor.
   d. Exempts fraternal, labor, consumers', agricultural, or horticultural organizations instituted for the purposes of mutual help, not only from the provisions of the bill but from the antitrust laws.
   e. Also exempting associations of traffic, operating, accounting, or other officers of common carriers, under certain conditions.
   f. Forbids any corporation engaged in commerce to hold stock of another corporation so engaged, the effect of which is to eliminate or substantially lessen competition.
   g. Forbids a corporation to hold the stock of two or more corporations where such effect will result.
      This not to apply:
      (1) To corporations purchasing stock solely for investment, or
      (2) To railroad corporations aiding in the construction of branch railroads, feeders to its main line.
   h. Forbids interlocking directors in case of corporations or other concerns doing business with each other.
   i. Forbids interlocking directors of banks where either bank has a capital of $2,500,000, or more.
   j. Forbids any bank, banking association, or trust company, in any town of more than 100,000 inhabitants, to have as a director, or other officer or employee, any private banker or director, or other officer of any other bank in the same place, with certain enumerated exceptions.

k. Forbidding any person to be a director in any two or more corporations engaged in commerce, either of which has capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating more than $1,000,000.

l. Imposes penalties for violations of the act and makes directors, officers, and agents individually and directly liable.

The bill further provides for the issuance of injunctions in certain cases and for other proceedings.

3. Bill to prevent overissues of securities.

a. Authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel annual reports, under oath, by common carriers showing all the facts about its stock and securities, cost and value of its properties, franchises and equipments, number of employees, their salaries, amounts expended for improvements each year, and how earnings and receipts, operating and other expenses, balance of profit and loss, and a complete exhibit of the carrier's financial operations each year, including an annual balance sheet, information in relation to rates or regulations concerning fares or freights, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts affecting the same, and the keeping of uniform system of accounts and making of monthly and special reports on any subject the commission may require, including a balanced statement of its receipts on capital account and of the surplus of the income account accruing during the period covered, and all other financial transactions that may be called for.

b. The commission is given the power to investigate all financial transactions of the carriers and examine into the actual cost and value of property acquired by or services rendered to them.

c. The carrier may be required to disclose every interest, direct or indirect, of the directors, stockholders, officers, agents or attorneys, employees, receivers, or operating trustees of such carrier in any transaction under investigation.

d. In addition the commission may require the carrier to furnish any further statements of fact or evidence it pleases.

e. The commission may prescribe the forms of accounts and books to be kept by the carrier, and to keep any other is made unlawful.

f. The commission is given the right of access to all books and papers in the hands of the carrier, its officers, stockholders, agents, attorneys, employees, receivers, or operating trustee, or anybody else that has had business transactions with the carrier.

g. Authorizes the appointment of special agents or inspectors, who are given the right to inspect, examine, and take copies of everything they can find.

h. Makes it a penal offense to refuse access of these special agents or inspectors to anything, punished by heavy forfeitures.

i. Makes it a penal offense to make any false entries or accounts, or any accounts other than those prescribed by the commission, or to fail to make any entry, or to make them full, true or correct, or to destroy any account or entry, and so forth, under penalty of fine and imprisonment.

j. Courts authorized to issue writs of mandamus to compel compliance with requirements of the commission.

k. Special agents and examiners are authorized to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

l. Requires issuance of receipt or bill of lading for goods shipped, but the same shall not relieve the carrier from any liability under the act.

m. Makes it unlawful for any carrier to issue any certificates of stocks, bonds, or other evidence of indebtedness, or to assume any obligation or liability unless:

First. (a) It be for some purpose within its corporate powers necessary for its performance in the public interest and not tending to impair its financial ability to discharge its duty to the public.

(b) And then only when such issue is approved by the commission.

(c) The application for leave to issue shall be in the form prescribed by the commission, and includes:

1. The total amount of the issue and how authorized on behalf of the carrier.
2. The number and amount of all its securities outstanding.
3. The amount to be issued and whether to be sold, pledged, or held in the treasury and the terms upon which they are to be disposed of and the consideration, etc.
4. The number and amount of its securities so authorized and not then to be issued.
5. If the issue is of shares of stock the number, face value, whether common or preferred, and number already outstanding.

Second. The preferences or privileges granted to holders of any such securities, date of maturity, whether cumulative or not, etc.

Third. The purpose to which the proceeds are to be applied.

Fourth. If it is proposed to assume the obligation of any other person, natural or artificial, the financial condition of such other person and the object of such assumption.

n. The application must be made under oath.

o. When securities pledged or held as free assets shall subsequently be sold or otherwise disposed of, must file a certificate to that effect and give again all the information called for by subdivision c, above, and anything else the commission requires.

p. On application for leave to issue securities the commission is required to give notice to the railroad commission, or other proper authority of the State in which the carrier operates, and such State representative is authorized to be heard.

q. The action of approval shall not be construed as a guaranty or any obligation on the part of the Government.

r. Notes maturing not more than two years after their date excepted from the provisions of the bill, but notice of their issuance must be given the commission.

s. Commissioners must require periodical or special reports from all carriers issuing securities, including such notes.

t. The issue of securities not authorized as above may be enjoined.

u. And the issuance of them is made a penal offense on the part of the officers, agents, and attorneys of the carrier.

v. Being a director of two or more carriers without the consent of the commission prohibited under penalty.

w. Officer or director of the carrier prohibited from receiving any money or thing of value for or on account of the issuance of securities by the carrier.

I have given the provisions of the last two bills as they came from the House and the other as reported to the Senate, partly to show how far this administration is willing to go in tying up the business of the country and destroying its freedom and independence. The President has not only recommended legislation of this kind, as the Constitution authorizes him to do, but has, as I am informed, agreed with Democratic Members of both Houses of Congress as to the specific forms of the bills before they were introduced. So in that form they represent the views, objects, and purposes of the administration. Some changes and modifications of them have been made in committee of the Senate. These changes will be noted further along.

Mr. President, I was amazed, and not a little disturbed, when I came to realize the scope and extent of these bills and contemplated their probable effect upon the business and business men of the country. Their reading may well make one wonder whether we are living in a free country in a civilized age or have gone back to the dark ages, when force and despotism ruled and controlled the rights and destinies of men. This attempt to bring the business of the country under such a system of espionage, inquisition, and subservience of individual citizens to the unbridled power of government by commission in the transaction of their private business, I believe, surpasses anything in the history of this or any other civilized nation. Have we fallen so low that the standard of business honor and integrity must be fixed and enforced by law and arbitrary power? If we have, it would be far more manly and just to meet this evil condition by taking business of this kind over into the hands of the Government, if we can be assured that political appointees to office will be more honest or trustworthy than the officers of the corporations we assume to control.

Mr. President, such legislation as this is more than likely to be as futile as it is unjust. Men are not made honest or unselfish by law. Good character or probity are not the products of compulsory legislation or the enforcement of arbitrary power. Some business men are dishonest and resort to practices that should be condemned and punished; but other men are honest and conduct their business fairly and with due consideration for the rights of their competitors. Men engaged in the lines of business sought to be affected by this proposed legislation are no more unworthy nor dishonest, I believe, than others of their countrymen engaged in other pursuits. To reach and control the men who engage in unfair practices we propose to humiliate and degrade the whole body of business men of the country, destroy their initiative and energy, and make them subservient slaves to the power of a commission placed over them, their property, and their business by the Government. The great fault of present laws intended to control trusts and dishonest business is that they do not attempt to reach and punish specific wrongful acts or make them unlawful and punish the offenders who commit them. This is not only a great fault, but it has constituted the greatest weakness of such laws. The antitrust law has been in force for nearly a quarter of a century. As a moral educator and a stimulus to higher ideals in business it has probably done some good, but as a practical remedy for existing or expected evils or a benefit to the people of the country it has been a lamentable failure. Hundreds, probably millions, of dollars have been expended by the Government in its enforcement, and other millions have been spent by business institutions in the attempt to comply with its terms and in defending against actions brought to enforce it. Departments of Justice in different administrations of the Government have vied with each other in efforts, more or less successful, to enforce the law. They have done so somewhat boastfully, because prosecutions against big business in any form are popular and politically helpful to the party in power. So is every attempt to legislate against it. Hence the bills we have before us.

But, Mr. President, what good has come to the people of the country or harm to the corporations involved in these prosecutions? None whatever, so far as can be seen. They have not decreased the cost of living or benefited directly a single man or woman in the country. They have not decreased the value of the stock of any offending corporation or materially interfered with or injured its business. So far as I know it has not even benefited any competitors of such organizations or restored free or fair competition. If they had, the legislation now proposed would be wholly unnecessary. As we are proposing to extend this kind of legislation along the same general lines, involving inspections, examinations, inquisitions, and provisions against discrimination and combinations, and the like, our footsteps should be guided by experience. We should look conditions squarely in the face after nearly 25 years of effort along these lines and try, if we are going to legislate at all, to get down to something specific and practical. Let us define offenses specifically and send the man who violates the law to the penitentiary, where he belongs, and not burden all business with such supervision and throttling inquisitions as are now proposed. When the antitrust law was enacted there was not one offensive monopoly or trust where there are a hundred now, and they are not only greater in number, but they are stronger and more oppressive, arrogant, and overpowering in their influence. They have been born, nurtured, and waxed strong and powerful under this ineffectual and futile kind of legislation that we are now asked to perpetuate and extend. In the prosecutions that have taken place under the antitrust law thousands of cases of specific crimes and wrongdoing have been proved for which men should have been sent to jail or the penitentiary, but the courts were, in the main, helpless to punish for these offenses, because the act was against combinations and conspiracies, and the remedy was to dissolve the combination and punish only the conspiracy. And what a solemn travesty on justice, what a farce it has all been!

I had occasion, in a speech made by me in the Senate May 5, 1913, to examine and criticize the antitrust law and point out its weaknesses and inefficiency. In the course of my remarks I said:

> The first section of the act forbids only contracts, combinations in the form of trusts or otherwise, or conspiracies in restraint of trade or commerce. It does not make criminal any act of one individual or corporation against another, however oppressive or injurious, although the specific wrongful act in itself may be in restraint of trade or commerce. Such wrongful acts, that should be themselves made criminal, may be proved only to establish the ultimate fact of an unlawful contract, combination, or conspiracy. If this ultimate fact is not established, the wrongful acts committed in restraint of trade must go unpunished.
> The second section is subject to the same criticism. It is directed wholly against monopolies and not against acts of wrong or oppression, however much or how directly such acts tend to restrain trade or commerce. The wrongful acts are not an offense against the statute and proof of them can be made only to establish the ultimate fact of a monopoly or attempt or conspiracy to establish a monopoly. The acts themselves, some of which may be directed at one person or corporation and some at another, are not punishable under this section. There can be no doubt that the sole object and purpose of the act was to prevent contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of trade, and nothing else. It was not intended to, and does not, forbid or render criminal specific acts in restraint of trade or commerce. This is just as true of the section against monopolies as it is of the other.

Provisions of the law and decisions of the court were cited to verify the statement made.

Now, sir, what are we proposing to do by the so-called Clayton bill? Is it any better in this respect than the original antitrust bill? In some particulars and in a very slight degree it is. It does provide specifically against discrimination between customers, refusal to sell the products of mines, oil or gas wells, and so forth, and the sale of goods under an agreement that the purchaser shall not deal in the goods of anyone else. Very properly all of these are made criminal offenses and made punishable. This gives some room for hope that Congress may some time deal with this great evil in a practical way by specific and direct legislation that can be made effective. Some other provisions of the Clayton bill will be considered further along.

Mr. President, I have thus given a sort of general survey of trust legislation and its effects. Let me now, with the permission of the Senate, take up and consider the bills now before us, intended, it is claimed, to improve the existing law on the subject, and make it more practical and effective. This, as I have attempted to show, is greatly needed. Therefore the question is whether the bills before us are so framed as to have this effect or will they, if enacted, make the law worse instead of better? Will they make a law that is now only ineffectual active for evil? In some particulars I am afraid they will. There is some good in some, if not all, of the bills, but some of their provisions are not only unjust and oppressive but positively evil and vicious.

TRADE COMMISSION BILL.

First, of the bill to create a trade commission. This bill has been thoroughly and ably discussed by other Senators. The legal and constitutional phases of it have been fully covered. So I am not going to discuss it at length. I am strongly and earnestly opposed to the inquisitorial features of the bill. They seem to me to be obnoxious to every principle of free government and an unnecessary burden upon the business of the country. They apply only to business concerns engaged in interstate trade, but if Congress can enact laws of this kind, affecting such corporations, the several States have power to extend them to all other business concerns corporate or of private citizens, and then we will have the business of the whole country in a straitjacket that will be infinitely worse than the unfair competition we now have.

We assume that by such legislation we are putting big business in the hands and under the control of a commission. It is much to be feared, on the other hand, that the commission, and with it the Government, may fall into the hands of the powerful combinations of wealth. The men who can control the business and finances of a great nation may find a way to reach and control the five men who are expected to control them. It has been done. It is not at all unlikely that it will occur again. These powerful influences have, in a very great measure, guided and controlled the destinies of this Republic. They will continue to do so. Can we expect such a commission to withstand their influence? They work in mysterious ways. They know what they want. They know how to get it. They lead and influence honest men as successfully as they corrupt and bribe dishonest ones. It is a perilous thing to give over to a mere commission such enormous power for good or evil.

But, sir, I am not confining my objections to the creation of this commission in this single case. I am opposed on principle to a Government composed of commissions and bureaus vested with powers that should be preserved in the constitutional departments of the Government. We have vastly too many of them now. We are adding to the number every session of Congress. Both the legislative and judicial departments of the Government are being gradually stripped of their power that is being transferred to commissions. But, Mr. President, this is one of the worst cases of them all. This bill is an attempt to confer on this commission both legislative and judicial power. It declares unfair competition to be unlawful. It gives the commission the power to declare what is unfair competition, because it is not defined in the bill, which is legislation, pure and simple. Then it is empowered to try the question whether a corporation or association has been guilty of what it has determined to be unfair competition, and render a decree, or an order in the nature of a decree of injunction, forbidding the corporation to continue the practice.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I simply want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the bill declares "unfair competition" to be unlawful, and then it confers upon the commission authority to prohibit "unfair methods of competition," which is not exactly what the Senator said. Inasmuch as "unfair methods of competition" are not in terms prohibited by the bill, but "unfair competition" is, I wondered what was the cause of prohibiting one offense and then authorizing the commission to prohibit the commission of another, if it is another. If it is the same, if "unfair competition," declared to be unlawful, is the same as "unfair methods of competition," why should not the language be the same in both cases?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I think that is an inquiry that should be addressed to the chairman of the committee. I had not noticed the difference pointed out by the Senator from Connecticut, and I am not able to say now what the effect of that difference in the use of the words would be.

This action is essentially judicial in its character. So we have in this one small commission an inquisitorial body with power to force information of every phase of a company's business, a legislative body to determine and declare what is unfair competition, and a court to try and convict the company of a violation of the law it has created and enjoin it from carrying on its business in the way it has been doing. Mr. President, we should hesitate long before going this length. Besides being an injustice and highly oppressive to the business concerns immediately affected, it goes far toward changing our form of government. I can not but look upon such a step with serious apprehension.

RAILROAD SECURITIES BILL.

The bill to prevent overissues of securities is worse, if possible, than the one I have just been discussing in so far as it vests the commission with inquisitorial powers. Besides, in this case the additional and specific authority to call for reports, make inspections and investigations, and take copies of papers is wholly unnecessary. The Interstate Commerce Commission has as full and ample power in this respect as should, in conscience, be given to any commission. Of course, common-carrier corporations differ from mere trading companies. They are very justly regarded as public servants and properly amenable to governmental regulation. This being so, there is greater reason and propriety in subjecting their property and accounts to public inspection. It was this that justified the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Its work has proved the wisdom of creating it and vesting it with the powers it now possesses. The question of rates was of vital importance to shippers and to the public generally. Abuses had grown up in the transportation business that made action on the part of the Government imperatively necessary in the public interest. The misuse of their powers by the railway and other transportation companies brought this supervision of their business upon them. It was a just retribution. But even this kind of regulation may be carried to an extreme and work harm rather than good. The success of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the beneficial effects of its work have been one of the incentives to load the commission down with a multitude of duties that should never have been imposed upon it and which will, if it has not already, seriously impair its efficiency, and the appointment of numerous other commissions and bureaus that never should have been heard of. The Government has become top-heavy with commissions, and the expense of maintaining them, many of them idle and useless, is running up into the millions every year, and we keep on making more of them.

But, Mr. President, the most serious portion of this bill is not the additional inquisitorial powers of the commission and the immense burden it imposes on business, for which, at last, the people must pay. That is bad enough, as I have attempted to show in discussing the other bill. We propose that after the commission finds out everything that can be known about the property and business of a corporation no securities of any kind shall be issued or debt incurred by the company until the commission has given its consent and then only the amount allowed by the commission and to be used only for the purposes it prescribes. This looks like taking pretty strong measures. It looks like an unjustifiable imposition upon the corporation; but, to my mind, even that is not the worst of it. Practically we put the business of the carrier in the hands of the commission. It has the power either to build it up and make it prosperous and beneficial to the public or destroy it. The future of any corporation that must borrow money to carry out its purposes has its destiny placed in the hands of the commission. It follows necessarily that the Government becomes, morally at least, responsible for the success or failure of the company. But this bill expressly provides that the Government shall not be responsible. This seems an unworthy and cowardly thing to do. The Government controls the situation entirely. It may wreck the concern entirely or destroy its usefulness and efficiency. The company is helpless to do what its officers conceive to be necessary to its success, if the commission objects, yet the Government slips out of all responsibility for the failure and the corporation must suffer the consequences of the wrongful or mistaken judgment of the commission, whose word is absolute and controlling. If the Government is going to control the utility corporations it should do so openly and be responsible for their service to the public. This attempt to control the business of such corporations and shirk the responsibility is unfair and unjust and savors of downright dishonesty. I can not bring myself to believe that it is either just or good policy to venture upon this mode of dealing with common-carrier corporations.

THE CLAYTON BILL.

Mr. President, the Clayton bill, so called, has some merit. It has some provisions that one entertaining the views I do may consistently support. I am earnestly in favor of any practical legislation that will make competition free and untrammeled and curb the power of the great and powerful corporations in the public interest, but I want to be sure that it is in the interest of the public, for whom we are called upon to make laws. Any legitimate effort to prevent unfair and oppressive monopolies meets my hearty approval. Therefore the provision of the bill making it a criminal offense to discriminate in prices is to be commended; but the provision is weakened and its practical effect almost completely destroyed by making the specific "intent thereby to destroy or wrongfully injure the business of a competitor" necessary to constitute the offense. It would seem from this that the purpose of the bill is not to protect the public but competitors in business. Unless free competition will reduce rates and prices to shippers and consumers, competition is not worth having. What we need to do is to protect the people of the country from unjust or exorbitant charges. Under this bill, in order to establish the specific intent, to injure a competitor and not the public is made the test. And besides the fact that the theory upon which the bill proceeds is wrong, the intent would generally be impossible to prove.

Mr. President, the size of a corporation or the amount or scope of its business does not determine whether it is a trust or whether it is detrimental to the public interests or not. A corporation with millions of dollars of capital may deal as fairly and as honestly with its competitors and its customers as the corporation or individual of small capital doing a small business. The larger capital of the big concern and its greater facilities for doing business may, and often does, enable it to sell its goods or perform its services for less money than its smaller competitor. If so, the public should have the benefit of this advantage of big business over little business. But if big business reduces its rates or charges below a reasonable return in profits with the intent and purpose of destroying competition and then, with the competitor out of the way, advances the rate or charge beyond a reasonable amount this constitutes an injury and an offense against the public. We have no call to make laws to protect one competitor against another unless the unfair treatment is ultimately an injury to the public. But this section of the bill goes no further than to protect the competitor. It may be said generally that free competition is a good thing, but it is not if the big concern which could sell at a reasonable profit at a lower rate while the little concern could not, and the big one must, under this bill, charge a higher price to the public in order to protect the little one. In such a case—and such cases undoubtedly do exist—it would be much better for the little fellow to be driven out of business, provided the big fellow does not, after driving out the little fellow, advance rates or prices beyond a reasonable amount because he no longer has to meet competition. So, on the whole, this section of the bill, intended, I have no doubt, to meet a real existing evil, will be impotent to accomplish the desired result. We are bound to understand that big business is here and that it is here to stay. This is a great Nation; its business, public and private, is enormous. This is an age of big things. Without big business and combinations of wealth the big things and the great problems that are confronting us as a nation and individually could not be developed and solved.

In making laws we may as well look this fixed and unalterable fact squarely in the face and act accordingly. We cannot destroy big business. We should not if we could. We may not be able to regulate it satisfactorily. We have not done so yet. But we can and we should define the offenses that big business or little business shall not do and punish either the one or the other for doing them. If it should be regarded as a crime to sell or serve for less or more than a reasonable price or rate, make it a crime to do either and punish for it accordingly and do not refer it to a commission. Such provisions as this should be a part of the penal code and not treated as amendments to or belonging under the antitrust law. The antitrust law was intended to prevent combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. It goes no further than that. It is entirely illogical and incongruous to add to it a penal provision belonging to and which should be classed with the definitions of and provisions for the punishment of penal offenses. By adding sections 2, 3, and 4 of the Clayton bill to the antitrust law we are going to weaken that law instead of strengthening it. The provisions against discrimination, refusing to sell products, or contracting that a lessee or purchaser shall not deal in the goods of another are essentially criminal statutes defining specific crimes and prescribing punishments for their commission. They do not belong with antitrust legislation and should never be made a part of it. If these provisions are eliminated from the bill, denominated a supplement to existing laws against unlawful restraints of trade, and placed where they belong, as they should be, there would not be enough of beneficial or useful legislation left in the bill to make it worth consideration.

But, sir, there is so much of positive evil in the bill as it came from the House that it should never under any circumstances be allowed to become a law.

It provides for exemption from the provisions of the antitrust law as it now exists, as follows:

> That nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of fraternal, labor, consumers, agricultural, or horticultural organizations, orders, or associations instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit, or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations, orders, or associations from carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, orders, or associations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the antitrust laws.

This is a direct and very serious attack on the Sherman antitrust law, by exempting certain organizations from its effects. These provisions are either vicious or unnecessary. If the organizations exempted are within the prohibitions of the antitrust law and therefore unlawful, they should not be exempted. If they are not, then the exemption is unnecessary. But there is a much graver reason than this why this exemption should not be made. It is class legislation in its worst form. Why should a labor organization be allowed to do an unlawful thing any more than a business organization? There is no reason whatever. Under our system of government all men must be equal before the law. To exempt one class from the effects of a prohibitory law and enforce it against another class is in violation of the fundamental principles of our Government. It is unjust. It is intolerable. And if there is any class of people in this country that should resist the making of class distinctions in our laws it is the laboring class. No class can suffer greater injustice than the laboring class from class legislation.

But, sir, there is no reason for any such distinction in this case. Labor organizations have been fully protected by the courts up to this time where they deserved protection from the effects of the law. Certain well-defined rules which protect labor organizations and laboring men have become thoroughly established by the decided cases, State and Federal. They are rules the justice of which no reasonable or just complaint can be made. I give them as I understand them to be fully established by the decided cases, with the citation of cases supporting them:

1. A conspiracy is a combination to effect an illegal object as an end or means, and a "civil conspiracy" is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish by concerted action an unlawful or oppressive object or a lawful object by unlawful or oppressive means.

Arthur v. Oakes, 63 Fed. Rep., 310.

Mr. President, I submit that these well-established rules of law and equity, now being uniformly upheld and enforced by the courts, afford every protection to labor organizations and all others sought to be favored by this bill that any class of our people have any right to ask. It must be borne in mind that many of the actions and prosecutions which resulted in the establishment of these just and salutary rules did not arise under the antitrust law at all, but under State statutes and the common law. Conspiracies and combinations intended to injure other people or malicious and forcible injury to business or property were not made unlawful by the antitrust law. They were unlawful at common law, and have been defined as crimes in probably every State in the Union. Therefore, to exempt labor or other organizations from prosecutions under the antitrust laws would not reach these questions. They would have been liable to action for damages and criminal prosecutions if no antitrust law had been enacted, and will continue to be if this bill is passed. Indeed, it will be found by an examination of the decided cases that very few of them were founded on a violation of the antitrust law. The antitrust law did not create the crime or offense of conspiracy. It was only intended to apply it to the specific conspiracies or combinations "in restraint of trade" and to punish such conspiracies and dissolve such combinations. Again, an examination of the cases will show that the conspiracies or organizations of labor unions were generally not to restrain trade. The parties concerned in them cared nothing about their effect on trade. The overt acts of intimidation and oppression resorted to in such cases were not, as a rule, directed against trade. Their objects were to secure employment for their members and better wages and conditions. Incidentally and as a result of the acts committed they did in some cases injuriously affect trade, and therefore brought them within the inhibitions of the antitrust law; but that was not the ultimate object of the combinations or conspiracies or the acts done under them. They would, as I have said, have been liable under the general law of conspiracy if the antitrust law had never been passed, and to exempt them from the effects of that law would be of no benefit to them. So, whatever may be the intention of this proposed exemption, it is misleading and delusive.

Mr. President, I have set out in as brief form as possible the rules of law and equity that, as I regard them, fully protect every right of labor organizations and laboring men. I desire now to quote from a few of the decided cases showing upon what principles of right and justice these rules are founded.

In the case of the National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders' Association (169 Fed. Rep., 259, 265), which was an action for relief against an agreement creating a monopoly in restraint of trade, and against public policy. Noyes, judge, in the course of the opinion rendered by the circuit court of appeals, said:

> The direct object or purpose of a combination furnishes the primary test of its legality. It is not every injury inflicted upon third persons in its operation that renders a combination unlawful. It is not enough to establish illegality in an agreement between certain persons to show that it works harm to others. An agreement entered into for the primary purpose of promoting the interests of the parties is not rendered illegal by the fact that it may incidentally injure third persons. Conversely, an agreement entered into for the primary purpose of injuring another is not rendered legal by the fact that it may incidentally benefit the parties. As a general rule it may be stated that, when the chief object of a combination is to injure or oppress third persons, it is a conspiracy; but that when such injury or oppression is merely incidental to the carrying out of a lawful purpose, it is not a conspiracy. Stated in another way: A combination entered into for the real malicious purpose of injuring a third person in his business or property may amount to a conspiracy and furnish a ground of action for the damages sustained, or call for an injunction, even though formed for the ostensible purpose of benefiting its members and actually operating to some extent to their advantage; but a combination without such ulterior oppressive object, entered into merely for the purpose of promoting by lawful means the common interests of its members, is not a conspiracy. A laborer, as well as a builder, trader, or manufacturer, has the right to conduct his affairs in any lawful manner, even though he may thereby injure others. So several laborers and builders may combine for mutual advantage, and, so long as the motive is not malicious, the object not unlawful nor oppressive, and the means neither deceitful nor fraudulent, the result is not a conspiracy, although it may necessarily work injury to other persons.

Mr. President, this brief extract from the opinion discloses clearly the distinction between combinations of laborers for their own benefit and such as are intended to work injury to the business or property of some one else. Shall the Congress of the United States, by an exemption of this kind, change the whole law of conspiracy and relieve any body of men, whether laboring men or any other, from liability for the consequences of their own wrongful acts intended to injure another? But it may be said that it is only intended to exempt them from liability for conspiracies and combinations that are not unlawful. But that would only make the law absurd as well as misleading. Does anyone suppose that the labor leaders who are urging Congress to make this exemption in their behalf understand that it is confined to innocent acts on their part only? I have no doubt laboring men all over the country who are appealing to Senators every day to support this exemption are being grossly deceived as to its effects. If this is the construction to be placed on the bill, it will afford no protection to anybody. No man nor body of men need to be protected from the effects of doing a lawful and innocent thing. The courts, as I have shown, hold that the organization of a labor union for the purpose of benefiting its members is not unlawful. Surely, then, they need no exemption from liability for forming such an organization. Then, sir, what are we proposing to exempt them from? Is it from liability for acts of willful injury to others, force, malicious interference with other people's business, fraud, or the like? Would any Member of this body attempt to justify any such exemption?

Not only the right to organize for their own protection and benefit is accorded to laboring men by the courts, but the right to quit work in a body, to strike, is preserved to them so long as it is not accompanied by violence or other acts that would constitute a violation of law if the antitrust law had never been enacted. Thus in Allis-Chalmers v. Iron Moulders' Union (150 Fed. Rep., 155, 171) it is said:

> The right to strike for any cause or no cause is clear and fully sustained by all authority. Even a conspiracy to strike, followed by legal damage, is not unlawful if formed to better labor conditions. The right of workmen to combine in trades-unions, in order to secure the economic advancement of their members, is also unquestioned; and such unions are generally regarded as beneficial institutions for bettering the conditions of labor and the relations between employer and employed. (Wabash R. R. Co. v. Hannahan (C. C.), 121 Fed., 563.) Whether a threat to strike, or bring about a strike, when made by a number of persons acting in concert, is lawful is an entirely different question. The right to strike being clear, the first question which comes up is, How far may the union and its members go to make the strike effective by preventing the employer from engaging other workmen so that he will eventually be compelled to yield to the demands of the strikers? This is usually the pinch of the situation. Here is the point where two equally clear and valuable constitutional rights come into opposition—the right of the workman to get as much as possible for himself on the best terms and the right of the employer to use his capital and ability as he pleases to secure whatever profit his investment and skill may bring. The legal right involved is single, but asserted by two independent and conflicting interests, and the question is, Which one must yield his right to that of the other, so far as they conflict?
> The general answer to this question is that neither must be permitted to maliciously injure the other without just cause or excuse. A more special answer is that so long as each, in the conflict between them, pursues only his own fair interest or advantage, and not the injury of the other, he is not liable for any injury which is merely incidental. As said by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in the newspaper advertising case (State v. Huegin, 110 Wis., 189; 85 N. W., 1046; 62 L. R. A., 700), stating their conclusion negatively, a combination of persons to do acts to promote their own legitimate interests is not liable for injury which is only the incidental result of such acts, and such a combination is not a conspiracy to inflict malicious injury within section 4466a, Revised Statutes, 1898. In other words, indirect interference by a labor union with the employer's business, not amounting to coercion, by preventing him from getting workmen to carry on his shop, is not unlawful so long as the combination is merely taking measures to secure its own legitimate advantage or economic advancement, although harm may incidentally result to the employers. So long as the betterment of labor conditions is the main object sought, even though the strikers may succeed in persuading all the available laborers to join their union and support the strike, and having thus secured a monopoly of the labor market compel the employer, after long struggle and great loss of profit, to yield to the demands or go out of business, yet such injuries can not be regarded as malicious or such acts as criminal or unlawful.

Will anyone be found to say that this rule or test of liability is not liberal enough in favor of labor organizations? Why, sir, it goes to the very extreme of liberality in their favor. Does any Senator want to go further than that in the way of exempting such organizations from the consequences of their own acts? I sincerely hope not.

In the case of Farmers Loan & Trust Co. against Northern Pacific Railroad Co. (60 Fed Rep., 803, 809), Jenkins, judge, thus stated the duties and responsibilities assumed by the courts in dealing with questions growing out of the relations between capital and labor:

> In the discussion of the important and interesting questions presented by this motion it is not within the province of the court to assume part in the contest between capital and labor, which it is asserted is here involved. It may be that the aggregated power of combined capital is fraught with danger to the Republic. It may be that the aggregated power of combined labor is perilous to the peace of society and to the rights of property. It doubtless is true that in the contest the rights of both have been invaded, and that each has wrongs to be redressed. If danger to the State exists from the combination of either capital or labor, requiring additional restraint or modification of existing laws, it is within the peculiar province of the legislature to determine the necessary remedy, and to declare the general policy of the State touching the relations between capital and labor. With that the judicial power of the Government is not concerned. But it is the duty of the courts to restrain those warring factions, so far as their action may infringe the declared law of the land, that society may not be disrupted or its peace invaded, and that individual and corporate rights may not be infringed. It therefore becomes the duty of the court to inquire whether, in respect of the things complained of, there has been threatened violation of the law of the land, and to determine the appropriate remedy, taking care, however, to apply the remedy without usurpation of jurisdiction, or, as remarked by Lord Chancellor Bacon, "to contain jurisdiction within the ancient merestones without removing the mark"; and having also constantly in mind the maxim that the province of the court is "dicere et non dare legem." In this spirit, as I trust, I proceed to the consideration of the questions involved, taking occasion to express my obligation to counsel, whose able presentation of the law has much relieved the labor of the court, if it could not lighten its responsibility.

If the combination and conspiracy alleged and the acts threatened to be done in pursuance thereof are unlawful, it can not, I think, be successfully denied that restraint by injunction is the appropriate remedy. It may be true that a right of action at law would arise upon consummation of the threatened injury, but manifestly such remedy would be inadequate.

This is a wise and conservative statement of the sentiments that have characterized the conduct of the courts in dealing with this question that presents one of the gravest and most difficult problems with which the legislative and judicial departments of the Government are called upon to deal. In my estimation there has been nothing in the course taken by the courts as a whole of which labor organizations can justly complain. It is to the courts that they must go for the protection of their rights. In the past they have not gone in vain. The courts have shown the greatest desire to preserve and protect the rights and liberties of the laboring classes. As I have shown, this desire has resulted in the establishment of rules that stand between them and wrong and oppression, if only they rely on a just and fair enforcement of the law and do not, as has too often been the case, take the law in their own hands and resort to force and intimidation as a means of redressing their wrongs. This great question will never be settled by force, intimidation, or fraud. Such methods only make the case of the laboring man worse instead of better. Neither can the problem be settled by like methods on the part of capital. Intimidation, tyranny, and oppression on the part of employers of labor are much worse and less to be excused than like methods on the part of employees, and any law that seeks or endeavors to excuse such conduct on the part of either or to exempt them from the consequences of their own unlawful acts will only aggravate the unfortunate conditions that now prevail. There must be mutual forbearance, concessions, and justice or this question will never be rightly settled.

The following language of McPherson, judge, in Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. v. Gee (139 Fed. Rep., 582, 584), as to what constitutes unlawful picketing, is worthy of careful consideration:

> But as to one phase of the case there is no denial, but practically a confession, with the alleged and boasted right to practice it. A system of "pickets," for more than a year, around and near by places to the shops of the company, has been kept up by all the accused and others. The pretense of this picketing is the right to converse with the new employees and persuade them to quit, and the further pretense that they desire to see who are at work. This picketing is done by details of pickets assigned by others, they taking turns. At all hours, when men are going to and from work, morning, noon, and evening, the workmen must go through and by pickets, sometimes two, four, six, and more at a place. At times the paths and walks are obstructed. At times the pickets are near by, making grimaces, and at times acting as if violence were intended, and at times uttering profanity and vulgarity. There is and can be no such thing as peaceful picketing, any more than there can be chaste vulgarity or peaceful mobbing or lawful lynching. When men want to converse or persuade they do not organize a picket line. When they only want to see who are at work they go and see, and then leave, and disturb no one, physically or mentally. But such picketing as is displayed in the case at bar by the evidence does, and is intended to, annoy and intimidate. The argument seems to be that anything short of physical violence is lawful. One man can be intimidated only when knocked down. But the peaceful, law-abiding man can be and is intimidated by gesticulations, by menaces, by being called harsh names, and by being followed or compelled to pass by men known to be unfriendly. Perhaps such a man may not be a bully, but is frail in size and strength, or he may be a timid man; but such a man is just as much entitled to go and come in quiet, without even mental disturbance, as is the man afraid of no one and able with or without weapons to cope with all comers. The frail man, or the man who shuns disturbances, or the timid man, must be protected, and the company has the right to employ such.

Picketing of this kind is only one kind of intimidation that can by no possibility be justified.

The views entertained by the courts as to what constitutes an unlawful conspiracy are further illustrated by the language of the opinion in Arthur v. Oakes (63 Fed. Rep., 310, 321):

> The combinations or conspiracies which the law does not tolerate are of a different character. According to the principles of the common law, a conspiracy on the part of two or more persons, with the intent, by their combined power, to wrong others or to prejudice the rights of the public, is in itself illegal, although nothing be actually done in execution of such conspiracy. This is fundamental in our jurisprudence. So a combination or conspiracy to procure an employee or body of employees to quit service in violation of the contract of service would be unlawful, and in a proper case might be enjoined, if the injury threatened would be irremediable at law. It is one thing for a single individual, or for several individuals each acting upon his own responsibility and not in cooperation with others, to form the purpose of inflicting actual injury upon the property or rights of others. It is quite a different thing in the eye of the law for many persons to combine or conspire together with the intent not simply of asserting their rights or of accomplishing lawful ends by peaceable methods, but of employing their united energies to injure others or the public. An intent upon the part of a single person to injure the rights of others or of the public is not in itself a wrong of which the law will take cognizance, unless some injurious act be done in execution of the unlawful intent. But a combination of two or more persons with such an intent, and under the circumstances that give them when so combined a power to do an injury they would not possess as individuals acting singly, has always been recognized as in itself wrongful and illegal.

Surely no Senator would want to exempt any organization from liability for such a conspiracy as the one alleged in this case to have been entered into.

Mr. President, I cite just one more case bearing on the question. In Martell v. White (185 Mass., 255, 257) this was said:

> It is elemental that the unlawfulness of a conspiracy may be found either in the end sought or the means to be used. If either is unlawful within the meaning of the term as applied to the subject, then the conspiracy it unlawful. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine into the nature of the conspiracy in this case, both as to the object sought and the means used.
> The case presents one phase of a general subject which gravely concerns the interests of the business world and, indeed, those of all organized society, and which in recent years has demanded and received great consideration in the courts and elsewhere. Much remains to be done to clear the atmosphere, but some things at least appear to have been settled, and certainly at this stage of the judicial inquiry it can not be necessary to enter upon a course of reasoning or to cite authorities in support of the proposition that while a person must submit to competition he has the right to be protected from malicious interference with his business. The rule is well stated in Walker v. Cronin (107 Mass., 555, 564) in the following language: "Everyone has a right to enjoy the fruits and advantages of his own enterprise, industry, skill, and credit. He has no right to be protected against competition; but he has a right to be free from malicious and wanton interference, disturbance, or annoyance. If disturbance or loss come as a result of competition, or the exercise of like rights by others, it is damnum absque injuria, unless some superior right by contract or otherwise is interfered with. But if it come from the merely wanton or malicious acts of others, without the justification of competition or the service of any interest or lawful purpose, it then stands upon a different footing."
> In a case like this, where the injury is intentionally inflicted, the crucial question is whether there is justifiable cause for the act. If the injury be inflicted without just cause or excuse, then it is actionable. Bowen, L. J., in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor (23 Q. B. D., 598, 613); Plant v. Woods (176 Mass., 492). The justification must be as broad as the act and must cover not only the motive and the purpose or, in other words, the object sought, but also the means used.

Mr. President, no reasonable and just man, uninfluenced by personal interest or prejudice, can rise from the study of the cases that I have cited, and many others that support the views they express, without a sense of security and satisfaction and a feeling of just pride that our courts, State and National, have dealt with this great question of human rights so fairly and justly and with such patriotic firmness. The weaknesses and frailties of the struggling masses of laboring men and women, whose rights are assailed by the strong and often merciless arm of the greedy and selfish powers of wealth, have been considered and treated with a degree of forbearance, sympathy, and justice that must appeal to every man who loves freedom and liberty and sympathizes with labor in its unequal struggle with capital. Labor organizations need no exemptions from liability under such circumstances. That there have been subservient judges and unjust decisions against labor organizations and laboring men I have no doubt. This is a matter much to be regretted; but such cases, I am persuaded, have been very rare. The decisions of the higher courts of last resort give evidence to my mind of the greatest desire to do ample and exact justice to the laboring classes and a scrupulous observance of their rights. How much better it will be to leave them to the protection now afforded them than to attempt to help them by discriminating between them and other citizens, and thus accentuating the class distinctions that are so evident and increasing the friction that exists between the two. There should be no class divisions or distinctions in this Republic. Any law that recognizes such a distinction or proceeds upon the theory that one class can be protected more than another in the administration or enforcement of the laws of the country is an unpatriotic mistake and little less than a crime.

What the laboring man wants is not exemption from liability for acts that if committed by some one else would be a crime. He wants and should have better wages, shorter hours, better conditions under which to work. He wants justice, not privilege or favor. He wants to be able to live with his wife and children as other men live; and the employers who deny him these rights, that belong to every American citizen, are sowing the wind and will reap the whirlwind. They are sowing the seeds of discord, malice, hatred, and revenge that will endanger their own property and their lives and imperil the free institutions of our country. I warn the Senate against passing any such law as this. It will benefit the workingman not at all. It will widen the breach between capital and labor. It will add to the flames of hatred and malice that have already sacrificed hundreds of lives and millions of dollars' worth of property. It will encourage workingmen to take the law into their own hands and add to the violence and bloodshed that have disgraced the whole Nation and made the workingman's condition worse instead of better. It will be taken as a license to do further violence, whether we intend it as such or not. It will not raise the wages or shorten the hours or better the conditions of a single workingman. It will still further array employers against him and make his lot harder than before. Laboring men are being deceived and deluded into the belief that such a law will benefit them. It is a cruel deception that can bring nothing but disappointment. Employers of labor, in their blind folly, starve the toiling millions of working men, women, and children, to secure to themselves excessive profits and useless wealth. They know not what they do. Their greed and selfishness are endangering the future of their country. It is criminal and unpatriotic. What comfort they would bring to themselves and happiness to others by withholding for themselves a reasonable profit and dividing the balance with their employees. How soon would such a course on the part of men of wealth and capacity to conduct business successfully appease the wrath of the working masses, overcome the malice and hatred that their cruel selfishness has engendered in the breasts of thousands whose toil has made them rich and prosperous but not happy, and restore peace, comfort, and happiness. When, oh, when will the people of this country learn to be just? When will business be conducted honestly and for the common good of mankind? When will business men cease to be predatory robbers under the guise of competition and become humanitarians? As employers become more exacting and oppressive in their treatment of labor, laboring men and labor organizations will become more vicious and more violent in their demands and the enforcement of them. In a late book on Mexico the author has this to say on the subject of capital and labor:

> The demands which have been and are to be made upon capital by the organized labor of the great industrial nations of earth will be more far-reaching in their effect than the simple demands which are being made by the homeless millions in Mexico. The full importance and the enormous significance of the new movement of the world's toilers is underestimated in the great nations which have been able to resist the demands of these toilers, but the day of reckoning is nearer than is generally believed.
> We are coming to the end of the time in which we can longer temporize with the lives of men.
> With the progress of education there has entered into this problem a new phase, which has for its basis the further demand for a division of the product of labor, based partly upon its necessities and having regard to a further factor, namely, the value in result of its product.
> The dissatisfaction of labor has only begun. No longer are the producers of wealth contented with a return which meets their necessities. They have already inaugurated a demand for a larger share in the wealth which they create; such share is to be for the future as unconnected with their necessities as the return which capital itself takes, namely, a portion of what may be called the "divisible surplus" of human production.

And why should they not have their full share of the profits derived from their own toil? If the employers of labor will see that they have, the problem of capital and labor will be solved. If they do not, they will be responsible for the suffering and loss of life and property that must follow.

Mr. President, what Congress should do is to see that the laboring man has his just rights. Nothing else is needed. Can Congress do it? I think it can. But why should the men of capital make it necessary for Congress to do by law what they can and should do as good patriotic American citizens freely and without coercion for their own and the common good?

INJUNCTIONS.

Mr. President, the law and equitable rules relating to restraining orders and injunctions and the practice of the courts in granting injunctive relief have been the growth of centuries. They have served to protect the interests of litigants of every class during all these years. They have been changed and modified by courts of equity when changes have been called for in the just administration of the law and in the public interests. They have been made general and uniform in their application without discrimination in favor of or against any class. It is now proposed by this bill to change the rules of equity in the granting of the important writ of injunction in favor of and in the interest of one class of citizens. The bill is not as serious as it might seem on first reading, but in some respects it is bad in principle, and for that reason should not be passed. It provides that no restraining order shall be granted without notice unless it is clearly shown that the delay caused by giving notice would work irreparable injury. This is not objectionable, but it is unnecessary, as, so far as I know, that is the rule and practice in the courts now. It also requires the giving of security upon the granting of either a restraining order or an interlocutory or temporary injunction. This also is without objection, but, so far as I know, it is the practice of the courts now except in rare and exceptional cases. But there are cases where some discretion in the matter of requiring security should be left to the judge. Sometimes the requirement of security would work a hardship on the complainant and even a denial of justice to the poor litigant. But the great vice of the bill is that it provides a special procedure in cases between employer and employee, and seeks, in dealing with a matter of practice, to settle the grave question of the right of employees to resort to picketing. It provides:

> That no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court of the United States, or a judge or the judges thereof, in any case between an employer and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employees, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving or growing out of a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property or to a property right of the party making the application, for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law; and such property or property right must be described with particularity in the application, which must be in writing and sworn to by the applicant or by his agent or attorney.
> And no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons from terminating any relation of employment or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from attending at or near a house or place where any person resides or works or carries on business or happens to be, for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information or of peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from working; or from ceasing to patronize or to employ any party to such dispute, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do, or from paying or giving to or withholding from any person engaged in such dispute any strike benefits or other moneys or things of value; or from peaceably assembling at any place in a lawful manner and for lawful purposes; or from doing any act or thing which might lawfully be done in the absence of such dispute by any party thereto; nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held unlawful.

Mr. President, the very last clause of the section, "nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held unlawful," is an attempt to determine what kinds of picketing shall not be held by the courts to be unlawful. I think I have shown that the courts have upheld the right of an employee, or any number of employees in a body, to quit work at any time. The right of employees to strike is upheld by the courts as a lawful right on their part. The right to picket, if done peaceably and as a means of persuasion and not of force and intimidation, is no longer questioned. Then why this kind of legislation? It gives laboring men no new rights unless it is intended to legalize force and intimidation, offenses that are actionable both civilly and criminally independently of the antitrust law. If this act covers nothing more than is now secured to organized labor by the decided cases, it is both useless and misleading. If it is intended to extend their privileges beyond that, then it is indefensibly wrong. If it only confirms the law as it is by writing it into a statute, it is deceiving the workingmen, for they are led to believe that they are given new rights and privileges by the bill.

CONTEMPT.

Mr. President, the bill also seeks to change the procedure in cases of contempt. Such legislation has no proper place in a bill of this kind. If such a change is to be made it should be done in the judiciary act. But I can not bring myself to believe that this provision is a wise one, so far as it provides for the trial of contempt cases by jury. Such contempts as are intended to be covered by this provision will arise in courts of equity, where the original action must be tried by the court. In the trial of the contempt charged the original suit must practically be retried. The judge having tried the case and made the order will be better able than anyone else to construe it and determine whether it has been violated or not. There is no conceivable reason, in fairness and justice, why such a charge should be submitted to a jury. By confining it to "cases within the purview of this act" it is made perfectly evident that the purpose is to allow a jury in the case of labor disputes where they are denied in other cases. It is in keeping with other objectionable provisions of the bill designed to discriminate in favor of one class of citizens in the administration of justice. The vice permeates the whole bill. But for this purpose and intent these provisions would have found no place in it. It should be defeated for that reason if there were no other objection to it.

FARMERS NOT ASKING RELIEF.

Mr. President, organizations of consumers, agriculturists, and horticulturists are included in the exemption clause of the bill. They are not asking any privileges or exemptions that are not extended to other citizens. They do not need any such exemptions. If a farmers' organization is violating the just rights of others it has no right to such exemption. If it is not it does not need it. It is an insult to the farmers of the country to suppose that they want any license from Congress to commit any wrong upon their fellow men. If any farmer or farm organization has ever sought or asked for any such law as this it has not been brought to my attention. I am afraid the farmers and horticulturists were included in the provision to give it greater force and strength and to cover up the barefaced attempt to discriminate in favor of one class of citizens only. I am not going to take up time in discussing that feature of the bill.

ADDITIONAL BURDEN ON BUSINESS.

Mr. President, there is another phase of this question that should not be overlooked. The carrying out of the purposes of this proposed legislation will add largely to the expenses of the Government and impose another heavy burden upon the business of the country. The salaries of the trade commission and its secretaries alone amount to $59,000 a year. With the clerks, experts, lawyers, and other subordinates it is authorized to and must employ and the other expenses it must incur will, beyond a doubt, swell the cost of maintaining this commission, which the people must pay, to not less than a quarter of a million dollars a year. But this will not be the worst of it. The examinations, reports, and information that business concerns will have to furnish, if the bill becomes a law, will cost the business of the country millions of dollars a year.

Mr. President, who pays these extra expenses? Who bears the burden of this enormous additional tax on business? Why, the people, the consumers, of course. We complain of the high cost of living and wonder what causes it, while we ourselves are adding millions to it every year by creating expensive commissions and imposing new and additional burdens on the business men who furnish the people's needs. There is but one way for them to recoup their losses, forced upon them by unnecessary laws enacted by Congress. They must charge higher prices for what they sell. The cost of maintaining and carrying on the Government has become enormous. Millions of dollars of this cost is the result of the unfortunate tendency of Congress to create commissions, many of them useless, not a few idle and drawing salaries without rendering services in return, and others doing work that Congress itself should do, without additional expense to the people in the way of salaries and multitudes of extra employees. But my experience and observation here have convinced me that the expense that may be caused by such legislation as this is little thought of. But, sir, if we go on as we are now going, piling up the expenses of government, a day of reckoning will come, and it may not be far away.

Mr. President, I have tried to make a careful and unbiased study of the trust bills constituting the President's program of trust legislation and to express in the same way my own views respecting them. It is most unfortunate that the President, the head of the executive department of the Government, should have a legislative program. It is much more unfortunate that he should force that program upon Congress against its will and should insist, yea, command, not only that these bills be passed, but that they shall be passed now. Members of Congress are protesting against it. I have no kind of doubt that a majority of both branches are opposed to it. Congress is wearied with the continuous labors that have been imposed upon it by the arbitrary and unreasonable will of the President. The country is suffering from business stagnation and depression. Business, honest business, wants to be let alone to work its way out of this condition. Additional legislation will not help it. Business men know that. Every reasonable man knows it. Too much legislation, useless and harmful legislation, has done much to bring about this unfortunate condition. Business men in their despair say, "Pass the trade commission bill and leave the others alone." But this is advanced as a compromise and with the hope of escaping worse things. Business is growing desperate.

The country has been informed that these bills, all of them, will be passed this session. The President has said it, and the majority in Congress has not the moral courage to say no. To what depths of subserviency to a power outside of this Chamber has the Senate of the United States fallen! What a humiliating, what a pitiable spectacle it is! Now, sir, what is it all for? What reason or excuse is there for thus debasing the legislative department of the Government at the will of the Executive? Is there any demand outside of the White House for any such legislation as these bills call for? If there is it is not apparent. Who is likely to be benefited by it? Nobody that this Congress is called upon to aid or protect. Some say it is in aid of free competition, and that untrammeled and fair competition is for the people's good. But what is there in these bills to promote free and fair competition? I maintain, sir, that instead of preserving free and fair competition, its greatest tendency is to destroy all competition and all effort to advance trade. It is bound to put honest men in such fear of the law as to take away all incentive, all energy and effort to advance their own trade at the expense of competitors. It has been very well said that competition is the life of trade; if so, it should be encouraged; but, sir, what is likely to happen if the trade commission is created to sit in judgment upon business with power to look into the inmost secrets of a man's business and to say what he shall do and what he shall not do in the way of competition; with power to say whether the competition he may resort to is fair or unfair, and if unfair to stop it without appeal or redress, and, if he persists, cause the order against him to be enforced by proceeding against him in court? Not only so, but if he competes in a way that this commission concludes to be unfair he becomes a criminal under the law. Does anybody suppose that such a condition of things will unfetter competition? The dishonest tradesman will take his chances and compete as he pleases, leaving the commission to do its worst. The honest, law-abiding man will not compete at all, but take what trade comes to him. This kind of legislation proceeds upon the theory that the business men of the country are a den of thieves. The conditions, burdens, and restraints placed upon business and the humiliating censorship and espionage under which it is placed is shocking to every sense of freedom and liberty. It is almost inconceivable that Congress should consider seriously any such restrictive legislation that must inevitably cripple business and restrain if not wholly destroy competition. Are we losing all sense of the right to individual freedom that we should conceive of such laws as these bills propose?

The dishonest business man should be punished for any wrongs he may commit. Offenses in restraint of trade should be specifically defined so that the law-abiding business man may know what to avoid. But to impose these heavy burdens on innocent business, and place it under the supervision, espionage, and control of a Government commission is the height of injustice.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 48 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 17824) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 689) thereon. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration and passage to-morrow at the first opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 18, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the name of the Lord, our God, in whose keeping we are and by whom we are permitted to enjoy our homes, our country, our religion, and all that makes life dear; make us worthy recipients, O Lord, of all these favors by the perfect rectitude of our behavior, by our devotion and loyalty to Thee, in Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I understood that I was to be recognized to-day to resume consideration of the general dam act. I understand the order of the House is to that effect.

The SPEAKER. The order that was made is this:

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That H. R. 16053 be given a privileged status, to be a continuing order, not to interfere with appropriation bills or Mondays or Wednesdays or pensions.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think that lets me in, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. It looks very much the same way to the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit me to make a few remarks upon the subject——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I think the Adamson dam bill was clearly made a continuing order and given the status of a bill reported by a committee with privilege to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly it.

Mr. MANN. It would be in order undoubtedly to entertain a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But it is also in order to entertain a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, this being Friday. Either motion is in order.

Mr. ADAMSON. The point I make is that under the language of that order of the House I should be recognized to make the motion in lieu of the gentleman from Texas to make his motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has a privileged motion also. Here is what took place at the time the order was made, after considerable colloquy, as disclosed by the RECORD of May 1, 1914:

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire for his own information, to help business along, so we may get away from here some time or other, about how long will it take to discuss this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe if we get a whole day the chairman of the committee could probably dispose of general discussion in a day's time in the Committee of the Whole if he can get it at one time. The purpose of this order, Mr. Speaker, is not to interfere with the general business of the House, but to enable them to take up this bill when the House is not crowded on something else, and for that reason I thought it wiser not to put in pensions—

The reason the gentleman from Alabama said that was because the Chair himself had suggested that pensions ought not to be excluded. Then Mr. UNDERWOOD continued:

although I can assure the gentleman pensions will not be interfered with, because some days there may be an hour or two after pensions are disposed of when this bill could be considered.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, that order clearly makes this a continuing order, with certain exceptions, and war claims is not one of those exceptions.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that if pensions is an exception, war claims must necessarily be, because they stand on exactly the same footing.

Mr. ADAMSON. Therefore there was an express exception made of pensions and not of war claims.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAGGART. In the case of a rule reported by the Committee on Rules making it in order to take up a House joint resolution, I wish to ask if that would not take precedence of any other business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it would under that order. The House has the right to do as it pleases. It can do anything by unanimous consent, and the House after considerable discussion—the Chair has read only a part of it—made this peculiar order:

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That H. R. 16053 be given a privileged status, to be a continuing order, not to interfere with appropriation bills or Mondays or Wednesdays or pensions.

Mr. ADAMSON. Special mention of those enumerated exceptions exclude all other exceptions, and this is a continuing order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will allow me, of course the House made this order, and it is within the power of the House to unmake it. That is not the question involved, however. The question involved here is a question of recognition. The gentleman from Kansas refers to a rule. It is a question whether the Speaker would give recognition to a bill that was ordered up for consideration by the House and had been acted upon, or to a chairman of a committee who proposed to make a new order. It seems to me clear that under ordinary circumstances the only thing that the Speaker can do is to recognize the authority of the House, which is the supreme authority so far as we are concerned, in the matter of recognition. Of course, there might be extraordinary circumstances where the House had made an order and the Speaker would feel justified in recognizing some one else in preference to that order, but under ordinary circumstances it seems to me clear that when the House has entered an order itself, that order should predominate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, of course the House can determine the matter, anyway, by vote.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. MANN. But when these continuing orders are made I think the practice has always been that they come in only ahead of the call of committees, the purpose being that when the House is out of the ordinary privileged business, and the situation arises where the regular order is a call of the committees, then it is in order to go into consideration of the bill that is made a continuing order. Of course, if no one else were demanding recognition ahead of it, it would be in order at any time.

That order as such was not passed by the House. The Journal shows that it was passed by the House, but, as a matter of fact, no such order was presented to the House. The clerks properly reduced the unanimous consent to an order, and so showed it on the Journal. The reason pensions are mentioned was because the next day, when private bills were in order, was pension day, and some gentlemen imagined that this continuing order might be called up very speedily. That was some months ago, I think.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Speaker suggested that we except pensions.

Mr. MANN. That was because the next private-bill day was pension day.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it was stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in explanation of this order that it was not intended to interfere with the regular business of the House. Now, the regular business under the rule to-day is that it is in order for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] to make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House to consider war claims reported by his committee. It was not the purpose of the House to exclude a particular day in order under the rules and that was made clear by the gentleman from Alabama, and it seems to me perfectly clear the gentleman from Texas is entitled to recognition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not like the gentleman to take my name in vain. I am not very much concerned about this; I can not remember everything said in this House, but if the gentleman quotes me I would like him to produce the RECORD to show that he quotes me correctly.

Mr. POU. Unless my hearing is very bad, the Speaker quoted the gentleman, not I, by saying it was not intended to interfere with the regular business of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I stated that the business of the House we did not propose to interfere with was appropriation bills and conference reports, and, as the gentleman from Georgia states, the question of pensions was put in there on the suggestion of the Speaker himself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read it again. This is from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 1. This is at the conclusion of the five-minute interlocutory performance:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe if we get a whole day the chairman of the committee could probably dispose of general discussion in a day's time in the Committee of the Whole if he can get it at one time. The purpose of this order, Mr. Speaker, is not to interfere with the general business of the House, but to enable them to take up this bill when the House is not crowded on something else, and for that reason I thought it wiser not to put in pensions, although I can assure the gentleman pensions will not be interfered with, because some days there may be an hour or two after pensions are disposed of when this bill could be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that H. R. 16053 be given a privileged status, to be the continuing order, not to interfere with appropriation bills on Mondays or Wednesdays, or pensions. The Chair will put that in himself. The Chair does not want to get into a hobble about it. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

But it does seem we got into a hobble, after all. [Laughter.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit an observation, and that is, even if the Speaker had not put in pensions of his own accord, that under the statement of the gentleman from Alabama it is not in order that this order should interfere with pensions; and if it is not in order, that it should interfere with pensions, the gentleman from Texas is in order to make his motion.

The SPEAKER. Now, the House can settle this for itself in short order. Both of these motions are privileged, and the gentleman from Texas rose first and made his motion first——

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think that is the issue. The Speaker is aware both of us were calling for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows. If either of the gentlemen had a preferential motion, the Chair would not care who got up first.

Mr. ADAMSON. We were both up asking recognition.

The SPEAKER. These two motions are exactly on the same footing, and the Chair will put the motion of the gentleman from Texas. Those in favor of the House resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider bills on the Private Calendar will say "aye"; those opposed will say "no."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a division.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the House accordingly resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] will take the chair, unless he has one of these bills.

Mr. SIMS. I have an amendment I want to offer to one of them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], if he has not one of these bills.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am particeps criminis. I have an amendment I wish to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills in order on the Private Calendar, with Mr. SHERLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills in order on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

SNARE & TRIEST CO.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 1369. An act for the relief of the Snare & Triest Co.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under the rules this is war-claims day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk should report bills from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. ALLEN. Are not the bills called up in their order on the Private Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the understanding of the Chair is that to-day is given to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. ALLEN. And those bills have preference?

The CHAIRMAN. They have.

FLORINE A. ALBRIGHT.

The first business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6880) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Florine A. Albright.

The bill was read.

Mr. GREGG Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will report the next bill.

REFERENCE OF BILLS TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was House resolution 451, a resolution referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for findings of fact and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the resolution.

During the reading,

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request for unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas renews his request to dispense with the first reading of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the resolution.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to dispensing with the first reading of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection to dispensing with the first reading of the resolution. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] desire recognition?

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, let us call for the second reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a resolution to refer to the Court of Claims something over 400 bills, I believe, which have been introduced, for the payment of various sums of money, most of them relating to property or stores which were taken by the Union Army and used, many of them for the purpose of building. Some of the bills, however, say "for the destruction of property" where the destruction was clearly an act of war. Some of the bills are for damage to property where the damage was incidental to the use and occupation.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield a minute?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GREGG. I wish to say to the committee if there is any bill that is shown to be for the destruction of property as an act of war, I shall not insist on referring it to the Court of Claims. I recognize that that is not a proper claim.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, some of the bills are for use and occupation of real estate and damage thereto. Now, where that damage is, incidentally, damage connected with the use and occupation, I think it is perfectly proper that such a bill should be referred to the Court of Claims. But where there is use and occupation, and in addition damage to the property in connection with the use and occupation, I can see no reason why that should be referred to the Court of Claims. And I would like to get the attention of the gentleman from Texas in regard to it. Here, for instance, is the bill H. R. 5560, No. 6 in the resolution. It proposes to appropriate a certain sum of money in full compensation for stores and supplies and property appropriated by the United States authorities during or after the close of the Civil War and for use and occupation of real estate and damage thereto. As I say, some of the bills specify use and occupation and incidental damage. But this bill, for instance, proposes to refer to the Court of Claims, among other things, for finding a claim for damages to real estate. That may have been an act of war——

Mr. GREGG. Do you not think that the natural inference of that kind of a bill is for incidental damage where it says for use and occupation and damage? That would be incidental to the use and occupation.

Mr. MANN. Really I did not think so, or I would not have asked the question.

Mr. GREGG. But I think that is the proper construction to put upon it.

Mr. MANN. I do not say the gentleman is in error. I do not know what construction the court may place upon such bills. I think most of the bills heretofore have not been bills of this character.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. Would it not, then, be the province of the court? It seems under the statement of the gentleman that there are some matters in that that would be legitimate. And would it not be a matter for the court in its findings to separate them, instead of having the whole thing going out?

Mr. MANN. Well, the Court of Claims takes the bill referred to it. We make the reference. It does not make any difference what the bill calls for; it is the duty of the Court of Claims to make a finding in regard to it. Of course we say we will not pay the amount that may be found, and yet my experience in the House leads me to say that when you get a finding of the Court of Claims for anything, gentlemen who are interested insist that it has almost the binding effect of a judgment against the Government and ought to be paid. We have gone so far in that direction that I think on this very calendar to-day is a bill to pay a certain claim which was referred to the Court of Claims and which the Court of Claims found was neither a legal nor an equitable claim against the Government. Thereupon we propose—or the committee proposes, at least—to pass the bill to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims, because, forsooth, they found the amount that was in controversy.

Now, if we refer to the Court of Claims and give directions to find the amount of the damage which the Army inflicted in the then enemy's country, they will make the finding, and then some gentleman says we ought to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims. Now, I will ask my friend from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] whether he thinks we ought to enter upon a plan to pay for property which was destroyed or damaged as an incident of the war and not as an incident of the use of the property by the Army?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think we ought, but that has not been the rule, and I would not ask for a violation or enlargement of the rule. But if that is wrong, it seems that there are certain items in that very bill that would be proper, and there are others, perhaps, that might not be. There is nothing in the bill possibly that indicates what those items are. Then would it not be fair to the claimants to allow those matters to go to the Court of Claims, and they can make their findings in separate items, saying that so much was used by soldiers and there was so much to be allowed for damages, and so forth, and then let the House take care of that. I want to say that I have no interest in these special bills; but instead of rejecting the entire bill because they can not segregate the items, I think it would be better to refer the bill to the Court of Claims. I understand from some members of that court that they are pretty well up with war-claim matters. They have disposed of most of the business on the docket.

Mr. MANN. They have enough to keep them busy for some time. But would it not be fairer and equally fair to the claimant to introduce a bill which only relates to the matter where the Government might have liability, instead of introducing a bill that covers those things which the Government ought not to be liable for, and ask the Court of Claims to pass upon all the matters at once?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, the gentleman will recognize the fact that under the previous findings of the court the line of demarcation is sometimes very shadowy between those claims which, under the rule that has been followed, ought to be allowed and those that ought not to be allowed. Why would it not be fairer to get the testimony first?

Mr. MANN. Well, I see no reason why we should send to the Court of Claims a lot of claims for damages where there ought not to be any intention to pay, and one reason for thinking that is that the gentleman from Alabama himself thinks that they ought not to be paid. Now, if you get a finding in the Court of Claims you have a much stronger position for getting a claim paid. There was hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed by the Union forces in the Southern States. I do not know how much it might amount to. At present the sums would be very large, and I am not willing, so far as my power goes, to enter upon the payment of those claims; certainly not to enter upon their payment indirectly.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GREGG. Suppose we read this resolution, and then when we come to one of those bills that the gentleman thinks is objectionable he can move to strike it out, and we can discuss it and

see. I do not want anything included here that it has not been the custom of the committee to authorize and pay.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think that a little discussion at this time might shorten up the operation very much.

Mr. GREGG. I do not know what bills there are mentioned in the resolution that the gentleman thinks are objectionable. I have no idea.

Mr. MANN. Well, I called the gentleman's attention to a particular bill, and there are quite a number of similar bills.

Mr. GREGG. When we reach them, then let us raise the question.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman has his notion about what ought to be done, and I have mine. We do not happen to agree. I would like to find out if I can, however, what the gentleman thinks of the proposition I did submit to the House.

Mr. GREGG. I answered as to the one the gentleman submitted. I think a bill worded that way means incidental damage done through use and occupation. I think that is the proper construction. I think it ought to be sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. Here is one, numbered 7145, for the occupation of and subsequent injury to land. Does the gentleman think that ought to go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. GREGG. I think so.

Mr. MANN. Upon what theory, may I ask?

Mr. GREGG. I think that would be connected with the occupation and subsequent injury. It is awkwardly set out, but I think it means injury connected with the occupation.

Mr. MANN. But it clearly covers a case where the Union forces may have occupied the land and then, as an act of war, torn down the fences or the buildings.

Mr. GREGG. I do not think it is subject to that construction.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is plainly subject to that construction. That is what it says.

Here is another bill, H. R. 12275, for stores and supplies and other property taken by the military forces of the United States and appropriated to the use of the Government or destroyed by said forces during the late Civil War. There is plainly a bill that refers to the Court of Claims a claim for the destruction of property by the Union forces. What does my friend say as to that?

Mr. GREGG. I was trying to find the bill. If we proceed in an orderly way, I think I shall have the bill when it comes up.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am proceeding in an orderly way, and I have the bill.

Mr. GREGG. The gentleman says, "destroyed by said forces during the late Civil War"?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GREGG. Understand that is divided into two subdivisions. That applies to property taken and used by the Government; then to property destroyed by the forces of the Government. When the court passes on that they will find what property was taken and used by the Government and its value; and then, if any was destroyed as an act of war, they will find that separately, and its value; and the custom of the committee has been not to allow anything that was destroyed as an act of war. But if a finding of the court embraces something that ought to be paid, then the committee reports that much, and does not report the portion that ought not to be paid.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am sorry to say that has not always been the practice of the committee.

Mr. GREGG. That is the practice I have tried to observe.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not always succeeded in carrying his theory into effect in actual practice. The practice is, when these claims go to the Court of Claims and they make a finding, as to most of the findings they report the items in an omnibus bill.

Mr. GREGG. I will ask the gentleman this question: In the omnibus bill that I reported this time, is it not a fact that there were only four separate items that entered into that omnibus bill for property destroyed? And is it not a further fact that when my attention was called to those I agreed that they should be eliminated from the bill?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman makes the statement, I do not deny it. I have not criticized the omnibus bill that passed the House, although after it passed the House I discovered a number of claims in it that ought never to have been put in, and claims which, I think, if the gentleman had had his attention called to them would not have gone in.

Mr. GREGG. Did I not myself move to eliminate those that were objectionable?

Mr. MANN. That is true. But while we have among us now such a distinguished gentleman as the gentleman from Texas—and we enjoy his company here—yet neither he nor we may be here when these claims are paid. I have discovered a very different attitude at different times on the part of the Committee on War Claims.

Now, under this form of bill any person who has a claim for property destroyed as an act of war would need only to have a bill introduced to pay him for property appropriated by the United States or destroyed, and then the Court of Claims would make a finding. That is the easiest way in the world to get around the position which Congress has endeavored to take in the main heretofore, that it would not pay for property which was destroyed as an act of war. But under this form of bill there is no way to avoid that going to the Court of Claims, and the gentleman from Texas, as well as I, knows perfectly well that it is the common practice in Congress and elsewhere to denounce the United States Government because it does not pay findings made against it by the Court of Claims.

Well, the Court of Claims does not make findings against the Government, but that is what they say when they talk about it. They denounce the Government because it does not pay the findings. All that the Court of Claims does is to find certain facts. This form of bill, to refer claims to the Court of Claims, will become the common practice hereafter in introducing bills for property destroyed as acts of war. I am not willing to enter upon that course, if I can avoid it. But I do not get very much satisfaction from the gentleman from Texas, whom I understood a while ago to say he was perfectly willing to strike out claims for the destruction of property, but who, when we reach a particular claim, is not so willing.

Mr. GREGG. If the gentleman will show me a bill that is strictly for destruction of property, I will agree that it shall go out.

Mr. GREGG. But where it is a combination, covering some that ought not to go to the court and some that ought, we think the fact that some of it ought not to go to the court should not be allowed to defeat the bill.

Mr. MANN. No one knows whether any part of it ought to go to the court or not. Anybody can draw a bill in the alternative. A man might have a claim that was good and a claim that was bad, and you put it in the alternative. Then it is not necessary to have a good claim at all. Anybody can draw a bill of that kind and have it referred to the Court of Claims. That is the simplest proposition in the world. You say you do not wish it referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. ELDER. I will ask the gentleman, by way of suggestion, would it not solve the difficulty to say:

Provided, That no property destroyed as an act of war shall be included in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I do not think so, because we have not that authority. This is a simple House resolution. We have the authority, under the law, to refer certain bills to the Court of Claims, but when we refer them we can not restrict the court. The Court makes the finding under the law. This is not the law.

Mr. ELDER. It would, at least, call their attention to it, so that they would make a difference.

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference about our calling their attention to it. They would proceed under the law. Under the law the House can refer a bill to the Court of Claims, and the law says what the court shall find. They have to find the facts in relation to the claims in the bill.

Mr. ELDER. If the gentleman's position is correct, then it may be that $100,000 worth of property was taken and used by the Government, and in addition to that a small amount may have been destroyed as an act of war; and because there was a likelihood that the court would find also for the portion that was destroyed as an act of war, that would keep out the much larger amount that was taken and used by the Government. It seems to me we could certainly find some method by which the Court of Claims could pass on what we deem to be entirely legitimate claims.

Mr. MANN. There is a very simple method. It does not require a learned man to know what the method is. All that the gentleman who introduced the bill has to do is to introduce a proper bill. That would not take two seconds' time.

Mr. ELDER. I will suggest to the gentleman that inasmuch as it is too late to do anything else at this present Congress, why can we not amend this?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not amend it. That is the reason why.

Mr. ELDER. That would evidently be a sufficient reason.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman who introduced the bill could introduce a proper bill; and if the committee declined to recommend reference to the Court of Claims of bills carrying payment for destruction or damage to property, gentlemen know that it is very easy to draw a proper bill. The fact is, most of these bills are drawn by claim attorneys, who are trying their utmost, in every way possible, to make new precedents, so that they may have other claims paid which heretofore have been refused payment. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. ELDER. I will admit that what the gentleman says about that is true, and I have no desire to help attorneys who are representing claims of this sort, and trying to make precedents of that sort, but that is no reason why we should not pay claims which are justly owed by the Government.

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. I am not claiming that at all, but that is a reason why we should not refer to the Court of Claims a bill that carries claims which we do not believe we ought to pay. Let them introduce proper bills. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAGGART. I am asking this for information. In making these findings, does the Court of Claims make a finding that certain property was destroyed as an act of war, or will they separate the part that was destroyed incidentally to war from the part that was utilized by the Government?

Mr. MANN. I can not answer what the Court of Claims will do. We have not been in the habit of referring these claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the Court of Claims make a finding on a bill for the destruction of property—not for the taking and using of property, but for the mere destruction? Have they been doing that?

Mr. MANN. It would not make any difference how the Court of Claims made a finding. The first bill on the calendar, that we have just passed over, was a claim that was referred to the Court of Claims long ago. They found the amount, and found that there was nothing due. The claim that we just passed over a moment ago went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and they sustained the finding of the Court of Claims. What did the distinguished committee do? They reported a bill to pay the claim, and inserted as a part of their report the dissenting views of two of the judges of the Court of Claims, which made a finding against the bill; and because the amount was found by the Court of Claims, we are asked to pass a bill paying the finding of the Court of Claims. That is the way these things come in all the time. Whenever you refer any of these to the Court of Claims, if they make a finding of any kind fixing an amount we are apt to pay the amount because it is a finding of the Court of Claims.

Now, here is another bill, H. R. 11721, introduced by my friend from California [Mr. KAHN]. They had a great earthquake and fire out in San Francisco, and the Government went in with its forces to help stop the progress of the fire. They destroyed some property in order to prevent its being burned and in order to save other property. Here is one bill for $6,600, not a very large amount, to pay for the property which the Government destroyed, which, if the Government had not destroyed would have been burned, and which the Government destroyed in order to stop the progress of the fire. Of course the Court of Claims will make a finding on that if it is referred to the Court of Claims, and then all those who had any property at San Francisco so destroyed at that time will want their claims referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GORDON. Certainly; and how are you going to get away from it?

Mr. MANN. And in the end we will be asked to pay the bill. I remember at the time of the Chicago fire the Government went in and blew up buildings and blocks in order to stop the progress of the fire. So far as I know we never got to the point where we had the nerve to ask the Government to pay for the property which was destroyed. Somebody may have come to Congress on that point, but I never heard of it if they did. But the committee report in favor of having this bill go to the Court of Claims and have a finding. Of course the finding will be that the property was worth so much and that it was destroyed by the Government of the United States, and then we will be asked to pay the claim and thousands of other claims like it, probably.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Would it not be a good idea to let these matters go to the Court of Claims, they having been here so long, and have the facts found and reported back to the House, in order that we may know what they are, and then we can eliminate those that ought not to be paid and pay those that ought to be paid?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's question is not fair and hardly worth answering. I have said a number of times that I had no objection to referring to the Court of Claims any claim which had any chance to be appropriated for by the Government. But I would like to know the object of referring to the Court of Claims claims which the gentleman, I, and all the Members of the House think ought not to be paid.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That character of claims, of course, ought not to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. It is that character of claims that I am talking about. Now, here is a claim for property taken for the use of and used by the Federal troops during the War of the Rebellion, and thereafter intentionally and wantonly destroyed by said troops. Upon what basis do we pay for property wantonly destroyed by the troops in the time of war? Yet the committee has practically recommended that such claims be paid, because unless they are to be paid there is no object in referring them to the Court of Claims. There are a large number of bills here for the destruction of property. Here is the bill H. R. 5186, to appropriate a sum of money, $1,000, for property destroyed by the Union soldiers during the Civil War. There is no explanation as to how it was destroyed or why. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas upon what theory that bill is sent to the Court of Claims?

Mr. GREGG. Does it say simply for the destruction of property?

Mr. MANN. I will read the bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William Dorgan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, for property destroyed by the Union soldiers during the Civil War at Cold Spring, Campbell County, Ky.

Mr. GREGG. I will say to the gentleman that when we reach that item, if he will move to strike it out, I will agree with him.

Mr. MANN. Here is another one, H. R. 5547, to pay for corn taken and fences burned by the military forces of the United States during the late Civil War.

Mr. GREGG. Will the gentleman state that again?

Mr. MANN. I will read the bill:

A bill (H. R. 5547) for the relief of the heirs of John Asher, deceased.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,100 to the heirs of John Asher, deceased, late of Clay County, Ky., in payment for corn taken and fencing burned by the military forces of the United States during the late Civil War.

Mr. GREGG. There are two theories on which that claim should be paid. That corn was evidently taken for use.

Mr. MANN. It does not say so.

Mr. GREGG. That is what it means. Of course, you must give a reasonable construction to these matters. The fences, I suppose, were used for fuel. These things ought to be inquired into by the court and ascertained. That bill is all right.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Texas thinks that all these bills are all right.

Mr. GREGG. Well, I did not think that the other one was.

Mr. MANN. Oh, on that I drove the gentleman into a corner.

Mr. ELDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. ELDER. Under what circumstances and in what way would an army burn a fence except for fuel?

Mr. MANN. I can imagine many ways. An army crossing a field might want to burn the fence in order to clear it away, and they might want to destroy the property in the country through which they were going.

Mr. ELDER. If it was a wanton destruction of property, does not the gentleman think it should be paid for?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. That is the very idea and the trouble with the committee. They believe that it ought to be paid for.

Mr. ELDER. I think it ought to be paid for, too.

Mr. MANN. The committee believes that it ought to pay for all damage done.

Mr. ELDER. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. ELDER. Where an officer is in charge, the representative of the Government, and he permits his soldiers to go out and wantonly destroy property of the inhabitants, where it is not an act of war, the Government is entirely responsible for the destruction of that property.

Mr. MANN. That is just it; it is an act of war all the time.

Mr. ELDER. If the gentleman is going to say that it is an act of war, then when they take the corn and use it for the Army that is an act of war, because it is necessary in certain respects. What I call an act of war is where they go through and lay waste the country in order to make the inhabitants less able to fight.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for me to ask a question of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. On the gentleman's theory, what would be the objection to paying for the slaves that were emancipated? That was done as an act of war.

Mr. ELDER. That was personal property, and as they were the property of the people, I think they should have been paid for. I am not here asking you to do it, but, as a matter of law, as a matter of justice, as a matter of right and good conscience, they should have been paid for.

Mr. GORDON. Is there any property that was taken or destroyed that ought not to be paid for?

Mr. ELDER. Yes. I think when Sherman marched to the sea, when he went through and broke the backbone of the Confederacy, that was an act of war and should not be paid for.

Mr. GORDON. When Sherman marched to the sea and burned fences and buildings and destroyed property, that was an act of war?

Mr. ELDER. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. And the gentleman thinks that ought to be paid for?

Mr. ELDER. No.

Mr. GORDON. Then I would like to get the gentleman's definition of an act of war.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio ought not to be too critical as to gentlemen from the Southern States, because they dare not say to their constituents that they are not in favor of paying all these claims.

Mr. ELDER. I would say so if I believed it, but I do not believe it.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman does not believe it. If he believed it and said it, he probably would not stay here long.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Is it not manifest that the gentleman does not expect his side of the House will be sufficiently reinforced to protect the United States against these claims by the time they come back?

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is about as big as the gentleman from Kansas ever grows. I am discussing claims, and the gentleman is seeking to introduce politics. I am perfectly willing to discuss the political question as to what the next House will be, if desired, and the gentleman from Kansas may rest assured that he will be cooling his heels outside or inside of a law office in the State of Kansas when the next House comes here. He has no special interest in these claims, and he will not be here to consider them.

Mr. TAGGART. I am not discussing just exactly what the future will be.

Mr. MANN. Then do not. I do not yield any more on that. I do not want to go into politics on the subject. I never have introduced politics on the subject of claims.

Mr. TAGGART. I just want to ask this question——

Mr. MANN. If it has anything to do with the claim, I will answer it.

Mr. TAGGART. It has.

Mr. MANN. If it is a political question, I do not propose to answer it.

Mr. TAGGART. Is it not a fact that the Court of Claims is simply made use of as a commission to take testimony; that its judgment has no force or validity whatsoever; that its findings are used simply as the basis for appropriations, and nothing more; and the gentleman's idea is to protect it against vexatious business that ultimately would not be appropriated for?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have stated my position many times on the floor of this House, and I will not permit my friend from Kansas to state it for me. When he has had as much experience with these war claims as many other Members of the House have had, he will know more about them, and I think he would be on my side.

Mr. TAGGART. Oh, I will never be on the gentleman's side of the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman will not be in the next House at all.

Mr. TAGGART. I will have plenty of company.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois please inform me whether he has marked those bills which provide for repayment for destruction?

Mr. MANN. I have.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask the question for this reason: Regardless of the personal opinion of Members over here, it is not the intention of the committee to send to the court bills providing for any inquiry where destruction is alleged and if the gentleman has those cases marked, I think we can agree to have them stricken from the resolution.

Mr. MANN. I have not been able to get the gentleman from Texas to agree yet. The gentleman from Texas said that he was in favor of striking one bill from the resolution, but he seeks to defend all of the others that are equally bad. Here is another one, 5564, which proposes to appropriate a certain amount in full compensation for the destruction of the church building of the Mount Zion Methodist Church, burned by the Federal forces during the late War of the Rebellion. Upon what theory is that to be sent to the Court of Claims?

Mr. GREGG. Oh, I think that ought to go out.

Mr. MANN. It ought never to have come in, and that is the reason I am examining the bills. Here is another one which I suppose the gentleman defends:

In full satisfaction of the claim of the deceased against the Government of the United States for supplies and property taken for the use of the Army in the late war, or which may have been seized or destroyed by the Army during the late Civil War.

That is another case where all you have to do to have a claim for destruction inserted in a resolution sending claims to the Court of Claims is to put in a little language about use and occupation, although there may have been no use and occupation. There are a number of other bills to which I shall call attention under the five-minute rule, and I shall ask for a vote on a motion to strike them out.

If gentlemen from the Southern States, who in the main have these claims, want to get payment for property used by the Union forces in the South during the war, I am perfectly willing at all times to help expedite the payment of those claims if they confine themselves to those claims, but if in seeking to get the payment of those claims they endeavor to get payment of claims for property destroyed or damaged by the Army during the Civil War, I shall do all I can to prevent the payment of any of those claims. That is a fair proposition. I have discovered, as many other gentlemen have, that claim agents are constantly endeavoring to make new precedents for the payment of claims, and that when they find a new method of getting claims they seek to have one claim paid, and when that claim is paid they say that there are a lot of others on all fours with that claim that has been paid; that Congress has determined what it will do in that case, and they go through without question.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5560. Jackson, John Y., estate of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, what does the gentleman mean by the paragraph—all of them that were embraced in the Alabama claims?

Mr. MANN. No; simply H. R. 5560, estate of John Y. Jackson.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, strike out, in line 6, the language:
"H. R. 5560. Jackson, John Y., estate of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 12, noes 33.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8746. McMahen, John C., heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This claim includes, among other things, pay for damages to real estate. I do not think that we ought to send to the Court of Claims a claim for damages by the Union Army for real estate. There is nothing to show the damage has any connection with the use and occupation of property. There are a good many bills referred to in this resolution which provide for the payment of incidental damage or for use and occupation and damage, but this separates the damage entirely from the use and occupation, and any damage which may have been under this provision would be required to be considered by the Court of Claims. If gentlemen desire to have bills referred to the Court of Claims, they can introduce bills which do not cover damages by the Army as a military necessity; and I am not willing that bills of this kind shall be sent to the Court of Claims, as is practically the case ordinarily with these bills.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the committee that the Committee on War Claims has not been in favor of allowing claims for destruction of property as an act of war. It has been in favor and is providing for the payment for the use and occupation of property and incidental damage thereto while being used; that is, the damage incident to the use and occupation. Now, this bill provides $2,500 in full compensation for stores and supplies and property appropriated by United States authorities during and after the close of the Civil War. This is admitted to be a proper matter to go to the Court of Claims. It further says for use and occupation of real estate. That is admitted to be a proper matter to go to the court. The only reasonable construction to be put upon that proportion relating to damages is that it is for damages incident to the use and occupation of the property and not its wanton destruction as an act of war. We had in the last omnibus bill—and I want to call the attention of the gentleman to it—we had several findings where the Court of Claims found the value of the use and occupation of the property and the amount of the incidental damage thereto, and then also found that the property was destroyed, and found its value. In every case of that kind the committee allowed only for the value of the use and occupation and for the damages incidental to the use and occupation, and did not allow for the damages done by destruction of the property as an independent matter. That came up in several bills, and if the courts should find in this case that damage was not done as incident to the occupation and use, then the committee will not allow it. It will be found separate by the court, so that Congress can separate the items and only allow such as we have been in the habit of allowing and such as ought to be allowed. Because the bill is a little inartistically worded should not prohibit it going to the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 26.

So the motion was rejected.

H. R. 4575. Parsons, Lewis E., heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the heirs of Lewis E. Parsons, deceased, the sum of $5,000 for the occupation and subsequent injury to his land near Talladega, Ala., by the United States Army, after the close of hostilities of 1865. I do not know that we are under any liability to pay for damage to the property, and therefore I move to strike it out.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the gentleman familiar enough with the findings of the Court of Claims, so as to be able to say whether they would be liable or likely to report this claim in the language of the bill, that this man suffered such damages in the language of the bill, quoting the whole of the bill, and saying that the damage was so much?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the Court of Claims as a rule makes a report in the language of the bill, I will say to the gentleman from New York. They would have to make the findings cover everything that was referred to in the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the chairman whether——

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will permit, I have seen a number of findings, and my recollection is that they itemize their findings, and in a case of that kind they would say "for use and occupation"—I believe that is the language of the bill—and that there is so much damage, and either ignore the other or else find that as a separate item.

Mr. MANN. This bill does not provide for use and occupation; it only provides for a claim for occupation; but I do not know that it makes any difference. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama every finding of the Court of Claims is laid on my table and I look over every one of them. I think if I can get the gentleman from Alabama to do that, that he will favor the motion that I have made to strike them out.

Mr. BURNETT. I did not catch the gentleman's statement——

Mr. MANN. Well, it is not important.

Mr. BURNETT. As to the character of the Court of Claims findings. Was not my statement correct that they usually itemize the findings? I know that is the case with those I have seen.

Mr. MANN. They do to a large extent, undoubtedly; they have to do so.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama, who has the floor, I believe, whether the committee left out any bills to be sent to the Court of Claims for destruction of property during the war, whether it was an act of war or otherwise; whether they left out any of these bills in this omnibus bill reported?

Mr. BURNETT. I am not a member of the committee, and I do not know.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the gentleman from Louisiana whether they left out any of the bills pending before the committee at the date of this resolution?

Mr. ELDER. Providing that they should go to the Court of Claims? Where we knew it was a destruction of property as an act of war we left all that sort of claims out; unintentionally one or two might have gotten through, but it was not our intention to report that sort of claims. Now, there were some claims, I will say to the gentleman from New York, which were mixed. They come in with a claim for a certain amount for property taken, and then add a claim for a certain amount for property destroyed—we might not know whether by an act of war or not; but being in one bill, we sent that bill to the Court of Claims by putting them in this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. It is peculiar to that kind of bills in this selection? That was the uniform practice, was it not?

Mr. ELDER. That was the intentional practice. There may have been one or two that got through unintentionally, where it was property wholly destroyed. The chairman stated a few moments ago he was perfectly willing to cut out all of that class of cases where it was property that was destroyed as an act of war.

Mr. PAYNE. So that if any attorney for a claimant drew a bill that was for destruction of property and nothing else, and still put in the bill, in addition to destruction of property, the use and occupation thereof, the committee very kindly put that in this resolution sending it to the Court of Claims?

Mr. ELDER. No; I do not think that.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman just said if the bill was for the destruction of property, or use and occupation of it, you put it in this resolution.

Mr. ELDER. If it was for both. If it was a mixed claim, we put it in.

Mr. PAYNE. And if the attorney drew it in that way, you put it in here?

Mr. ELDER. That is merely incidental. If there is no certainty as to how the property was destroyed, we did. In my opinion there are some cases where the Government should be responsible for it and should pay for it. Suppose the Government took 10,000 bushels of corn. They took it, and used a part of it, but suppose the Confederates got on their heels and they could not use the corn, and then destroyed it. The property was destroyed and was not used, and yet it was taken at the time with the intention that the Government should use it. It became an act of war later. At the time they took it they took it for the purpose of use, but the man from whom they took it is in no wise responsible for the subsequent acts of the Confederacy that forced the Government into the position where they were compelled to destroy the corn.

Mr. PAYNE. The man was not responsible for it when it was destroyed as an act of war, and still he could not recover for it.

Mr. ELDER. Do you think where they took it from a man, for the purpose of using it, later on under the necessity of war it became their own?

Mr. PAYNE. If it was a necessity of war they should not pay for it.

Mr. ELDER. Suppose that there was no proof that the Government took it, do you mean that I would have to follow that up self, if I had been the one who lost the corn, and prove that the Government used it?

Mr. PAYNE. A man ought to prove his case, of course. You say that all questions of doubt should be resolved in favor of the Government and against the claimant.

Mr. ELDER. It is a rule of law, I will say to my friend, which he knows better than I do, possibly, that the man who has the proof also has the burden on him to produce it. They took the property away, and he was not able to follow it. That man has yet to prove the facts of the case.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to find out the theory on which these claims are being pressed.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. ELDER. If I can.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sure the gentleman can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] has sufficient time in which to answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Would the taking of the corn originally be an act of war?

Mr. ELDER. No; it would not.

Mr. BUTLER. For the use of the Army?

Mr. ELDER. It would depend on what you would call an act of war. I will say to the gentleman as a matter of law the exact status of the thing is judged at the time the Army took it. Now, if they were going through the country and merely destroyed property to get it out of the way so that those people were less able to fight, as was said a moment ago in reference to Sherman's march to the sea, that was an act of war. Suppose they were down here in Virginia and the Army needed the corn that was in a certain bin, and they took it with the intention of using it——

Mr. BUTLER. For the use of the Army?

Mr. ELDER. But they carried it away, and weeks later, before they had time to use it, the Confederates were so close on their heels that in order to keep the Confederates from getting the corn, they would destroy it——

Mr. BUTLER. That would be an act of war?

Mr. ELDER. The time they took it and put it to their own use was the time to judge of the legal status of the corn. The gentleman would put up the hypothesis that if that corn was destroyed then there was no property used if we could prove it was not used. My contention is that the Government is legally responsible for the property if it was used. But if they destroyed it on the ground as an act of war, then it has a different status.

Mr. BUTLER. I see.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARNER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 29.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Now, here is a bill in the proper form to be referred to the Court of Claims. I do not see that it makes any difference now with the present committee whether a man draws a bill in proper form or not, because under the theory of the present committee, if a man introduces a bill covering 100 claims and 99 of them are for the destruction of property and one is for supplies taken and used, the committee thinks all of the claims in the whole bill ought to go to the Court of Claims and a finding had in each case.

This bill is for the payment of a certain amount of money in full compensation for stores and supplies and property taken for the use of and used by the Federal forces. There is a bill that clearly defines its limitations and authorizes the Court of Claims to make a finding on the claim that the property was taken by the Federal forces for the use of the Federal forces and used by the Federal forces. But as long as the committee proposes to send to the Court of Claims any old thing, however bad it may be, if it be connected with language which would indicate a good claim, they have to take the consequences.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 4487. Plowman, George P.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAGE of North Carolina). The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] is again defending the position that if a bad claim be incorporated in the same bill with a good claim, then we ought to take into consideration the payment of both claims and send them to the Court of Claims. If there were no way of dividing the claims, we might send both to the Court of Claims with direction by an act of Congress; but there is a simple method, which any Member of Congress possesses, by which he can divide the bad claim from the good claim or the proper claim and have the proper claim referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a parliamentary question——

Mr. MANN. Certainly——

Mr. BURNETT. Would it be possible to strike out from the bill that part of the bill to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. MANN. It is not possible in this proceeding.

Mr. BURNETT. It would have to be stricken entirely from the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and then the gentleman could introduce a new bill in proper form and ask to have that referred to the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out line 11.

Mr. MANN. That was line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we have passed line 9 and gone to line 11.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 4771. Pruitt, Robert, estate of.

Mr. BURNETT rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire, before we get to the Arkansas items, to move an amendment to one of the Alabama items.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] offers an amendment, which he sends to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph on line 2, page 2.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I will withhold my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out line 2, page 2. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama sends up an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURNETT offers the following: Amend, after line 2, page 2, by adding the following:

"(a) H. R. 16791, Caswell Battles, heirs of; (b) H. R. 16963, Calvin Blevins, heirs of; (c) H. R. 17566, John Wheatinger, heirs of."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I think every one of my bills meets the objection that the gentleman from Illinois has referred to, unless it be the Calvin Blevins bill, and that is for supplies and property appropriated by the United States military forces during the Civil War, and for the use and occupation of house and damage thereto.

It is clearly inferable from that language that it is damage incident to the use and occupation of the house. That is why I asked the gentleman a moment ago the question as to whether it would be permissible at this stage of the resolution to amend the original bills.

I recognize the objection that the gentleman has made, and if these matters are sent to the Court of Claims, matters heretofore barred would not be involved. I think that the language "use and occupation of the house and damage thereto," would be construed to be damage incident to the use and occupation. I would be willing to insert in the bill the language, "as the result of the use and occupation."

Mr. MANN. That could not be done.

Mr. BURNETT. Does not that, in the gentleman's opinion, meet the objection—"use and occupation and damage thereto"?

Mr. MANN. Well, suppose there had been no use or occupation, but there had been damage to the house. Would not the Court of Claims still be required to make a finding?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not think so. I think that would mean damage resulting from the use and occupation.

Mr. MANN. We have a good many bills that we refer to the Court of Claims, where we provide the ascertainment of findings as to the use and occupation and incidental damage, but here is a case where there may be no use and occupation. Of course, if there has been use and occupation, as a matter of fact, probably the damage is only in connection with the use and occupation, but the gentleman from Alabama knows as well as I do that there are some very skillful claim agents in the city of Washington, and——

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will allow me to inject a remark right there, I want to say that not one of my bills has been drawn by a claim agent.

Mr. MANN. I did not say that, but they are always willing to draw bills, and they draw many bills. They usually do not send them to Members of Congress, but they send them to the people who have claims, and those people send the bills to their Members of Congress and the bills get introduced. That is a very common method of doing it.

Now, suppose a man wants to get a finding of the Court of Claims for a house that is destroyed. Well, he thinks that probably he can not get that directly, so he puts in a bill "for use and occupation and damage to the house." The Court of Claims must make a finding, and they must find the damage; and our genial friends, the claim agents, found a very smooth way of getting around what has been heretofore the practice of Congress. In course of time, whether they get the claims paid or not, they will become a frightful bore to Congress; and whether they are paid or not, the very fact that these claims are pending on findings in the Court of Claims has a tendency to prevent the passage of proper bills to pay proper findings.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will permit, I think that if the disjunctive "or" had been used damage might be found without any proof of use and occupation; but I am of the opinion that this bill making it in the conjunctive, for use and occupation of the house, and damage thereto, would mean the damage incident to the use and occupation; and I hope that the amendment will be adopted. I realize that the gentleman's proposition is correct in regard to many of these matters. I think the court will segregate it, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Have these bills been presented to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; but too late to get them into this omnibus resolution. I desire to state to the gentleman that I would not hesitate to withdraw this bill in order to take no chances with the Court of Claims, and in order to give them no unnecessary work, because, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that is a matter we ought to consider. If I thought there would be any other possibility of having this claim considered at this session of Congress, I would not hesitate to withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the date of the latest one of the gentleman's bills?

Mr. BURNETT. June 1 is the latest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All after this resolution was introduced?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12275. Stewart, John E., heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. A moment ago the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], in offering an amendment, stated that his bills had been before the Committee on Claims, which of course was correct.

Mr. BURNETT. I meant that the bills were referred.

Mr. MANN. The bills were introduced and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GREGG. What is it that the gentleman moves to strike out?

Mr. MANN. H. R. 12275.

Mr. GREGG. For one, I am willing to have it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out line 8, page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 11721. Boragni, Peter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. That is the California bill for the destruction of property. I suppose by the military forces, at the time of the fire and earthquake in San Francisco. While it might be very interesting to have an opinion of the Court of Claims on that subject——

Mr. GREGG. Does the gentleman move to strike it out?

Mr. MANN. I have moved to strike it out.

Mr. GREGG. I agree to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out line 14, page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10344. Winter, John G., beneficiaries under the will of.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the paragraph. This bill provides—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay to the beneficiaries under the will of John G. Winter, deceased, the sum of $250,000 for the property known as the Rock Island Paper Mill and other property connected therewith, near Columbus, Ga., which was taken for the use of and used by Federal troops during the War of the Rebellion, and thereafter unnecessarily and wantonly destroyed by said troops.

I do not think we ought to enter upon——

Mr. GREGG. I am willing to let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out lines 17 and 18, page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13783. Hall, William B., heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. This is a bill to pay to the heirs of William B. Hall——

Mr. GREGG. I am willing to have it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out line 7, on page 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 11864. Pea Vine Academy, Walker County, trustees of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out lines 3 and 4, on page 4.

Mr. MANN. House bill 11864 is—

For the occupation, use and destruction of the property of said academy by the United States military forces during the Civil War.

Mr. GREGG. I am willing to let that go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out lines 3 and 4 on page 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 11865. Pea Vine Church, Walker County, trustees of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. It is the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out lines 5 and 6 on page 4.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 2646. De Atley, E., & Co.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the paragraph. That is for property taken and destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let that go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out line 9 on page 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5186. Dorgan, William.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my colleague will wait just a moment. This is a resolution which I introduced, and I may have been unfortunate in the wording of the resolution——

Mr. MANN. I think my colleague was.

Mr. FOSTER. If my colleague will permit this to go over until I have looked at the papers in the case—he may be right about it.

Mr. MANN. My colleague can introduce another bill.

Mr. FOSTER. It will do no harm to pass this over for a few minutes.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to passing it over.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. FOSTER. I have the papers here, but I ask to pass this over for a few minutes until I can examine them.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, line 11, page 4, will be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5547. Asher, John, heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is, in part, to pay for fences burned by the military forces.

Mr. GREGG. Let that go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13792. Ballenger, David, heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for full payment for the destruction of property.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 2980. Morgan, James E., estate of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for property appropriated and destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 2369. Shelby County.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, referring back to line 11, page 4, "H. R. 5186, Dorgan, William," the papers show that to be for the destruction of property. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moved to strike it out, and I am willing to agree that it shall go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the item in line 11, page 4.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12090. Emonet, Michel, heirs or estate of.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, after line 19, insert:
"H. R. 16683. Hernandez, Joseph."

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the reference to the Court of Claims to find the amount of property used by Gen. Banks's army during the war, consisting of cattle slaughtered on his premises and used by the Army; also sheep, hogs, corn, and potatoes, and some horses that were taken for use by Cavalry.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8307. Gardner, George W., heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for property taken and destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. I consent that it shall go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8303. Gladney, Gardner & Co., heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for the same thing—property taken and destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8310. Henderson, Jennie Gaston, sole and only heir of L. B. Gaston.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for rent of a college building and for the destruction of said building by the Federal troops.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8296. Linton, John, estate of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for property taken, used, and destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let that go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8284. Moore, Mary H., estate of.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"H. R. 16525. Moore, Robert, estate of."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this bill was introduced May 13, 1914. It is for supplies taken and not for supplies destroyed during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14182. Sudduth, Flora E. Campbell, administratrix of the estate of Walter L. Campbell.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is a claim for $20,000 worth of property destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 3320. Evergreen Lodge, No. 77, Free and Accepted Masons, of Decatur, trustees of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is a bill for the destruction of property.

Mr. GREGG. That is for destruction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 3318. Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Decatur.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is also a bill for the destruction of property.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 3319. Sageville Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Sageville, Lauderdale County.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6400. County of Barton.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5546. Mount Zion Methodist Church, of Boone County.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for property burned.

Mr. GREGG. That is for destruction. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12499. White, Samuel J.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"H. R. 16946. Whitaker, William W."

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides that the heirs of Whitaker be paid a certain amount—$36,000—in full compensation for property appropriated; and it also provides for damages for use and occupation, but I do not care anything about that.

Mr. GREGG. It has the language "incidental damages" in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8016. Turner, Reuben R., legal representatives of.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 13, strike out the lines just read, lines 13 and 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8017. Bethesda Baptist Church, of Bamberg County.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is a bill for the destruction of a church.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for use and occupation, and the question of destruction would not be considered by the court, because the facts as presented to me were that the church was used, occupied, and destroyed by being knocked down and the lumber used for building a bridge. I will admit that the language used is not the happiest language, but inasmuch as the objection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is to having the court consider a case where destruction is by burning, or where destruction as an act of war is alleged, and as those facts do not exist in this case I hope that he will not insist upon his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the modesty of the gentleman from South Carolina, who is a member of this committee, I believe, and the fact that South Carolina has very few of these nefarious claims in the resolution—the committee has already stricken out two—and especially in view of his statement, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion is withdrawn; and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8018. Beech Branch Baptist Church, of Hampton County.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 17 and 18, just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14529. Ursuline Convent, of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9706. Allen, William, heirs of.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"H. R. 17911. Alley, Henry, estate of."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is for a reference of a claim for $21,519, in full compensation for stores and supplies and property furnished to and taken by the United States military authorities during the Civil War.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9732. Brown, Jesse A., legal representatives of.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 1, insert:
"H. R. 14955. Brown, Robert F., et al.".

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this provides for the reference of a claim for $10,000 in full compensation for stores and supplies and property appropriated by the United States authorities and use and occupation of real estate and damages thereto. I ask for its adoption.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13744. Jackson & Adams, heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is H. R. 13744, for property damaged and destroyed by military forces.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am the author of that bill.

Mr. MANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I remember, this was a firm which owned a sawmill, and the property was used by the Federal troops for a considerable length of time when they occupied Nashville. The mill was actually closed up and it and the surrounding yards were taken possession of and occupied by the Federal troops, and the owners were deprived of its use. Soldiers occupied it for a considerable length of time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can introduce a bill and probably will not delay this payment any for the use and occupation without providing for the destruction. I do not think the gentleman has entirely forgotten in connection with this reference——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My recollection is this claim is more for use and occupation than destruction.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman probably does not know about that; I am sure I do not——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I only know what was stated to me. I know I filed several affidavits in support of the claim with the committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had so many claims in connection with this resolution I am sure no one person could remember all of them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to state to the gentleman that it has always been my uniform practice to require three or four affidavits of loyalty and merit before I introduce a bill of this character, and I am quite sure these affidavits will show that this is more for use and occupation of property than for destruction.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is plainly for destruction of property; that is what it says.

Mr. BRYNS of Tennessee. Well, it is for both; and I will submit to the gentleman that if this goes out of the bill, it will probably be a year before a reference can be secured, and certainly the gentleman does not want to prevent these gentlemen recovering any lawful sum to which they are entitled for use and occupation.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not want to prevent anybody——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am quite sure——

Mr. MANN. From getting any lawful sum, and if it is lawful they will recover anyhow.

Mr. GREGG. Under the rule we have been operating under, I think that ought to go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9726. McHenry, E. B., receiver of the Bank of West Tennessee.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the lines just read, 23 and 24, page 15.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9730. Mosby, Samuel, estate of.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the line just read, page 16, line 10.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8507. Palmore, Frederick W.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, after line 15, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, after line 15, insert:
"H. R. 17557. Parker, James C., deceased, estate of."

Mr. MANN. What is the character of the bill?

Mr. SIMS. It is for the heirs of James C. Parker, deceased, late of Carroll County, Tenn., the sum of $800, in full compensation for stores and supplies and property appropriated by United States authorities during or after the close of the Civil War, and for use and occupation of real estate and damage thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee should read, "Parker, James C., deceased, estate of."

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not so written.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 292. Roth, Frank J.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for property destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 291. Roth, Joseph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. It is identically the same——

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13731. Tynes, A. J., estate of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. The paragraph covers property which may have been seized or destroyed by the Army during the late Civil War.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that this claim was referred to the Court of Claims, as I remember, two or three years ago, but for some reason, not entirely familiar to me, it was not properly referred. The attorney who is representing this claim thought that the bill was not properly drawn and sent me this bill which I have introduced. The attorney lives in Chicago, the city of the gentleman from Illinois. I know the claim is for some considerable amount. I remember——

Mr. MANN. Nearly $23,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My recollection is that Mr. Tynes owned a storehouse in the city of Nashville, and probably several of them.

This property was occupied by the troops for a considerable length of time. I hope the gentleman will let this go in.

Mr. MANN. I think not. We have been striking these all out. Nobody knows what it is. And if we refer this form of bill to the Court of Claims we would soon be lost; and the gentleman would be worse off than I would be, because he would be asked to introduce them. I am sometimes asked to introduce these claims, but I do not remember when I have introduced any. Still, I would if I thought it was a proper claim, probably.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This property was not destroyed in the sense that it was burned, or anything of that sort. I think probably the attorney who drew this bill put that in there simply by way of extra precaution.

Mr. MANN. Very likely he wanted to cover everything and he overstepped the limit. That is not the fault of my friend from Tennessee and not my fault. I do not say that it is anybody's fault. And yet even attorneys in Chicago have to be taught by experience.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8508. Wilson, James E., heirs at law.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"H. R. 13961. Winstead, H. W."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13746. Woods, Yeatman & Co., legal representatives of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is a claim for $1,000,000 for stores and supplies seized and used and incidentally destroyed by the military forces of the United States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not suppose, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I think we want this large claim examined. It ought to be confined within proper limitations.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In view of my want of past success in appealing to the gentleman from Illinois, I do not know that it would do any good to ask him to withdraw his motion.

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say, in justice to this claim, that this company was an exceedingly wealthy one, owning a large amount of iron-ore lands and many furnaces, supply stores, and so forth, in Tennessee.

Mr. MANN. There is a chance for the company to have a day in court, and when we refer such a claim to the Court of Claims it ought to be within proper limitations.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6696. Boiling Fork Baptist Church, of Cowan, trustees of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I think this paragraph is in the bill inadvertently. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this is a case where apparently there has been a finding of the Court of Claims. A bill was introduced to carry that finding into effect. Now, the committee has referred this bill to the Court of Claims for a finding. It is a bill to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims, and I take it it is one of those bills where the committee would decline to include an amount in the omnibus bill, because it is for the destruction of property.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 2030. Missionary Baptist Church of Toone, deacons of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MOON. Which is that?

Mr. MANN. It is H. R. 2030, which is for occupation, injury, and destruction.

Mr. GREGG. The one that I have here does not say destruction. What did the gentleman say was the number?

Mr. MANN. It is H. R. 2030.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 6040. Caughlen, James, heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for compensation for property destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14520. Curtis, Samuel G, and Elizabeth G., heirs at law of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for property used and destroyed by the Federal Army.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 4746. Shelby Lodge, No. 162, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Bristol.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for property burned and destroyed.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9261. Coleman, Mary A.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is such a unique bill that I hope the committee will pardon me if I call attention to what it is.

Mr. GREGG. What bill is that?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will take my statement as to what it says. After I make my statement he will not want it to remain in the resolution. This is for the payment to Mary A. Coleman—in full of all claims for damages sustained by the said Mary A. Coleman and John W. Coleman by reason of the said John W. Coleman being captured by the rebels while in the employment of the United States Government at Bridgeport, W. Va., and placed in prison, thereby losing 11 months' pay, all his working tools of trade and clothing, and while so imprisoned contracting diseases which left him a physical wreck and ended in death.

Mr. BUTLER. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. MANN. From the bill.

Mr. GREGG. I do not know how it got in there.

Mr. MANN. I know how it got in there, in a way, I suppose. The committee may be fairly careful about these resolutions, but, of course, it does not examine very carefully all these bills it proposes to refer to the Court of Claims. But if we start in to pay to every man who was captured by the Confederate forces or to his widow $10,000 it would take quite a bunch of money.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 2211. Collett, A. J., administrator of the estate of Thomas Collett.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is for the payment to A. J. Collett, administrator of the estate of Thomas Collett, deceased, the sum of $6,000 for damages by the military forces of the United States during the late Civil War.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 2212. Corrick, L. D., administrator of the estate of William Corrick.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GREGG. Let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5742. Hart, Elijah M., heirs of.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 21 after line 23, insert:
"H. R. 13520. Hefner, Harvey, heirs of."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment at the instance of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who is necessarily absent from the House to-day. In reading this bill I am not quite sure whether it falls within or without the rule that is apparently unanimously consented to here to-day. The bill is only a few lines long. Let me read it, to see if it comes within the rule. I read:

A bill (H. R. 13520) for the relief of the heirs of Harvey Hefner.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the estate of Harvey Hefner, deceased, of Braxton County, W. Va., the sum of $4,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in payment for a store building, dwelling, and stores and supplies taken from him by and for the use of the Union Army during the years 1861 to 1865, inclusive.

I think it is for the use of buildings, and I think it falls within your rule; and if no one objects, I would like very much to have it go in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12231. James, F. J.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 22, line 1, strike out "12231" and insert "2331."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14007. Reece, J. A., heirs of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. It provides for compensation for the destruction of property by the military forces.

Mr. GREGG. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the resolution.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I move that the resolution be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] moves that the resolution be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8696)——

FLORINE A. ALBRIGHT.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, there was a bill passed over this morning that was at the head of the list. Without objection, I would like to take up the bill H. R. 6880, which was passed over without prejudice this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] asks unanimous consent to return to the bill named, that was passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6880) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Florine A. Albright.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] such time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been read.

Mr. GREGG. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Florine A. Albright the sum of $14,640, in full compensation for stores and supplies taken by the United States Army during the Civil War, and reported by the Court of Claims in Senate Document No. 466, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Lousiana [Mr. ELDER] such of my time as he may need.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] is recognized.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, this claim has been pending in one or the other branch of Congress since 1873, I think. During the Civil War a man by the name of Sterling T. Austin was a large property owner in the South, both in Alabama and in Louisiana and Texas. He took no actual part in the war himself, and in truth was, as is shown by the record, in my opinion and in the opinion of the Congress which sat in 1898, a Union sympathizer. There was taken some $200,000 or $300,000 worth of property from this man in the shape of cotton, mules, corn, and supplies. However, there could be traced to the Government only $59,000 worth of cotton and $14,640 worth of mules, corn, and supplies, which the Government used.

The cotton and the other supplies were for a great many years included in one bill, and that bill would pass the Senate in one Congress, and then it would pass the House in another, but it never passed both House and Senate so as to become a law; and in order to simplify matters the two bills were finally separated, and the claim for $59,000 of cotton was segregated from the rest and in 1898 it became a law, and this amount was paid to the heirs of Sterling T. Austin.

There still remains, under the finding of the Court of Claims, $14,640 worth of mules and other supplies which the Government took from East Carroll Parish, La., and for which it is justly indebted to these people at this time.

There has been only one objection to this bill, and that has been that in its finding the Court of Claims found that Sterling T. Austin was constructively disloyal, for the reason that he lived within the Confederate lines. There never was any finding of fact that he aided the Confederacy in any way. The only charge in that line was that some of his slaves did work on the Confederate breastworks, and that later he himself advised them to run away, which they did.

The record of the case before the Court of Claims treats of the fact that he at heart was a Union sympathizer, and the testimony coming from people of the South who were loyal is to the effect that the record is right. I can not have much sympathy for the claim, but the Government does owe these people this money and should pay it.

Now, this claim was fully discussed and debated in Congress in 1898, in a Republican Congress, and the debate was participated in by Republican leaders such as Mr. Mahon and Mr. Updegraff and Mr. Dalzell and others. The matter was debated thoroughly, and that Republican Congress found that while the Court of Claims had said that this man was constructively disloyal because he lived in the South, yet, as a matter of fact, he was a Union sympathizer. It is a fact that is further shown by this one incident, and a tragic one: And two years after the war, during what was known as the carpetbag reign, this man was appointed postmaster in a little town where practically everyone was loyal to the South. His son was appointed a district judge, and the feeling against these two was evidently very high, because they were both of them killed by the people of this town in one day. The father was killed first, and the son ran out on the street and was shot down a few seconds later. Ever since then his daughters have been pushing their claim before Congress. Unquestionably, while they have received only $59,000, there was some $200,000 or $300,000 worth of property taken and used by the Government. The only trouble is they could only trace the amount that the Court of Claims found.

I would like to take just a moment of the time of the committee to read some of the statements made in the Congress of 1898, which was, of course, a Republican Congress. Speaking of Sterling T. Austin, Mr. Otjen, of Wisconsin, said:

The Court of Claims found that Sterling T. Austin, sr., was constructively disloyal, but that the present claimants were loyal to the Government. They found that Mr. Austin was constructively disloyal, simply because he resided in the territory of the Confederacy. They held that persons residing within the Confederacy were to be presumed to have been disloyal and persons residing within the Union lines were to be presumed to have been loyal.

There were no acts of disloyalty found against him. The only finding of the court was that he might, at the first opportunity, have taken his property and his family and his slaves and gone to the Federal lines. At one time there were six of his slaves impressed into the Confederate service. They worked upon the repair of gunboats at Shreveport, but the evidence shows that after they had worked there a while he advised these slaves to run away and hide in the woods, which they did, and later on went with him to Texas; so there is really no act of disloyalty found against him, excepting that under the provisions of this act he would have to show by positive acts that he had been loyal to the Government.

Now, I will read a statement in that same debate in reference to the killing of these two men by the people in that little town on account of the feeling there was against them. Mr. Updegraff said:

I want to say right here that in 1879 Sterling T. Austin and a son who had reached maturity after the war were killed at Lake Providence, La. The remainder of the family, a mother and two daughters, fled to Massachusetts, where some benevolent gentlemen, whose names I can not now recall, took charge of them and secured them places.

Since that time the mother has died and the eldest daughter has died. There remains now but one member of the family living. Now, I do not intend to go into the circumstances of this massacre. They came to me with the story, and I believed it, and after investigating it to the very bottom I know that, besides Judge Ranney, other men in Massachusetts believed the story and have absolute confidence in it. In fact, there is no earthly doubt about this under the circumstances.

Now, gentlemen, merely because the cotton claim was the only one pushed—they were both introduced in 1873—there was sufficient reason for leaving out this one. At that time there was a doubt as to whether the Government would pay for property that it had taken and used, the proceeds of which were in the Treasury, as is the case with the cotton claims. These people come here with a finding of facts that the Government actually took $14,640 worth of property and used it, and has never paid for it. I think these people should receive their money.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELDER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The court found some disloyalty in the parent of the claimants.

Mr. ELDER. Constructive disloyalty.

Mr. BUTLER. What is constructive disloyalty?

Mr. ELDER. What they call constructive disloyalty——

Mr. BUTLER. About the same relation to loyalty. I suppose, as the old preacher in Maine had to the prohibition law; while he was for prohibition he was against its enforcement. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELDER. Here is the proposition: Of course the people of the South were intensely partisan to the South's cause, and if a man valued his hide it was not the part of wisdom for him to take an open and active stand in favor of the North. The record of the trial of this case before the Court of Claims shows, by the testimony of the Union officers, that this man, Sterling T. Austin, helped the Union soldiers wherever and whenever he could; but the Court of Claims found that because he lived in the South, and because he refused to take part for the Union Army when it would have cost him his life had he done so, that he was constructively disloyal; and it was in the face of that record, and in the face of that finding of constructive disloyalty that the Republican Congress of 1898 found that these people were entitled to that money.

Mr. BUTLER. This case is not new to me. I heard it when I was very young in this House, and got my baptism here, as you might say. I heard it discussed by Mr. Dalzell and Mr. Mahon. I do not remember whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] took part in the discussion or not, but this House concluded at that time that there was no such thing as constructive disloyalty; that a man was either loyal or disloyal, and that it was not necessary to be noisy in order to be loyal.

Mr. ELDER. That is what that Congress decided—that as a matter of fact he was loyal. The Court of Claims admit that on a technicality they find he was disloyal. The House found, as a matter of fact, that he was loyal, and that they would not be bound by the constructive finding of the Court of Claims. If the Court of Claims had come out and said, "As a matter of fact, we find this man was disloyal," that bill would not have passed that Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. I think that was the same session of Congress in which they passed the Methodist Church South bill, in 1898.

Mr. ELDER. I do not recall that. The finding of constructive disloyalty was merely a technical finding, and that particular finding has already been overridden——

Mr. BUTLER. I am satisfied.

Mr. ELDER. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury—to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Florine A. Albright the sum of $14,640, in full compensation for stores and supplies taken by the United States Army during the Civil War, and reported by the Court of Claims in Senate Document No. 466, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

The finding of the Court of Claims was:

1. The claimant herein, Florine A. Albright, is shown to be the only surviving child and heir of Sterling T. Austin, deceased.

2. The court has heretofore found on the evidence in this case that the claimant's decedent, said Sterling T. Austin, deceased, was not loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

3. There was taken from claimant's decedent during the year 1863, from his plantation in Lake Providence, Carroll Parish, La., during his absence therefrom, by the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, for the use of the Army, stores and supplies as above described which, at the time and place of taking, were reasonably worth the sum of $14,640, no part of which appears to have been paid.

4. The claim in this case appears to have been presented to Congress along with a cotton claim filed by said Sterling T. Austin, deceased, in the year 1872, but the further prosecution thereof was at that time abandoned in order to facilitate the speedy determination of said cotton claim. This claim was never presented to any other department of the Government, and nothing further was done toward its prosecution until its subsequent presentation to Congress and reference to this court under the act of March 3, 1887, as set forth in the statement of the case.

Now, here is a claim which somebody claimed to have against the Government in 1872. They claimed to have this claim and another claim that they called a cotton claim. Both being of doubtful validity, even if you grant them that much of a standing, the people who had the claims abandoned one claim if they could get Congress to pay the other. But it is not the first time that a compromise has been made where a man claimed for a lot of different things and then made a compromise by which he got part of the claims paid and abandoned the others.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. This is not the first time that under such conditions people have lost sight of the moral side of a question, and having gotten one claim paid in this way, their attorneys work them up to the point where they think they ought to get the other one paid—it is so easy.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ELDER. Is there anything in the discussion of either case, or in this report, to show there was a compromise, or to show that they finally and definitely abandoned the claim for the corn and mules? Is it not stated in the report that it was only temporarily abandoned? And further, is not there a difference between a claim for cotton where the proceeds are in the Treasury of the United States and for property taken and used by the Government which for a long period of years Congress has refused to pay for?

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman finished his speech?

Mr. ELDER. Temporarily, and I want the gentleman to understand it is not a compromise.

Mr. MANN. I take no exception to it. I did not want to interrupt the gentleman. The cotton claim had this standing: The Government had taken the cotton and sold it and had the money for it.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what we paid for.

Mr. MANN. It had a little better standing than the other, where we just seized the property and had not sold it. In the course of time they managed to work the committee. Now, my friend from Louisiana says that it was not a compromise. I will not say that he said that, for I think he said there was nothing in the report which said that it was a compromise, but here is the finding of the Court of Claims that is in the report:

The claim in this case appears to have been presented to Congress along with a cotton claim filed by said Sterling T. Austin, deceased, in 1872, but the further prosecution thereof was at that time abandoned in order to facilitate the speedy determination of said cotton claim.

Mr. ELDER. Does the gentleman think that indicates a compromise?

Mr. MANN. It almost says that it is a compromise. Here are two claims, and one was abandoned in order to facilitate the other, and it must be by reason of a compromise. They were not related to each other.

Mr. ELDER. If one was clear cut and the other doubtful, would it not hurt the clear-cut one to include the doubtful claim, and would not it be a matter of wisdom to leave out the doubtful claim in order to facilitate the clear-cut claim?

Mr. MANN. These claims were probably not presented in the same bill to Congress, but I do not know about that. They could easily have been, and probably were, if the gentleman who introduced them had good judgment put in two bills, both pending before the committee at the same time, both being urged before the committee, and both being met with the proposition that there was no liability on the part of the Government. And in that spirit which actuates most of the claims committees, where there is a good deal of personal work with the members of the committee, there was a compromise and they abandoned one claim and got the other paid.

Mr. ELDER. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ELDER. If there is justice in a claim, does the gentleman think that Congress should believe in any compromise unless it is absolutely and clearly made, and not where it is a matter of inference, as it is in this case?

Mr. MANN. I do not believe a claim agent ever recognizes any compromise or any reason for abandoning a claim. I think when a person has several claims against the Government or against an individual, all of them contested and disputed, that it is quite legitimate for the parties interested to come to an agreement by which they pay one of the claims and reject the other. That is a common practice throughout the world, very common in this country between all people.

Mr. ELDER. As I understand it, considering the legal feature, we sit here as a sort of a court both of law and of equity. Suppose you go into court and set up a compromise, should it not be construed strictly, and unless specifically set forth, the court would not hold that it was a compromise?

Now, should we, as a court of equity, go further than a court of law does, and say because they did not push the claim in order to get through the other claim that thereby they had abandoned it?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman makes an unfortunate reference to a court of law in this connection. These people had no legal claim against the Government. They were only seeking what they call their equities. Then when they got this claim referred to the Court of Claims the court threw them out. Now here, in the first place, was a compromise by which this claim was to be cut out; then, after that, they got the claim referred to the Court of Claims—and the Court of Claims could not recognize the compromise because that was in Congress—and the Court of Claims rejects their claim; they still come back and want it paid. I suppose they want it paid according to the findings of the Court of Claims, although the court shuts out their claim. The bill says "pay the claim as reported by the Court of Claims." The Court of Claims reported against paying it at all.

Mr. ELDER. Did not the Court of Claims shut out the cotton claim, finding that they were not loyal because they lived in the South? As nobody has a right to sue the Government, are not all claims against the Government matters of equity?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not, and the gentleman is not correct. Anybody who has a legal claim against the Government can sue the Government in the Court of Claims or in any district court of the United States. That has been the law for many, many years. We get the notion here in the House—I do not wonder that the gentleman has it—that people who have legal claims against the Government have a hard time to collect them because we have two committees busy reporting to the House claims which never would have been brought against individuals, and which are only made against a poor old Government; and then because they are sometimes not paid instanter they say that the Government is slow about paying its claims.

Anyone who has a legal claim against the Government of the United States can bring a suit in the Court of Claims or in the district court; and if he gets judgment, judgment is paid as a matter of course. We have just passed the deficiency appropriation bill this week, carrying a large number of judgments against the United States, which were paid in that bill, and not a word was said concerning those claims in the RECORD, because they are paid as a matter of course.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ELDER. I presume the gentleman is simply making a distinction between a court of equity and a court of law. I understand fully that if there is any particular law under which a man can sue he goes into a court of law, but, as a matter of fact, many of the equitable cases which Congress must handle and pass on have greater right in them than those that have the technical right to go to a court of law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not familiar with the law upon the subject. That is the trouble. You can not sue the Government for a tort, because the Government does not authorize its agents to commit injuries; but you can sue the Government on any other kind of a claim, practically, on all claims about which you could bring suit against an individual. You could not sue on any of these claims.

This claim having been compromised, first, having been rejected by the Court of Claims, second, our enthusiastic friends still want it paid. There are claims pending in bills now reported to the House more than a hundred years old. I do not refer to the French spoliation claims. Some of those claims will still be dragging their weary way around the halls of this House when some of the children of the grandchildren of the children of the gentleman from Louisiana are occupying seats on the floor of this House. And they will then be describing the great injustice of the Government because it does not pay some of these hoary-headed old claims that, as a rule, nobody had the gall to present during the lifetime of the generation that lived at the time the claims arose. That is the case with this claim. The generation that was alive when this claim occurred is dead and gone.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The presumption against an old claim is not that it is an old claim, but that it is late in being presented. Would that apply in this case where the claim was put in to show that it was a bona fide claim of property if it were put in in 1873, less than 10 years after the property was taken?

Mr. MANN. The presumption against an old claim is that a man who does not present a claim has got no claim. The presumption is that the ordinary individual, who is not a minor or an insane person, or an idiot, if he has a claim will present it and endeavor to have it paid. This claim was presented in 1872. The gentleman says that that is a presumption in favor of it. No; it was presented before then and abandoned in 1872, because the gentlemen who had it admitted that they had no period standing. They were willing to trade for it any claim they had in order to get another claim paid. The gentleman says that the report does not show any compromise. I read from the finding of the court of claims. Here is the language of my friend from Louisiana himself:

> This claim, as stated in Section IV of the findings of fact above was originally presented to Congress along with a cotton claim filed by the claimant's decedent, Sterling T. Austin, but the prosecution of this claim was abandoned in order to facilitate the speedy determination of the cotton claim.

Now, those claims were not related, except the same people had them against the same Government. Just how the abandoning of one claim would facilitate determination of the other is something I can not understand, unless pending before the same committee some gentleman on the committee said, as we say every day about such things, "If you will abandon one of these claims, we will favor the other." To continue:

> In the cotton claim the Court of Claims found the deceased "constructively" disloyal, in that he lived in the Confederacy and for other reasons hereinafter stated. It is this finding to which the court refers in section 2 above.
> In spite of this finding of the court, Congress paid the cotton claim in the Fifty-fifth Congress (30 Stat. L., 1408). In paying this claim Congress practically reversed the decision of the court on the question of loyalty

Congress has in its broad power the right to appropriate money to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims, or a finding of the Court of Claims, or to pay a judgment or a finding in the face of a judgment or a finding in the Court of Claims, or to pay any amount it pleases for any purpose it pleases. It may not have the constitutional authority, but it has the practical power. I have known a great many claims to be "logged" through Congress, to use a slang expression.

The Committee on Claims generally and at present is composed of men of very high standing, and the same can be said of the Committee on War Claims; but Members of Congress who are constantly appealing to their constituents for favorable consideration, who are constantly asking other people for their support, who are constantly seeking what they consider favors from those who vote for them, are very prone to yield to the persistent influence of some one who has a claim against the Government with its great big Treasury. As a rule, there are very few claimants who do not know somebody somewhere, who does not know somebody in the district of the gentleman on the Committee on War Claims, who has this particular matter under consideration.

> To pay Florine A. Albright the sum of $14,640, in full compensation for stores and supplies taken by the United States Army during the Civil War, and reported by the Court of Claims in Senate Document numbered so and so.

Now, any innocent gentleman reading that would naturally suppose that the Court of Claims had made a finding in favor of the payment of this money. Well, it is directly the reverse. I do not know what the former bill was in the Fifty-fifth Congress. I was new and very green then. I am not very new now, and I may be just as green, but I did not know as much about Government claims matters then as I do now. This kind of a bill does not have any effect on me now until I look up the facts. Now, here is a case where "Mr. Austin in the spring of 1863, procuring a pass through the Federal lines at Natchez, Miss., he went to Georgia for his family."

"During his absence all the movable property on his plantation was, by order of Gen. McPherson, military commander of that district, seized and carried away by the military forces. The levee at Ashton was cut by the Army and his whole plantation submerged. He came back after the water had receded to a scene of desolation and enforced desertion. In consequence of his well-known Union sentiments and the absence of anything like legal protection, a residence among his old neighbors was both unpleasant and unsafe." I am reading from the report, which endeavors to be very favorable to him. "In the autumn of 1863, with his family and his negroes, of which he had a large number, he removed into Texas, remaining in San Antonio until after the close of the war, when he removed to Galveston." This does not say with his family and his slaves, but that is what it means. He may have been a very strong Union man, but the indications are not very favorable from the facts. I have no doubt at this day it would be easy to secure many affidavits; it was many years ago; most anybody who had a claim against the Government who went to the right people could show they were favorable to the Union forces; but here was a case when in the march of the Union Army they found it necessary to flood a plantation, to cut the levees. That was not done for the purpose of destroying this man's property; that was a part of the military operations of the Army, and his property was destroyed as a natural consequence.

Mr. ELDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Some may have been taken—yes.

Mr. ELDER. None of this $14,640 was caused by the cutting of this levee; this was property that was actually taken by the Government, not destroyed.

Mr. MANN. Well, I believe that is a matter in controversy, although I do not raise any question about it one way or the other.

Mr. ELDER. I will just refer the gentleman to the third section of the findings of the Court of Claims. It says:

> There was taken by proper authority, for the use of the Army, stores and supplies as above described, which, at the time and place of taking, were reasonably worth the sum of $14,640.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I suppose I am bound by the findings of the Court of Claims, while my friend from Louisiana is not. I will say I do not always take some of the findings very seriously.

Mr. ELDER. If they do not suit the gentleman, I am sure——

Mr. MANN. I take them more seriously than my friend from Louisiana. I said I was willing to admit that while that was a matter of controversy, in my opinion I did not make any point of it. The claim originally was for a good deal more than $14,000. The whole claim was abandoned in order to get the cotton claim allowed. Now, we passed an act in 1883 that the claims of the successors in interest and legal representatives of Sterling P. Austin, deceased, and so forth, for cotton taken by the military and civil authorities of the United States, or by either of them, during the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, and so forth, be referred to the Court of Claims, with full jurisdiction and power in said court to adjust and settle such claims and to render a judgment in said cause for the net amount realized by the United States from the sale of such cotton, and so forth: Provided, however, That it be shown to the satisfaction of the court that neither Sterling P. Austin, sr., nor any of his surviving representatives, gave any aid or comfort to the late rebellion, but were throughout the war loyal to the Government of the United States.

Now, the Court of Claims did not find that they were loyal to the United States. They found that his representatives were loyal to the United States, but they were not interested. They did not find Mr. Austin was loyal to the United States, but Congress—that was an act of Congress making this reference, not a mere resolution of the House—Congress having referred the claim to the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims having reported against the case, whoever had charge of the claim managed to "log" it through the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know how that was done?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I know how it was done; done the same way as this. They found it very easy to get one claim improperly paid by Congress after the Court of Claims had rejected it; that the same people who had originally compromised and cut this claim had come there and wanted this claim paid in spite of the findings of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman remember that that same session of the same term of Congress we paid the claim of the Methodist Church South and the John Roach claim? Can not the gentleman see now, clearly, how this one went through?

Mr. MANN. Well, the Methodist Church South had a claim out of which one man——

Mr. BUTLER. Got $100,000.

Mr. MANN. Got $100,000 in attorney's fees, when it was stated here to us that there was not an attorney's fee involved. It was not only stated to us, but the man who got the money said he had no contract for it and no claim for it. I believe I voted against it.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood there was no attorney's claim connected with it, and after the passage it developed that some attorney had collected $100,000. It was a long time ago, but I can not quite forget it. My friend, I think, will recall that this was one of a set of claims that went through in the Fifty-fifth Congress. I know that John Roach's claim went through for three or four hundred thousand dollars. He was my life friend and constituent, and I was very anxious to have his claim go through, and I voted for the Methodist Church South, and I presume I voted for this one.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to throw bouquets at myself, but my friend knows that there would have been a lot of claims gone through in the last Congress and in this Congress if I had not been on the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know how the gentleman voted in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that I voted against all these steals, but I did not know enough to fight them. But I know enough to fight them now. I will not say that this is a steal, but I think when a man has had his day in court three times he ought to be satisfied.

Now, on the subject of the compromise. The gentleman from Louisiana states in his report on this bill:

> As stated above, this claim was held back in order that it should not complicate the claim for cotton.

Just how could it complicate the claim for cotton? Both claims were pending, both claims were known, and both claims were before Congress and before the same committee.

Mr. ELDER. If the gentleman will permit me, I think I might suggest a way in which it would complicate matters. It could complicate them just like we had bills here this morning, to which the gentleman was objecting, and, it may be, properly so—and I shall not pass on that at this time—in which some property was actually taken and used by the Government and some destroyed by the Government. Now, there is a decided question about one, and the other question there does not seem to be any doubt about; and yet it was endangering the bill to take on that portion of the property which was destroyed by the Government. That does not mean that some subsequent Congress would not pay the other claim, but it means, as we look at it now, under the precedents we have, that we only pay those claims where the Government received that property. And it looks to me as foolish, if a man has charge of the drawing of a bill, if he should present the claim in that shape; and perhaps these people, after trying for 20 years with both claims together, found out that one was endangering the other and they merely left it out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. If my friend from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] was keeping a store and had an account against one of his customers and should sue his customer for the amount, he could not leave out some of the items and then come in and have another suit on those items that were left out. He has got to present his claim and have it adjudicated, and if he leaves out part of it it is left out for all time. He has no claim left.

Mr. ELDER. It might be said, so far as the laws in my State are concerned, I might have a contract with him for one set of business, and I might have him under a contract for another set of business, and I would not have to include the two if I sued him.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly. He would not need to include the two, but here was a case where both cases were pending. The gentleman from Louisiana writes:

> One claim was held back in order that it should not complicate the other claims.

Now, they were not related. They were both doubtful claims. The committee did not believe either one of them ought to be paid, but they worked on the committee until the committee said, "We will recommend the payment of one of these claims if you will abandon the other," and they abandoned the other. They paid the one. There is no holding; there is no tying down. A man has got a claim against the Government. I have known cases to pass here where it is specifically provided in the bill that the amount paid should be in full for all claims against the Government, and then have known Congress afterwards to pay part of the full claim that was pending at the time. We have done that recently. I believe we passed such a bill not long ago in the House.

Mr. ELDER. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ELDER. If it were done in this case, it certainly ought to be binding on Congress; it ought to settle the matter entirely. But we did not do it in this case. I understand the gentleman, in addition, said the committee passed on them because that was left out. I do not find anything in the RECORD——

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the RECORD——

Mr. ELDER. Or in the debates in 1898——

Mr. MANN. But I have knowledge enough of committees to make that statement advisedly without stating it as a positive fact.

Mr. ELDER. Certainly. This thing was debated for several hours in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and there was no suggestion that the promise was to pay the full amount. It only refers to the cotton claim, and yet that other claim has been pending here at least 26 years. And there was no statement that if the Government paid this they were going to give up the other claim. It shows evidence that these people believed the amount was due them from the Government, because they presented it in the beginning and pushed it here for 20 years.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on War Claims discussed it when it was up before. The gentleman has given the House a part of the discussion. I recognize the distinguished gentlemen whose names were mentioned in that discussion. I do not recall, with due deference to them, any claim of any kind that any of them did not support while they were in Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. This evidently was abandoned at that time, because for the mere asking it could have been tacked on and gone through with the rest of them.

Mr. MANN. The cotton claim was not a good claim. That had been rejected. They slipped that through. Of course, I realize the fact which the gentleman from Louisiana may not fully realize that, as a rule—it is not absolutely true, but as a rule—that when the House is in the Committee of the Whole House to consider claims bills there are very few Members in the Hall except those who have claims pending. And they are wise enough to follow the old maxim that "If we do not hang together, we will hang separately." So, as a rule, they all vote for any claim that is reported, because if they do not they fear they will offend the chairman of the committee, and the chairman of the committee may not press very vigorously a particular claim that a particular Member is interested in when it is reached. I have seen that often. It never bothers me, because I never introduce a claim that I care anything about. If I wanted to have a claim paid that I was very anxious about, I would get some other Member of Congress to introduce it for me, being wise enough in my day and generation to know that one can not be fighting these claims and not receive like payment back. That is the way this other claim went through the House. That is the only way this claim can go through the House. It has no merit. But there are now 32 Members, including the Chairman, in the House. How many members are there on the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. GREGG. There are 15; and the gentleman did not count those in the cloakroom. There are several in the cloakroom.

Mr. LANGLEY. They know that the gentleman from Illinois is speaking.

Mr. MANN. I do not have to count the chasms and sewers of all the streets. [Laughter.] There may be some Members who have claims who are hiding out and who may be brought in in due time. But, even with the 32 that are here, there are 15 members of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did the gentleman count myself?

Mr. MANN. Yes; as one member. I ought to have counted the gentleman from Maryland as two. [Laughter.] And there are 15 members of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are not all here.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I see the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] here, who is a member of the Committee on Pensions and would vote for any bill which has for its purpose the taking of money out of the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Permit me to say——

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], who would nearly vote against any claim or bill that has for its purpose the taking of money out of the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course the gentleman is utterly free from any criticism that might be made of him for voting for matters that would be of benefit to his district.

Mr. MANN. I am; and that can not be said of the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman can not find any instance while I have been here where I have voted in reference to any specific matter in my district.

Mr. LANGLEY. I always try to vote so as to serve the best interests of my district.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky is simply talking hot air. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois is talking hot air or cold air, or both, but I think what he says is decidedly unfair to some Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. I do not think this claim ought to be paid. I had not intended to detain the House in discussing it so long, but, as I suggested awhile ago to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG], as we had given up this day for the consideration of war claims mainly for the purpose of sending bills to the Court of Claims, it might be wise to take up the other resolution which the gentleman has pending, and send further bills to the Court of Claims.

We send these bills to the Court of Claims very freely. Then we include great numbers of the amounts in an omnibus bill, and that goes along. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to proceed further with this discussion; but when we start in to pay claims that have been rejected several times, I think they ought to receive, and I am quite sure they will receive, some considerable discussion before they are passed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the amount involved in this bill? I have heard him say a great deal about this cotton claim, but I have not heard him mention any amount in connection with it.

Mr. BUTLER. Fifty-nine thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. The cotton claim was paid. It was the larger claim.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take up much of the time of the committee, but I would like to state the facts clearly and get them before the House.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] takes the position that there is absolutely no merit in this claim. I realize his value to this House in making fights on claims that he does not consider correct, and I think that for that reason, if for no other, he makes a good Member here.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELDER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTON. In order to get this matter into the RECORD, I would like to ask the gentleman just exactly what the Court of Claims is supposed to decide, and what the Committee on War Claims is to decide? What is the dividing line as to bills that we shall or shall not refer to the Court of Claims for decisions in law?

Mr. ELDER. Well, the Court of Claims, as I understand it, is to make a finding of fact in these matters referred to them; to find out questions of amount and the question of loyalty. Then, being a creature of this body, designed to do work for this body, the Court of Claims report is not binding, but it is merely persuasive; and the House, as it has done on previous occasions, has the right, both legal and moral, to go over the head of the Court of Claims. But the Court of Claims is constituted to take out the bulk of this work from Congress, and then if that court makes a glaring error, and if any Member or any committee can show that, Congress has the perfect right to go over its head and decide the case absolutely on its merits.

Now, I disagree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] concerning this bill. I think he is liable to make a mistake on this claim as in anything else. He makes the statement that there is nothing in this claim. Of course, this claim comes from my district, and my natural instincts are against these people. I will say frankly, because I was born and rocked in the cradle of the South, and as to people who were not loyal to us in our hour of trouble with the rest of the Union naturally there was a great deal of feeling in that country against these people, and I have no sympathy with them to-day.

Yet, now, what would be the gentleman's position? Here was a man of large wealth, who had all his property tied up in that country. The Court of Claims, without a scintilla of evidence showing that he had done a thing favorable to the South, but with the testimony of several Union officers who were with Grant's army at Vicksburg—and Grant stayed not far from this plantation for many months—to various acts of loyalty that this man did, which he could do without being caught by his neighbors, said that because the man lived in the South he was not loyal. They said that in effect. They said that in order to be loyal he should have openly taken the part of the Union Army.

Now, to have done so would have cost him his life and his entire property, because the chances are that if he had taken the part of the Union Army he would have been compelled to go north of the Mason and Dixon line, and in the meantime his entire property would have vanished. Now, you find a man who, according to the testimony of officers in Grant's army, located within a few miles of this place—and several of them were camped near there—was loyal to the Union, and the only one act of disloyalty was that the Confederacy took six of his slaves and made them work at Shreveport, and he advised those slaves to run away, and they did so.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELDER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any evidence of the claimant's disloyalty, except that growing out of the fact that he lived in hostile territory?

Mr. ELDER. None in the world; absolutely not one scintilla of evidence.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact that at the common law a man who lives in hostile territory in time of war is presumed to be hostile?

Mr. ELDER. That raises a presumption, but it is not such a presumption as can not be refuted by evidence.

Mr. GORDON. Well, I do not know about that.

Mr. ELDER. It is generally true, because 99 per cent of the people are loyal to the country in which they live.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not a rule of international law that everybody in a hostile country in times of war is presumed to be hostile?

Mr. ELDER. Naturally they are presumed to be, but it is not such a presumption that it can not be rebutted, and these people have rebutted it.

Mr. QUIN. I want to say, for the information of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], that in my district, where practically every man went out and fought for the South, there were some few who were in sympathy with the Union, who stayed there and did not go out and fight.

Mr. GORDON. They say so now, because they want money out of the Treasury.

Mr. QUIN. No; and there is a stigma attached to any man who did stay there and did not go and fight.

Mr. GORDON. They say that because they want money.

Mr. ELDER. The gentleman can not say that. There were people in the North who did not believe in the position of the North, and who refused to fight in the Union Army, and in the same way there were some in the South; but the chances are that if a man lived in the South he was loyal to the South. If he was wise, he was, and his natural instincts would be that way.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Austin was living on his place and received a pass to go through the Federal lines, did he not?

Mr. ELDER. Yes; over into Georgia. There was a strip of land north and south along the river there that was in possession of the Federal Army. He got a pass to go to Georgia.

Mr. MANN. He went to Mississippi.

Mr. ELDER. Was it Mississippi? I do not remember.

Mr. MANN. And then after that he went to Georgia.

Mr. BUTLER. He went to Texas and then to Georgia.

Mr. MANN. He went through the Federal lines.

Mr. ELDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And then after that he took his slaves and went to Texas. Does the gentleman think that showed a great amount of affection for the Union cause?

Mr. ELDER. What would the gentleman have had him do? Would the gentleman have had him take his slaves up north? He had perhaps thousands and thousands of dollars tied up in slaves that he had bought in good faith. Would the gentleman have had him as a business proposition bring those slaves north, say into Ohio, where all his property, so far as those slaves were concerned, would be dissipated, and leave his other property in Louisiana to be dissipated? Whatever his thoughts and feelings were about the Union, would the gentleman from Illinois have had him do that?

Mr. MANN. I think those gentlemen who stayed down there and took all the advantages of being within the Confederate lines, and none of the disadvantages, and then afterwards claimed all the advantages of being Union sympathizers, and who are not willing to take any of the disadvantages, are asking a great deal.

Mr. ELDER. I might suggest to the gentleman that there were not very many advantages, I presume, in living in the South at that time; that they were practically all disadvantages, on whichever side of the fence a man might have been.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman has just stated that there were advantages in living there at that time.

Mr. ELDER. No.

Mr. MANN. Why did not this man go away, then? He went through the Federal lines. Why did he not stay inside the Union lines?

Mr. ELDER. Anything is an advantage or a disadvantage as compared with something else. It is always relative. It would have been more disadvantageous to have come north and lost his slaves than to go to Texas. He may have gone there thinking perhaps he could save his slaves, save his property, but that did not make him disloyal to the Union.

Mr. BUTLER. The ownership of slaves would not test his loyalty?

Mr. ELDER. Absolutely not, either as a matter of law or a matter of fact.

Mr. BUTLER. Was he not the kind of a man who was catching it going and coming and getting good out of whichever side he could?

Mr. ELDER. No; he was catching the worst of it. He had the ill will of his neighbors who lived there, and he got no protection from the Northern Army, because they were not there to give it. That is about the situation the man was in.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that President Lincoln made known to the South and everybody else that slavery was not the contention of the war?

Mr. ELDER. He certainly did, and only as a later matter did he free the slaves. They were legal property at that time in the eyes of the United States Government. Yet it was a well-known fact that the bringing of slaves into the North was prohibited in certain States, and he could not have brought them there and retained them. Yet you would force him into the position of going away and taking the fortune that he had accumulated in his lifetime into the Northern States to be dissipated. Of course it was dissipated anyhow, but at that time no man could foretell the result of the war; and the Government received the value of this property, and no doubt they would have been glad to pay for the property which they took at that time a much larger price, if they had been compelled to purchase it, because they were at Vicksburg, a long way from the source of their supplies, and they were glad to get anything they could. Now, your own officers, captains and colonels of Grant's army, who were located within 4 or 5 miles of this plantation, testified that this man was loyal to the Union, and there is not one scintilla of evidence in the record before the Court of Claims to show that he was disloyal, except the one fact that he happened to live in the South.

Of course, as the gentleman from Illinois says, this claim may have no merit, but when the Government takes property and uses it it has in the main some basis of credit in equity, and it has a legal status in the fact that the record before the Court of Claims reeks with evidence to show that he was loyal to the Union.

You can not charge it up, as the gentleman has intimated, that there are only a few of us here in this Chamber and that a Democratic House is trying to pass the bill. A much larger claim was passed by a Republican Congress in 1898 for these same people, in the face of the very same findings of fact by the Court of Claims that these people were not loyal.

Another thing; the gentleman refers to this question of compromise. Our people are not supposed to compromise their rights unless specifically so stated. Certainly this great Government of ours, when a man presents an equitable case, should not say on any flimsy pretense that he has compromised his rights. They have done everything else but compromised their rights. They presented the claims in 1872, which they presented in good faith when the evidence could be easily obtained, but owing to the state of feeling throughout the country it was practically impossible to get any such claims through Congress. One year it would be passed by the Senate and the next year by the House, and they whipsawed the claim through Congress after Congress, and it never became a law. In order to facilitate the claim for the cotton the claim for the mules and corn, amounting to $14,640, was dropped from the bill, but through the long pages of debate when the bill finally passed the House and Senate there is no intimation that these people were giving up the claim for the mules and the corn that the Government had taken from them during the war.

Now, I do not think we are going a long way in saying that these people were loyal, when another body of men from the North, every one of them on this committee passing on that claim reported to the House, and the House passed it after several hours' debate. I do not think we are going a long way to override the Court of Claims on the same evidence, the same findings of fact, and neither do I think the Government is going a long way when it pays for property it took and used, and I certainly hope the bill will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—18 ayes and 20 noes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. There is evidently no quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6880, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called; whereupon 198 Members answered to their names, a quorum; and he presented herewith a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6880, the gentleman from Illinois made a motion to strike out the enacting clause, whereupon the point of order of no quorum was made. A quorum has developed, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 42, noes 68.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FLORA E. CAMPBELL SUDDUTH.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return for one minute to House resolution 451, to make an inquiry respecting the bill H. R. 14182.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman is not in order at this time, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. QUIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for one minute. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Illinois who objected to the bill H. R. 14182. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the bill H. R. 14182, for the relief of Flora E. Campbell Sudduth, administratrix of the estate of Walter L. Campbell, was objected to because of the fact that it had in it a claim for destruction of property by the Union Army. It was for the use and occupation of machine shops and warehouses in the city of New Orleans belonging to Mr. Campbell, who was a loyal man to the Union. I want to know whether, if the bill has in it for use and occupation and wear and tear and damage incident to such use, it would be right and proper, according to the idea of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I have made no objection whatever to bills which provided for reference to the Court of Claims of claims for use and occupation, wear and tear, or incidental damages.

Mr. QUIN. That would be all right, then, according to the gentleman's construction?

Mr. MANN. I am speaking for myself only. I have made no objection to anything of that kind.

Mr. QUIN. But the gentleman does object to sending a claim to the Court of Claims for destruction of property by the Army.

Mr. MANN. That is the thing I objected to. It did not appear in that case, but it might have been destroyed as a matter of military necessity, and I do not desire to have bills of that kind referred to the Court of Claims if I can avoid it.

Mr. QUIN. I could not say myself whether it was destroyed in that way or not. I shall have to investigate it.

Mr. MANN. But use and occupation and incidental damages go without question, I think.

Mr. QUIN. I thank the gentleman from Illinois. I shall redraft the bill and leave out the claim for that portion of the claim which resulted from destruction of the property.

NATHANIEL F. CHEAIRS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill for the relief of Nathaniel F. Cheairs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before that bill is reported, I move that the committee take up for consideration House resolution 532.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will proceed with the regular order of the calendar and let us take up the next case, as I have to leave for Tennessee to-morrow, and it is a case in which I am interested.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the motion I make is not open to debate, and I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee it will not do any good to get up the bill unless there is a quorum to pass it, and there is not a quorum here. This is a House resolution, in which I am not interested, to refer a lot of bills to the Court of Claims. If the committee prefers to waste time fooling over something that can not be passed in preference to sending a lot of bills to the Court of Claims, why, I will enjoy the prospect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to call up House resolution 532.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PADGETT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 25.

So the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BURNETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 304. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain saddles and bridles for the use of the national encampment Knights of Pythias to be held at Terre Haute, Ind., in July, 1914.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 532, REFERRING CERTAIN CLAIMS TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 532, referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for findings of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

The Clerk began the reading of the resolution.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the resolution be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Well, it is not so very long, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk proceeded with and concluded the reading of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire recognition?

Mr. GREGG. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a few moments on this proposition. I would like to call attention to one or two propositions involved in this resolution. The committee has recommended an amendment to be inserted in the bill H. R. 1554, to pay to the legal representatives of Paul Noyes some money. The bill was introduced by one of the best Members of the House—I suppose this will be used in his campaign—the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY]. I think I will not detain the committee very long, but this bill presents really a unique feature to Congress. We have been discussing two bills in regard to claims for furnishing supplies to the Union Army during the Civil War, and I believe we have had a bill for the payment of property which was destroyed at the time of the Mexican War. I think the Claims Committee has reported in a bill in reference to some kind of claims following our acquisition of Louisiana or Florida or a treaty in connection with it, but this is the first instance that I recall where it has been seriously proposed that we go back to the days of Valley Forge and pay for supplies taken by the Revolutionary Army or furnished to the Revolutionary Army, but I apprehend that in the course of time we will have some one introduce a bill for supplies furnished to the Pilgrim Fathers when they landed on the rock in Massachusetts. I am not sure whether, as suggested by one gentleman here awhile ago, these supplies have been all consumed yet or whether they are still holding some in Connecticut until they really grow ripe enough for using, but the bill provides for an appropriation of $30,000 to pay the legal representatives or heirs of a claimant originating for military equipment and supplies purchased of and furnished by him for the use of the Continental Army during the War of the Revolution. [Laughter.] Now, of course, the Continental Army, if it took supplies, paid for them in script of some kind. At the end of that war they took a basketful of script to buy a basketful of potatoes, and potatoes were not at high prices.

But this modest and unassuming claimant over in Connecticut wants us to go back and make a precedent for paying for supplies sold to the Continental Army. He is able to get such an able, efficient, and distinguished Member of Congress as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] to father his proposition. Some of the gentlemen here at times have felt quite impatient with me, I know, for calling attention to some of the claims, but I wonder if the most of them will not forgive me for calling attention to this claim which has slipped through the careful and close scrutiny which the Committee on War Claims gives to all of these propositions which have come before the House for action? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14371. Tabb, George Washington, legal representatives of.

The following committee amendment was read:

Insert, after line 7, the following:
"H. R. 1554. Noyes, Paul, legal representative of."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment of the committee to insert the bill and refer it to the Court of Claims that I have just been talking about. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] whether he thinks it would be proper for some one to introduce a bill and have it referred to the Court of Claims for furnishing supplies to our Spanish forefathers when they kept the Turks from overrunning Europe?

Mr. GREGG. When a bill of that kind is before me I will pass on it.

Mr. MANN. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman is asked a rather difficult question, and I do not blame him for not committing himself.

Mr. GREGG. I never cross a bridge until I get to it.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks he has not——

Mr. GREGG. I will say this, that I do not think from the fact of that being an old claim it should be barred. It may be difficult to prove, and I doubt if they can prove it, but if they can do it they ought to be permitted to go into the court and prove it. That is the way I look at it.

Mr. MANN. Then why not let them approve the claims of the ones who kept the Turks out of Europe? We would not have been here if the Turks had gotten Europe.

Mr. GREGG. If that comes up, and there is any probability of proving it, I will believe in giving them the opportunity to go to the court and see if they can prove it. I do not believe in denying anybody a chance in court if he has a prima facie case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the gentleman from Texas. I think he is stating his position correctly—that is does not make any difference how old a claim is his committee will favor it. Even if it is a thousand years old the committee will be in favor of it.

Mr. GREGG. Will the gentleman excuse me a minute if I interrupt him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GREGG. I did not say the committee would be in favor of the bill, but I said as a member of the committee, if they made a prima facie case, I did not care how old it was, simply because the Government has been postponing and putting it off for year after year, I would not care anything about that, but if they can make a prima facie case I think anybody and everybody ought to have the right to go into court and have a hearing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman made the same statement before. The effect of it is that he does not care how old a claim is; he is in favor of paying it if they make the claim.

Mr. GREGG. The gentleman says I am in favor of paying it. I did not say any such thing. I said I was in favor of permitting a man to go into court and establish his claim if he could establish it.

Mr. MANN. There is no object in going into court and establishing a claim unless you expect to pay it after it is established, and the gentleman can not claim that he is in favor of sending these people to the Court of Claims and then, if they establish a case, he is not in favor of paying the claim.

Mr. GREGG. If he establishes his case, I am in favor of paying it.

Mr. MANN. Then what is the gentleman complaining about? That is my statement of what his position is, and I stated it correctly before. It makes no difference how old the claim is, the gentleman from Texas is in favor of paying it. Of course he does not pay a claim until it is established. I think there is a limit to such things. And of all the preposterous things, it seems to me, it is equal to the most preposterous for us now to talk about paying claims which never were made before for supplies furnished to the Continental Army. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 5590. Simes, Squire.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the line. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that this is for property taken and destroyed under the bill H. R. 5590.

Mr. GREGG. Under the rule we have been operating on, that ought to go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will be agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15255. Cassville Female College, Cassville, trustees of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is H. R. 15255, for the destruction of——

Mr. GREGG. Let that go out, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15263. New Hope Baptist Church, of Bartow County.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This is "for use and destruction."

Mr. GREGG. Let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISSOURI.

H. R. 13941. Morrison, William, estate of.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 4, after line 7, insert the following:

"NEBRASKA.

"H. R. 5037. Rouse, Charles G."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15810. Dominy, Ezra.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, after line 21, insert:
"H. R. 15811. Cuffman, D. W., administrator of the estate of Josephus Cuffman, deceased."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is for reference of a bill in the sum of $1,000. The bill reads as follows:

In full compensation for stores, supplies, and property appropriated by the United States authorities during the Civil War.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15644. Poe, Samuel P.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 2, insert:
"H. R. 16767. Powers, Arthur A. and R. P."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is for the reference of a bill in the sum of $1,000. The bill reads as follows:

In full compensation for horses and supplies taken and used by the Federal troops during the Civil War.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amended was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after the line just inserted, insert:
"H. R. 14904. Stothard, Jerry, estate of."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is a reference of a bill in the sum of $1,000. The bill reads as follows:

In full compensation for horses and hogs taken and used by Federal troops during the Civil War.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12701. Foster, Seth, et al.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I am sure this bill was inadvertently included. This is to pay the value of a ship captured by the naval forces of the United States. I am very sure no one wants to start in to do that.

Mr. GREGG. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. This is to pay the value of a ship captured by the naval forces of the United States during the war.

Mr. GREGG. I have no objection to that going out. I did not notice it.

Mr. MANN. I think that went in inadvertently.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to strike out the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12487. Mix, Charles N., legal representatives of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph. This is for the destruction of property.

Mr. GREGG. Very well; let it go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if there is nothing to go in under the heading of "Virginia," I ask to have the word "Virginia" stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word "Virginia" will be stricken out.

There was no objection.

The Clerk completed the reading of the resolution.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I move that the resolution be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the several resolutions and bill favorably.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration House resolution 451, House bill 6880, and House resolution 532, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and, as amended, that the resolutions and bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 451, referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House resolution 532 be taken up next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take up House resolution 532, reported from the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 532, referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Has the resolution been disposed of, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 655, an act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Assiniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MCKELLAR, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence until Monday, on account of death in the family.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1914.

TO THE HONORABLE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Respectfully,

WM. L. IGOE.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same.

H. R. 1694. An act to amend an act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to set apart certain tracts of land in the State of California as forest reservations"; and

H. J. Res. 304. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain saddles and bridles for the use of the national encampment, Knights of Pythias, to be held at Terre Haute, Ind., in July, 1914.

ELIZABETH B. BUCKINGHAM.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter addressed to Mr. Charles S. Hamlin, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Who wrote the letter?

Mr. BRYAN. The letter is signed by Elizabeth B. Buckingham.

The SPEAKER. About what?

Mr. BRYAN. The matter involved is the demotion of a clerk down here in the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent to print a letter from Miss Buckingham to Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Hamlin. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Reserving the right to object, is not that a pretty small matter?

Mr. BRYAN. No; I am sure that if the gentleman will read the letter, he will see that it is a very important matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. COX. Regular order!

Mr. DONOVAN. Is it not a small matter?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JULY 17, 1914.

Mr. CHARLES S. HAMLIN,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

MY DEAR MR. HAMLIN: Until yesterday the 16th I was an employee of the Government in the Treasury Department under the Auditor for the Post Office Department. I entered the service in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in 1888. Since that time my record for efficiency and accuracy may be found on file in the Government archives. For 14 years I have been under the Auditor for the Post Office Department, and my record in that department may be found in your office and is subject to your inspection.

I have never had any trouble of any kind with any superior concerning my work for the Government. I have never had trouble with any associates in the department. I have never been on the carpet or been subjected to reproof, so far as I know or can recall to mind. My record for efficiency, so far as I know, has been perfect. I have always believed I was fully discharging my duties at any post to which I have been assigned.

I have never been to any Member of Congress or to anyone else with complaints against the management of my superiors, nor have I ever attempted to make trouble for the auditor of the organization.

While in the regular discharge of my duties as examiner assigned temporarily to a tabulating machine I learned on yesterday morning that I was likely to be reassigned, and that a document was likely to be submitted to me to be signed. I went to Mr. Buckley and asked him if I should sign any documents, and he told me if I did not sign that I would become involved for insubordination. A little later there was submitted to me a document to sign. I do not know what it was that I signed, and I did not intend by such signature to waive any of my rights in the premises, but signed because I thought I had no right to refuse to do so. I was then handed a document, which reads as follows:

JULY 3, 1914.

Miss ELIZA B. BUCKINGHAM,
Clerk, $1,200 per annum,
Office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department.

MADAM: By direction of the Secretary, you are hereby reduced, transferred, and appointed a clerk, Class D, in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with compensation at the rate of $900 per annum, the appointment to take effect on date of oath.

Respectfully,

B. P. NEWTON, Assistant Secretary.

Oath: July 16, 1914.

And the following letter of introduction:

JULY 16, 1914.

The CHIEF CLERK INTERNAL-REVENUE BUREAU,
Treasury Department.

SIR: This will introduce to you Miss Eliza B. Buckingham, who is transferred to your office, effective to-day. She has taken the required oath and now reports for assignment to duty.

Respectfully,

CHARLES S. KRAM,
Auditor for the Post Office Department.

By this I was notified that I had been demoted from a clerkship at a salary of $1,200 per annum to a clerkship class D at $900 per annum. Against this action I most vigorously protest. After this long and faithful service, while I am still absolutely efficient, without any charge or claim of inefficiency, yet a young woman, there can not be any possible excuse or justice in my being thus demoted and deprived of my rating earned after faithful service.

No notice whatever has been served upon me except as herein stated, and I respectfully demand that I be reinstated immediately at my former rating and salary and that an investigation be had as to any charges against me or any ground for my demotion or for a reduction of my salary, and that due notice be given me of any such proceedings.

Respectfully, ELIZABETH B. BUCKINGHAM.

NEBRASKA STATE PRESS ASSOCIATION REPORT ON TAXATION.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the report of a special committee of the Nebraska State Press Association on taxation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the report of a special committee of the Nebraska State Press Association on taxation. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I will suggest that gentlemen get into the habit of walking down in front and whispering to the Speaker, and those in the House who are behind them can not hear them.

Mr. BAILEY. I have come down here because my voice is weak.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman's voice is strong enough——

Mr. BAILEY. Modesty, perhaps.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the gentleman wants to print something from a press association?

Mr. BAILEY. The report of a special committee of the Nebraska State Press Association.

Mr. MANN. They have more opportunities to print than anybody else in the world.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Nebraska newspapers do not circulate all over the world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, July 18, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 18, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we look to Thee as the Lord of heaven and earth and as the God of nations. Thou hast dealt bountifully with us as a Nation. Thou hast filled our storehouses, enlarged our commerce, multiplied our facilities, and blessed our homes. In wealth, and influence, and liberty, and power, and rapid progress Thou hast permitted us to become a mighty people. Grant that we may recognize Thy hand and follow Thy leadings. May we be faithful subjects of Thy kingdom. Lead Thou our leaders. Bless us in our national and international relations, and help us to master our problems for the honor of Thy name and for the accomplishment of Thy purposes. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and was interrupted by Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present impression of the Chair is that under the precedents of the Senate such a request is not in order. A Senator can not interrupt a roll call when once begun, and therefore the request can not be entertained.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the calling of the roll, the following Senators having answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Nelson	Sterling
Brady	Gronna	Norris	Stone
Brandegee	Hollis	Overman	Thompson
Bristow	Hughes	Page	Thornton
Bryan	Kenyon	Perkins	Tillman
Burton	Kern	Ransdell	Vardaman
Camden	Lane	Reed	Walsh
Catron	McLean	Sheppard	Warren
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Simmons	White
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.	Works
Crawford	Myers	Smoot

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll call discloses that less than a quorum have answered to their names. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. THOMAS and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and also the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to announce that my colleague, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum of the Senate present.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to notify absent Senators to attend the session.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. ROOT, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. LEA of Tennessee entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the order directing the Sergeant at Arms to notify absent Senators that their presence is requested be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 304) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain saddles and bridles for the use of the national encampment, Knights of Pythias, to be held at Terre Haute, Ind., in July, 1914, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented memorials of sundry citizens of Texas, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a petition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the University Methodist Episcopal Church, of Salina, Kans., and a petition of sundry citizens of Norton, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WORKS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Chino and Los Angeles, in the State of California, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROOT presented memorials of sundry citizens of New York, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWCASTLE, IND.

Mr. KERN. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11317) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Newcastle, Ind. The bill proposes to increase the limit of cost of the post-office building by $15,000. It is found that the building can not be constructed under the present limit. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CATRON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1151) to remedy in the line of the Army the inequalities in rank due to the past system of regimental promotion, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 690) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1985) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Capt. Daniel H. Powers, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 693) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) to authorize the appointment of Charles August Meyer as a cadet at the United States Military Academy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 691) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) to authorize the appointment of Clifford Hildebrandt Tate as a cadet at the United States Military Academy, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 692) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 6126) to increase the compensation of the janitor of the Federal building at Topeka, Kans.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 6127) granting a pension to Maria C. Haney (with accompanying papers), and

A bill (S. 6128) granting a pension to Samuel H. Fisher (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 6129) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Klippert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

A bill (S. 6130) granting a pension to Frank D. Brown (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

UNEXPENDED BALANCES OF RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BURTON. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 426) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested and directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the balances remaining unexpended on June 30, 1914, to the credit of the respective river and harbor projects of the country now under improvement.

Mr. SIMMONS. My attention was diverted. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio what is the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. BURTON. It is a request for a statement of the balances remaining unexpended to the credit of the respective river and harbor projects at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider a resolution which I introduced this morning, and which was passed, calling upon the Secretary of War for certain information. I move that the resolution be reconsidered; that when reconsidered it be amended by adding the words "and available" after the word "unexpended," and that when so amended it be readopted.

I ask unanimous consent to that effect.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the request? I should like to know what it is.

Mr. BURTON. I submitted a resolution this morning calling on the Secretary of War——

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, it is a resolution that has been passed?

Mr. BURTON. A resolution that was passed this morning. It calls on the Secretary of War for information as to the amount of money on hand to the credit of the respective river and harbor projects. I used the word "unexpended." In the form in which they keep their accounts they have two sets of figures, one of them unexpended, which may include provision for bills audited and which should be paid, and the other that which is unexpended and available.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection.

Mr. BURTON. The words "and available" ought to go in after "unexpended."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the vote whereby Senate resolution 426 was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. I understand that the resolution has already been forwarded to the Secretary of War. I ask unanimous consent that it may be recalled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be recalled from the Secretary of War. The vote by which the resolution was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Senator from Ohio moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "unexpended" it is proposed to insert the words "and available."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GEN. ANSON MILLS.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings a letter written to me by Gen. Anson Mills, United States Army, together with a copy of the War Department's record of Gen. Mills. This is in the nature of a statement of his case consequent upon a speech which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] made some weeks ago. I have shown this letter to the Senator from Colorado, and he is of the opinion with me that it is an act of justice to permit this officer's own statement to appear in the RECORD, which contains the speech of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York submits a request that the letter referred to by him be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROOT. That order includes the copy of the record which is annexed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It includes the entire request made by the Senator from New York.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO,
AMERICAN SECTION,
2 Dupont Circle, Washington, D. C., June 25, 1914.

The Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
United States Senate.

SIR: My attention has been called to a speech of Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, delivered in the United States Senate, Monday and Tuesday, March 23 and 24 last.

Senator THOMAS attacks the entire course of the United States Government for the last quarter of a century with respect to an important question of public policy—the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande—but because of the manner and terms in which he questions the motives and impeaches the integrity of those officers of the Government who participated in the policy which the Senator deems to have been mistaken, which means practically all officers of the Government who have had anything to do with the matter in question. A Secretary of State and an Attorney General by name, other Cabinet officers, Senators, Congressmen, and Presidents by necessary implication, Republicans and Democrats, the living and the dead, alike are condemned. The exceptions prove the rule. The late Secreary of War, Mr. Lamont, escapes with his character at the expense of his "intelligence" (RECORD, p. 5343) or his attention to business; and the Reclamation Bureau, while conceded "integrity of purpose," should, in the opinion of the Senator, "be dismantled and its officials put into a lunatic asylum." (RECORD, p. 5352.)

Such being the Senator's opinion of the officers of the Government, their works naturally fare no better at his hands. The treaty of 1906 between the United States and Mexico for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, negotiated while you, Senator, were Secretary of State of the United States, and signed by you as the plenipotentiary of our Government and duly ratified by the President by and with the advice and consent of the United States Senate, is termed a "disgraceful treaty" (RECORD, p. 5351) "whose history is a scandal and a shame" (RECORD, p. 5352); "conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity" (RECORD, p. 5347), "a huge speculative enterprise conceived by greed and fostered by governmental agencies" (RECORD, p. 6001); and, finally, "the consummation * * * of a sordid, shameful, and successful intrigue, conducted in the interests of private parties impelled by greed and gain." (RECORD, p. 5280.)

For this treaty so characterized, as well as for practically everything else which has happened in connection with the distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande for the past quarter of a century, I am held primarily responsible by Senator THOMAS. I am singled out for attack before all others, and held up for public obliquity by repeated and direct accusation and indirect suggestion, as one who, as an Army officer and American commissioner upon the International Boundary Commission, has prostituted his public trust for purposes of private gain. The Senator has used my name in his speech on the floor of the Senate no less than 52 times (including references to "this man Mills," etc.). He has charged that the motive behind a draft treaty which he say I drew "can not be reconciled with any honest or honorable purpose" (RECORD, p. 5284); and finally, he threatens me with an investigation in which I must "either vindicate the integrity of his [my] conduct, or receive the indignant but merited condemnation of honest men everywhere." (RECORD, p. 5352.)

Senator THOMAS'S speech was delivered on the responsibility of his oath as a United States Senator, representing the great State of Colorado. By wise and necessary constitutional provision he may not be questioned for anything he has said therein "in any other place." And yet this speech does great wrong to many honorable men, some of whom are no longer living. In particular it does me wrong. And as I, too, may not be among the living (I am in my 80th year) when the investigation of which Senator THOMAS speaks comes to pass in its "proper season" (RECORD, p. 5352)—if it ever does—I respectfully request you, Senator, to present this communication to the Senate, and to ask the Senate of the United States, in fairness to me, to afford me the only redress which appears to be possible, pending the proposed investigation, by publishing this communication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in order that those who have read Senator THOMAS'S attack upon me may have opportunity to read my reply. I address myself in this to you, Senator ROOT, first, because I am proud to have served under you when you were Secretary of State, and to have come to know something of your desire to do justice to all men; and secondly, because as Secretary of State you had personal and official knowledge of many of the matters dealt with in Senator THOMAS'S speech.

A comparison of Senator THOMAS'S speech, with the statement of one, Dr. Nathan Boyd, inclosed in a letter of said Boyd to the Secretary of State, dated May 26, 1902, and printed in Senate Document 154, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, at pages 46 to 100, and with others of Dr. Boyd's communications to the department, such as his letter of June 30, 1902, July 11, 1902, etc., clearly shows that nearly every allegation and suggestion that the Senator has made in his long speech which reflects on me was derived from Dr. Boyd, whose interest in this matter will appear hereafter. I understand, although I did not know it at the time, that these charges of Dr. Boyd have already been several times investigated by competent officers of the Department of State, and once by Chief Wilkie of the Secret Service; and in each case they were found wholly groundless and unworthy of serious consideration, and that Dr. Boyd, after he had gone so far as to threaten to horsewhip Secretary Hay, was denied the privilege of having personal conferences with the officers of the Department of State.

Under these circumstances I will confine myself in this letter to giving a summary as brief as may be, supported by references to some of the more important official documents, of my official connection with the matters referred to by Dr. Boyd and Senator THOMAS.

In 1888, being then a major in the Tenth United States Cavalry, while on leave of absence at El Paso, where I had resided before the war, I was requested by some of my friends "to project a remedy for the then decreasing water in the river, and the perishing of a great many farms, trees, orchards, and vineyards by the drought." ("Testimony submitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs on bill (H. R. 9710) to provide for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico," etc., "Washington Government Printing Office, 1901," p. 221.) On December 10, 1888, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of State, formally submitting to him an outline of a project which I had conceived for an international dam and water storage on the Rio Grande near El Paso, Tex. (Testimony, p. 209.) On April 12, 1889, I received an order from the War Department to proceed to El Paso, Tex., and assist the officers of the Geological Survey in an effort to redeem the areas of irrigable land in that valley within a radius of 60 miles above and below El Paso. On April 19 I received further instructions from Maj. Powell, Director of the Geological Survey, in which he took occasion to emphasize the international character of the questions involved, and directed me to consult with the Mexican officials and assure them of the desire of his office to proceed with due regard to the rights of Mexico. (See my report, testimony, pp. 180, 181.) I carried out my instructions, and on October 10, 1889, made my report giving the results of my investigations pursued in cooperation with the Mexican officials, and recommended the building of an international dam at one of two possible sites in the gorge above El Paso. (Testimony, pp. 180–208.)

On April 29, 1890, Congress passed a concurrent resolution entitled "Concerning the irrigation of arid lands in the valley of the Rio Grande River, the construction of a dam across said river at or near El Paso, Tex., for the storage of its waste waters, and for other purposes." (S. Doc. 154, 57th Cong., 2d sess., p. 9.) This resolution recites the exhaustion of the water of the Rio Grande available for irrigation, caused "by means of irrigating ditches and canals taking the water from said river and other causes," and the damage and confusion wrought by the annual floods on the river; and authorizing negotiations with the Government of Mexico for the purpose of remedying these difficulties. (S. Doc. 154, 57th Cong., 2d sess., pp. 9, 10.)

On October 30, 1893, I was appointed the first American commissioner upon the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, under the convention of 1889, and thereafter on May 6, 1896, Secretary of State Olney and Señor Romero, the Mexican minister, signed a protocol reciting that it was essential for the conduct of the negotiations contemplated by the foregoing resolution that certain facts should be ascertained, and directing Señor Osorno, the Mexican commissioner, and myself to investigate and report upon the following questions:

"1. The amount of water of the Rio Grande taken by the irrigation canals constructed in the United States of America.

"2. The average amount of water in said river, year by year, before the construction of said irrigation canals and since said construction—the present year included.

"3. The best and most feasible mode, whether through a dam to be constructed across the Rio Grande near El Paso, Tex., or otherwise, of so regulating the use of the waters of said river as to secure to each country concerned and to its inhabitants their legal and equitable rights and interests in said waters." (S. Doc. 229, 55th Cong., 2d sess., p. 34.)

We proceeded in this investigation at a cost of several thousand dollars, found a suitable site for a dam in the El Paso Canyon, and reported to the two Governments plans and specifications for the dam and reservoir, and an estimate of its cost—about $2,300,000. (S. Doc. 229, 55th Cong., 2d sess., p. 31 et sec, especially p. 40.) A tentative draft of a treaty providing for the construction of the proposed dam was drawn up as the result of informal conferences between the Mexican minister, Assistant Secretary of State Adee, and myself, and was formally submitted by the Mexican minister to the Secretary of State (S. Doc. 229, 55th Cong., 2d sess., pp. 180–182); and later on several bills to the same end were introduced in Congress.

Meanwhile, however, the project for an international dam at El Paso had attracted the attention of a group of men in El Paso and elsewhere, who conceived the idea of anticipating the erection of the proposed international dam by appropriating all the water which would be available therefor, by obtaining the right to construct a dam at some point higher up the river, thus putting themselves in an advantageous strategic position, enabling them to compel the United States Government to subsidize their project in order to discharge its treaty obligations to Mexico. (Testimony, pp. 7, 66, 70–71, 123, 124.) These gentlemen in 1893 organized the Rio Grande Dam & Irrigation Co., under the laws of New Mexico. On February 1, 1895, this company obtained the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, under the act of March 3, 1891, for its filings for a right of way and reservoir site in connection with a dam to be constructed at Elephant Butte, N. Mex. (S. Doc. 229, 55th Cong., 2d sess., p. 4) a point on the Rio Grande some 115 miles above El Paso.

Dr. Boyd, to whom reference has already been made, became interested in the new company early in its history, and soon became its leading spirit. (See his letter to the Secretary of State, July 11, 1902.) Not being able to finance the company in the United States he went abroad for capital, and succeeded, about 1896, in organizing an English holding company known as the Rio Grande Irrigation & Land Co. (Ltd.), to acquire by lease and assignment the franchises and rights of the Rio Grande Dam & Irrigation Co. On August 4, 1896, the Mexican minister, Mr. Romero, addressed a protest to the American Secretary of State against the activities of this company, on the ground that it would be useless to build an international dam at El Paso in order to secure to the Mexican landowners in the El Paso Valley their prior water rights, if the English company at Elephant Butte was to be permitted to appropriate all the water in the river. (S. Doc. 229, 55th Cong., 2d sess., pp. 2, 3.) The Secretary of State referred this protest to me, August 8, 1896, requesting my suggestions (S. Doc. 229, 55th Cong., 2d sess., p. 11); and on November 17, 1896, as soon as the investigations of the joint commission, regarding the amount of water taken from the Rio Grande in the United States, and the former flow of the river, had been sufficiently completed, I made a report to the effect that there was not sufficient water to supply the projected dam of the English company, and the proposed international dam at El Paso, and therefore recommended that "if practicable the approval of the reservoir of the Rio Grande Land & Irrigation Co. (Ltd.), at Elephant Butte, be canceled or withdrawn, and, if not practicable to cancel or withdraw the same, that such executive or legislative restriction be placed upon it as to prohibit it from using any part of the flow of the river to which the inhabitants of either bank of the river below may have a prior right by appropriation." (S. Doc. 229, 55th Cong., 2d sess., p. 13.)

Further correspondence between the Departments of State, Interior, the War Department, and the Attorney General resulted in suit being instituted in the Federal courts by Attorney General McKenna to restrain the building of the dam by the English company. These proceedings were instituted upon the theory that the construction of the proposed dam at Elephant Butte, N. Mex., would impair the navigability of the Rio Grande in violation of the statutes of the United States and our treaties with Mexico. In the course of these proceedings I gave my testimony under oath, like any other witness, on behalf of the Government. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States three times. The first time it was argued for the Government by Attorney General Griggs in person; the second time, under Mr. Knox as Attorney General, it was argued by Mr. M. C. Burch; and the third time by the late Solicitor General, Mr. Bowers (Mr. Wickersham being Attorney General). The litigation was finally terminated by a decree in favor of the Government, the unanimous opinion of the court being read by Mr. Justice Harlan (Mr. Justice McKenna not participating in the consideration or determination of the case). (215 U. S., 266.)

And yet Senator THOMAS regards the institution and prosecution of this suit as the result of a "conspiracy" (RECORD, p. 5343), in which of course, I am chief conspirator; qualifies Secretary Olney's conduct in this connection in "ignoring" an opinion of Attorney General Harmon as "the most sinister feature of all the sinister features of this affair from its beginning to its end" (RECORD, p. 5343); complains that "between the time of the bringing of this suit and its first termination by the court below the President of the United States and his Cabinet were fully advised of its purposes, the absence of its equities, and the effect of the suit, if successful, upon agricultural conditions in that section of the country" (RECORD, p. 5345); and finally says, in speaking of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States enjoining the defendant company because it had failed to complete its work within the five-year period provided by the statute, that "the decree was as unjust as the suit. It was founded upon a falsehood, and the decree was consistent with its foundation." (RECORD, p. 5345.)

Furthermore, Senator THOMAS asserts that "the United States Government finally and reluctantly conceded that its proceeding against the Rio Grande Dam & Navigation Co. was a persecution and not a prosecution; that its cause of action was a pretense, and its final judgment a great wrong, and so it has agreed to reimburse those who financed the enterprise to the extent of the money invested." (RECORD, p. 5350; see also RECORD, p. 5280.) But the Senator appears to be in error. The United States has declined to recognize that there is any merit in the company's claim, and the claim of the English company is one of those which have been referred to arbitration under the convention between the United States and Great Britain of August 18, 1910, for the arbitration of pecuniary claims, and is therefore now pending before the arbitral court for settlement. The impropriety, under these circumstances, of Senator THOMAS'S remarks, in so far as they relate to this case, would seem too obvious for comment.

So far as the treaty of 1906 for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande is concerned, Senator THOMAS is absolutely mistaken in thinking that I had anything to do with it. During President Roosevelt's administration the matter of the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande was placed in the hands of the Reclamation Service, under Dr. Newell. To the best of my recollection, I never was consulted by anyone, officially, regarding that treaty, and had no knowledge of its terms until after it was ratified and promulgated and I saw it in the press. In fact, the treaty was a great disappointment to me in that it abandoned the international dam at El Paso, which I had always advocated, in favor of a site which I did not believe was adapted to furnishing to the Mexican landowners in the El Paso Valley the water to which I have always thought they were entitled by virtue of their prior rights. If I could bring myself to regard an attack by any responsible man upon my personal and official honor as other than serious, I could not but regard it as a humorous circumstance to be charged with being the "Mephisto" of a treaty which I first saw in the newspapers.

Toward the close of the Senator's speech (RECORD, p. 5280) he states that if he is "correctly informed," I "disbursed and controlled" the $50,000 appropriation for the Chamizal arbitration; and he thereupon proceeds to criticize (most unjustly, as I am advised) an item of expenditure out of this appropriation. The Senator has not been correctly informed. I neither disbursed nor controlled this appropriation nor a single penny thereof. I may add that all of my disbursements, something like $500,000 of Government money, have passed the scrutiny of the proper accounting officers of the Government, and that no act of mine during my incumbency of over 20 years as boundary commissioner has been disappproved by my superiors.

I have served in the Regular Army over 55 years, the past 20 years' service with the Boundary Commission being as an officer of the Army, with pay and allowance as such, under a joint resolution of December 12, 1893. I was appointed by Secretary Gresham as the first international boundary commissioner under the treaty of 1889 with Mexico, and have served in that capacity continuously ever since to the satisfaction of the department under Secretaries Gresham, Olney, Sherman, Day, Hay, Root, Bacon, and Knox. I am now assailed by a United States Senator, acting under the high responsibility and privilege of his office, in a two days' speech on the floor of the Senate and accused repeatedly, both directly and indirectly, albeit always in terms as vague as they are reckless, of dishonesty in the discharge of my official duties. I am challenged either to "vindicate the integrity of his [my] conduct or receive the indignant but merited condemnation of honest men everywhere."

I assert the absolute honesty and integrity of each and every one of my official and personal acts and stand ready at all times to vindicate my integrity before any competent tribunal.

Very respectfully,

ANSON MILLS,
Mexican Boundary Commissioner and Disbursing Officer.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 24, 1897.

He joined the Third Cavalry February 28, 1893, and commanded it and the post of Fort McIntosh, Tex., to June 21, 1893, and the post of Fort Reno, Okla., to August 12, 1893; on leave to October 26, 1893, and since then on duty as commissioner of the United States International Boundary Commission of the United States and Mexico.

(Signed) GEO. D. RUGGLES, Adjutant General.

ADDITION TO THE RECORD OF COL. ANSON MILLS, UNITED STATES ARMY, NOT INCLUDED IN THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S CERTIFICATE OF MILITARY SERVICE.

He left West Point in 1857, went to the frontier of Texas, and engaged in engineering and land surveying; laid out the first plan of the city of El Paso; in 1859 was surveyor to the boundary commission establishing the boundary between New Mexico, Indian Territory, and Texas; in February, 1861, on submission to the popular vote of the State of Texas the question of "separation" or "no separation," he cast one of the lonely two votes in the county of El Paso against separation to 955 for separation; in March, 1861, he abandoned the State, going to Washington, and there joined the military organization known as the "Cassius M. Clay Guards," quartered, armed, and equipped by the United States Government, and served there protecting Federal officers and property, until relieved by volunteer forces called out by the President. On May 14, 1861, was appointed first lieutenant Eighteenth Infantry on the following recommendation from the then first class at the Military Academy:

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
West Point, N. Y., April 30, 1861.

LORENZO THOMAS,
Adjutant General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, members of the first class at the United States Military Academy, respectfully recommend to your favorable consideration the claims of Mr. Anson Mills, an applicant for a commission as second lieutenant in the United States Army.

Mr. Mills was formerly a member for nearly two years of the class preceding ours, when he resigned.

During that time his habits and character conformed to the strictest military propriety and discipline, and we feel assured that he would be an honor to the service, and that its interests would be promoted by his appointment.

Respectfully submitted.

James F. McQuesten, Chas. E. Hazlett, Henry B. Noble, Francis A. Davies, John I. Rogers, J. W. Barlow, W. A. Elderkin, A. R. Chambliss, Emory Upton, Eugene B. Beaumont, J. Ford Kent, J. S. Poland, Addelbert Ames, A. R Buffington, C. E. Patterson, Leonard Martin, Sheldon Sturgeon, Wright Rives, Chas. C. Campbell, M. F. Watson, Ohio F. Rice, Erskene Gittings, Franklin Howard, Chas. Henry Gibson, J. H. Simper, H. A. Dupont, J. Benson Williams, Chas. M. K. Leoser, R. L. Eastman, Leroy L. Janes, Guy V. Henry, N. W. Henry, John Adair, jr., Judson Kilpatrick, S. O. Sokalski, Samuel N. Benjamin, J. B Rawles, L. G. Hoxton.

During the four years of the war he was never absent, either on leave or from sickness, and was present in all of the engagements of his regiment.

Fox's "Regimental Losses" states, on page 3, that his regiment—Eighteenth Infantry—lost more in killed and mortally wounded than any other regiment in the Regular Army, and that his company—H, First Battalion (p. 420)—lost more in killed and mortally wounded than any company in his regiment.

He invented the woven cartridge belt (and loom for manufacture), now adopted and exclusively used by the Army and Navy of the United States.

He stands No. 24 on the lineal list of 71 colonels in the Army.

Private resolution No. 1.

Joint resolution permitting Anson Mills, colonel of Third Regiment United States Cavalry, to accept and exercise the functions of boundary commissioner on the part of the United States.

Resolved, etc., That Anson Mills, colonel Third Regiment United States Cavalry, having been nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate as a commissioner of the United States under the convention between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico concluded and signed by the contracting parties at the city of Washington March 1, 1889, is hereby permitted to accept and exercise the functions of said office of commissioner: Provided, Said officer shall continue to receive his emoluments in pay and allowances as colonel in the Army while holding said office of commissioner the same as he would receive were he performing such duty under military orders, and no other or additional pay or emoluments for his services as such commissioner.

Approved, December 12, 1893.

STATUE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON GLICK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no resolutions coming over from a former day, morning business is closed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 17824, being the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact that, by a resolution heretofore adopted, exercises appropriate to the acceptance of a statue of George Washington Glick were to take place immediately after the completion of the routine morning business to-day.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Chair that I make the motion with the consent of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] that the bill to which I refer shall be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the junior Senator from Kansas make the request that the order be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. BRISTOW. How long will the bill moved by the Senator from Virginia take? I do not want delay.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The bill perhaps will not take 30 minutes. There is no controverted matter in the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why not wait until the regular order is disposed of?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Very well. I spoke to the junior Senator from Kansas, and my request was agreeable to him; but if the Senators from Kansas can not agree about the matter, I will withhold it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] having objected to the request of the Senator from Virginia, the regular order will be the exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance of the statue of George Washington Glick from the State of Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I present a letter from the governor of Kansas and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS, GEORGE H. HODGES, GOVERNOR,
Topeka, June 29, 1914.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Among the many distinguished Kansans who have patriotically devoted their lives to the service of the State, helped make its splendid history, promoted its material growth and prosperity, and marched in the forefront of the van of spiritual and social progress, there is no man who ranks higher than its one-time governor, the late George W. Glick.

Grateful for his eminent services and proud of his history and attainments in behalf of the State, the legislature, at its regular session of 1913, adopted a concurrent resolution and made an appropriation for the purchase of a suitable statue, as a tribute to his memory, to be placed in Statuary Hall, where the Nation has granted to his people the privilege of placing it. This rare privilege is gratefully accepted by the State of Kansas, and the statue, done in imperishable marble, is now ready for acceptance by the Government; and, in behalf of the Legislature of Kansas and of the people I represent, I here avail myself of the honor and pleasure of presenting it to the people of the United States and their Representatives in Congress assembled.

Respectfully, yours,

GEORGE H. HODGES, Governor.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution, and ask that it may be read and considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas introduces a concurrent resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 28), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the statue of George Washington Glick, presented by the State of Kansas to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his distinguished civic services.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Kansas.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON. I present a communication from Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, senior Senator from the State of Oklahoma, and ask that it may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas presents a communication, which he asks may be read by the Secretary. Unless there is objection, that will be the order.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Cablegram.]

JULY 18, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM H. THOMPSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I greatly regret my inability to be with you to-day. I especially desire to pay my great respect for Gov. Glick in person. He was an honor to the great State of Kansas. His upright, useful life, his great integrity, and his patriotic devotion to the public interest will always remain a model and an inspiration to the youth of Kansas and our whole country. May his splendid example be forever perpetuated by the noble monument which you to-day erect in the National Capitol.

My sympathy and good wishes are with you. Extremely sorry I am prevented being present.

ROBERT L. OWEN.

Mr. THOMPSON. I also present a telegram from Representative GEORGE A. NEELEY, of the seventh district of Kansas, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

HUTCHINSON, KANS., July 18, 1914.

Senator W. H. THOMPSON, Washington, D. C.:

Matters over which I have no control deprive me of the pleasure of being present at the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue to the memory of the late Gov. George W. Glick. Time has only tended to magnify the splendid qualities that made him the foremost Kansan of his day, and it is indeed a happy day for the people of our State, irrespective of party, that this remembrance of his life, service, and activities is to be thus recognized.

GEORGE A. NEELEY.

Mr. THOMPSON. I also present and ask to have read a telegram just received from Hon. B. P. Waggener, of Atchison, Kans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

ATCHISON, KANS., July 18, 1914.

Hon. W. H. THOMPSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As member of legislature for many years and as chief executive of Kansas, George W. Glick accomplished more for State than any of her public men. While he was not a brilliant orator he was a constructive statesman, and Kansas honors herself by perpetuating his memory.

B. P. WAGGENER.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, the statutes of the United States provide:

The President is authorized to invite all the States to provide and furnish statues in marble or bronze not exceeding two in number for each State of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof and illustrious for their historic renown or for distinguished civic or military services, such as each State may deem to be worthy of this national commemoration, and when so furnished the same shall be placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives in the Capitol of the United States, which is set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a national statuary hall for the purpose herein indicated.

This proceeding, therefore, involves two propositions: First, the presentation by the State of Kansas to the United States of a marble statue of the late George Washington Glick; and, second, the formal acceptance of that statue by the Congress of the United States.

Sir William Jones, the noted English linguist and jurist, furnished to the literature of the world the following beautiful sentiment in verse:

What constitutes a State?
Not high-raised battlement or labored mound,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud with spires and turrets crowned;
Not bays and broad-armed ports
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride;
Not starred and spangled courts
Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride.
No! Men, high-minded men,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued
In forest brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude,
Men who their duties know,
But know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain,
Prevent the long-aimed blow,
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain.
These constitute a State,
And sovereign law, that State's collected will,
O'er thrones and globes elate,
Sits empress, crowning good, repressing ill.

Sumner said: "The true grandeur of nations is in those qualities which constitute the greatness of the individual."

The causes which shape the fortunes of individuals and the destinies of nations are substantially the same. That nation is the greatest which produces the most noble men and faithful women. It has frequently been demonstrated in battle that success does not depend so much upon the number of men and guns as it does upon the character of the men behind the guns. The principal elements of success in life consist in innate capacity and pronounced determination to excel. Where either is wanting, failure is almost certain. It is therefore proper on occasions like the present to make a study of successful lives, to serve both as a source of information and as a stimulus and encouragement to those who have the capacity to emulate their example. Longfellow furnishes an important lesson in this connection in his expression, "We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing, while we judge others by what they have already done."

George Washington Glick, the ninth governor of Kansas, was born at Greencastle, Fairfield County, Ohio, July 4, 1827. His great-grandfather, Philip Glick, a Revolutionary soldier, was one of five brothers who came to Pennsylvania from Germany. His grandfather, George Glick, served in the War of 1812, as did also his mother's father, Capt. George Sanders. Gov. Glick's father, Isaac Glick, was a man of influence in the community where he lived, who took an active interest in State and local politics, and held many positions of public trust. His mother, Mary Sanders, was of Scotch parentage, and a woman of marked and lovable character. Both parents lived to a good old age.

Gov. Glick was reared on his father's farm near Fremont, Ohio, and there acquired the habits of industry, economy, and self-reliance that have made his later life so successful. At the age of 21 he entered the office of Buckland & Hayes as a law student, and was admitted to the bar two years later at Cincinnati by the supreme court. Rutherford B. Hayes, one of the members of this firm, afterwards became President of the United States. Gov. Glick began the practice at Fremont and soon won an enviable reputation as a hard-working and faithful lawyer. He fully sustained this reputation after coming to Kansas. Whatever else may be said of the legal fraternity, it can not be successfully denied that members of the bar have been more prominent in public affairs than any other class of citizens. Gov. Glick was a natural leader of men and consequently began early in life to take a hand in politics. When but 31 years of age he was nominated for Congress by the Democracy of his district in Ohio, but declined to accept the nomination. The same year he was nominated for State senator and made the race against Gen. R. P. Buckland, his former law preceptor. He was defeated, but ran 1,750 votes ahead of his ticket.

Locating at Atchison in the spring of 1859, about the same time that Senator Ingalls also located there, he formed a partnership with Hon. Alfred G. Otis, who afterwards became a prominent judge of the State, which partnership lasted until 1874, when an affection of the throat compelled him to relinquish the active practice of the law. This firm soon became one of the best law firms in the State. Hon. Ballie P. Waggener, of Atchison, the present general attorney for the Missouri Pacific Railway Co., and one of the most prominent Democrats of Kansas, and whose sixty-seventh birthday is being celebrated to-day, read law in this office when he was a young man and was admitted to the bar from this firm. Mr. Waggener is also the author of the resolution for the presentation of the Glick statue to the Nation, which as State senator he introduced in the last legislature. Gov. Glick soon took a leading place at the Kansas bar. His practice extended throughout all the courts, and he was a salaried attorney for two railroads and a number of large business concerns. His fees were often very large, but at the same time he did much legal work for the poorer settlers without compensation, and he never willingly saw a man sent out of court without a hearing because he was unable to pay a lawyer. At the bar he won marked prestige by reason of his thorough understanding of the law and his constant devotion to his clients' interests. He prepared his cases with precision and exactness, studied the question at issue from every conceivable standpoint, and was thus ready to meet not only the expected but also the unexpected, which happens so frequently in the courts.

Notwithstanding he was an active Democrat and lived on the Missouri River in close proximity to the State of Missouri, he was an uncompromising free-State man, and was perhaps as much responsible for the State enlisting in the free-State cause as any other person. He helped to prepare and adopt the constitution upon which the State of Kansas was admitted to the Union. He served in the first legislature and again and again in following legislatures until the policy of the State was firmly established. He was elected by the Democrats to the Kansas Legislature in 1862, without opposition, something unprecedented in that Republican State in those days. He was reelected by the Democrats against strong Republican opposition in an overwhelmingly Republican district in 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1868, 1876, and 1882, serving almost constantly for 18 years, giving him the longest service in the Kansas Legislature of any man in either political party.

During his long and active service as a legislator he introduced and secured the passage of many needed and important laws that have fixed and settled the policy of the State on many matters of vast interest, and that have stood the test of time and experience. Mr. Glick in 1863 prepared and secured the passage of the first law in Kansas regulating the rate of interest on money, changing the then prevailing rates of from 5 and 3 per cent per month to 10 per cent per annum, with penalties for exacting usury. Also the first law relating to marriage, and providing for a record of the same, making it easy to prove the marriage and to establish the legitimacy of children and the title to property belonging to heirs. This law, passed in 1863, has been amended, but the original requirements of a license and a record of the marriage have not been changed. The occupying-claimant law, the law relating to wills, and the mechanics' lien law, with many others passed in the early sixties, that have stood the test of time and extended by amendments to conform to changed conditions, but not changing their theory or purpose, are now part of the settled policy of the State. Gov. Glick, as chairman of the judiciary committee, in 1868, in revising the laws, prepared and secured the adoption of sections 5046 and 5047 of the civil code, which have had a most important bearing on the proceedings of the supreme court.

Section 5046 provides that in all cases decided by the supreme court it shall be the duty of the judges of the supreme court to prepare and file with the papers of the case the opinion of the court upon the questions of law arising in the case before any mandate shall issue to the court below.

Section 5047 provides that the judge writing the opinion of the court shall prepare a syllabus of the points of law decided in the case, and file the same with the papers in the case, and in all cases a copy of the syllabus must accompany the mandate to the court below. Previous to the adoption of those two sections of the code, in more than half of the cases tried and decided by the supreme court no opinions were filed, and litigants never knew on what grounds the cases were decided; and the lower courts, when cases were reversed, were left in ignorance of the reasons for reversal. These amendments to the code met with the universal indorsement of the bar of the State, and Gov. Glick received many thanks from district judges and members of the bar commending his acts in securing the passage of these statutes.

In 1876 Gov. Glick was made speaker pro tempore of the house of representatives, although that body was strongly Republican. As a presiding officer he proved eminently fair and an expert parliamentarian. During his years in the legislature he was recognized as one of its strongest members. He was a ready debater and on the alert to detect all schemes aimed at the public treasury or at the rights and liberties of the people, and knew the full meaning and import of every bill passed. He was at the head of the judiciary and other important committees, and to him is largely due the credit for the complete and successful revision of the laws of Kansas made by the judiciary committee in 1868.

He was a delegate to the Democratic national conventions in 1856, 1868, 1884, and 1892. He was the choice of the Kansas Democracy in 1884 for Vice President, and the Kansas delegation in the Democratic national convention at Chicago that year presented his name to the convention as its candidate for Vice President after the nomination of Grover Cleveland for President.

He was nominated for governor in 1868 and made the race in obedience to his party's call, although his defeat was inevitable. In 1882 he was again the unanimous choice of his party for governor and made a memorable campaign, and, though fighting against great odds, among them being a Republican majority of over 52,000, he defeated that distinguished Republican and Prohibitionist, John P. St. John, by 8,079 votes. The campaign of 1882 was an extremely lively contest. It was the first political campaign that I ever became interested in. My father, John F. Thompson, made his first political race in Kansas on the Democratic ticket for probate judge of Nemaha County, and I was naturally interested in the outcome, although only a mere boy. I remember especially the activity of Gov. Glick in that campaign. I learned from him at that time my first lesson in politics. He made a personal campaign, speaking in practically every county in the State, and when the votes were counted he had overcome the fifty-odd thousand Republican majority. Gov. Glick was the only Democrat elected on the State ticket in 1882. Gov. Glick was our first and only Democratic governor until the present administration, and our present governor was also the only Democrat elected on the State ticket in 1912.

While in the election of 1882 the resubmission question cut some figure in the contest, as prohibition had only recently been adopted in the State, and most people who were opposed to the amendment at that time, regardless of political affiliations, naturally voted the Democratic ticket, yet, after all, the fight against the third term for St. John was really the controlling factor that brought success to the Democrats. No one in any party has ever been elected for a third term for governor in Kansas, and very few men have been elected for a third term to any office. Resubmission, when submitted alone, has always been defeated, and always will be. Resubmission was like a millstone around the neck of the Democratic Party so long as it gave encouragement to this issue. General success never came to the party on principle until it freed itself of this burden. None of the old recognized leaders of the party now stands for resubmission. In fact, none of the leaders of any of the political parties now advocates it. It is a dead issue in Kansas, except to only a few politicians who refuse to recognize the settled policy of the State in this regard, and who occasionally attempt to resurrect it simply to cause trouble. Although the resubmissionists claimed to have elected Gov. Glick, their cause never received any consideration or encouragement during his administration, and before he died, like David Overmyer and other former great leaders, he repudiated the doctrine.

Gov. Glick was inaugurated January 8, 1883, and his administration was marked by dignity, intelligence, and a careful and discreet management of the material and financial interests of the State. His long experience as a legislator gave him an intimate knowledge of the State's needs, and many valuable reform measures recommended in his message to the legislature were accomplished. He entered an earnest protest against the burdens imposed upon the agricultural classes by the railroads, and asked that legislation be enacted to prevent these exactions. A law creating a railroad commission and embodying substantially a the improvements asked by him was passed and proved of great benefit to the people of the State.

Among other measures suggested by him and adopted by the legislature may be cited the first good-roads law enacted by the State; more just and equitable assessment laws for taxation; the establishment of a live-stock sanitary commission, with a State veterinary surgeon; and laws providing for the better care of public money, since the adoption of which not one dollar has been lost to the State.

A wise economy without stinginess marked his management of the State's finances, and the various educational and charitable institutions of the State were admirably cared for. He was renominated for governor in 1884, but was defeated by Col. John A. Martin, also of Atchison, although running 15,000 votes ahead of his ticket.

In 1885 he was appointed by President Cleveland pension agent at Topeka, and so satisfactorily discharged these duties that he was reappointed without solicitation on his part when Mr. Cleveland again came into office. During Gov. Glick's two terms as pension agent at the Topeka agency he received over $87,000,000, which he disbursed to ex-soldiers, and holds the Government's acknowledgment for the faithful disbursement of that large sum without the loss of one cent to the Government or to the old soldiers. Among those who served as employees under Gov. Glick while pension agent there are still employed in the Pension Bureau in this city 15 men, who have contributed the following statement for these proceedings, which I am pleased to present:

We found in that closer relationship of employer and employee all he demanded, as the one in charge of this important Government position, was faithful, earnest, and honest endeavor to do and perform all duties assigned us the same as would be expected of us in any other field of human activity. He demanded the same requirements in public service as in private life. He exacted no more and was satisfied with no less. He insisted upon faithfulness in the performance of duty. He was decidedly averse to subterfuge, unmoved by flattery, and observant of the absolute rights of others. An unrelenting foe to unfaithfulness he ever admired fidelity of purpose, honesty of endeavor, and uprightness of conduct. Whether in private, public, or official life, he believed the same rules should be conscientiously applied. Officially or privately he was easily approachable, listened with interest, advised with candor, and judged with mercy.

With the exception of his immediate associates during the Civil War and perhaps a very few close friends in his social, public, or political life, it was not generally known that he served in an humble station during the Civil War. Still fewer of his immediate friends knew that he was wounded during his service. Inquiry of one of his closest friends, an important appointee during his term as governor of the State, brought an emphatic denial of his service, because, as he said, "Had the governor been a soldier he would certainly have told me."

Men who campaigned with him when such a statement would have largely benefited his chances made no claim along that line, because they did not know it. He was decidedly averse to making use of this fact, even for political gain. That he took this course is characteristic of the man. Experience and observation have shown that length of service is of far less importance than the fact of service. His country called; he obeyed the call, served the term required by the Government, was in a battle, received wounds, and when discharged retired to civil life, as did thousands of others, to resume the obligations, duties, and labors of citizenship.

Guy O. Taylor, disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions; Cass Carr, John Hovenden, Lawrence A. McDonald, Mark P. Miller, Emmett Turner, Leonard S. Fortune, Isaac D. Huntsberger, O. B. Martin, C. D. Nichols, J. P. Wilson, Samuel C. Garrard, Rufus G. Kessler, E. E. Miller, William H. Ruff.

For 30 years Gov. Glick was engaged in farming. He was the owner of a valuable tract of land of about 640 acres 4 miles west of the city of Atchison, and there he successfully carried on stock raising, making a specialty of breeding shorthorn cattle. A number of times he paid as high as $1,000 for a single head, and among stock dealers he obtained a wide reputation, shipping cattle all over the United States. He was a close personal and political friend of Senator William A. Harris, who distinguished himself in this body. They had many things in common, and were especially mutually interested in high-grade stock and intensive farming.

He was one of the organizers of the State board of agriculture, and served several terms as its president, and at the time of his death was still a member. He was a member of the Kansas Historical Society and its first vice president. He was a ready and vigorous writer, and contributed many valuable essays on agriculture, stock raising, and kindred subjects to various periodicals and public meetings. He was one of the Kansas commissioners at the Centennial in 1876 and a member of the board of managers at the Columbian Exposition in 1893. He was president of the Kansas board of managers at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition in 1898 at Omaha.

Gov. Glick served in the Second Kansas Regiment under Col. M. Quigg, and was in a number of engagements on the border. He was wounded at the Battle of the Big Blue. He enlisted as a soldier in the Mexican War, but peace was declared before he saw active service. He was a Mason, and was one of the charter members of the Knights Templar Commandery at Atchison.

Always an uncompromising Democrat, Gov. Glick had the respect and esteem of Kansas people of all parties. His sagacity and courage in treating public questions, his detestation of trickery, and his fair treatment of all won and kept him many loyal friends.

His inflexible determination to make Kansas respected and entitled to the respect of the Nation forced him into a position of prominence and responsibility. His unswerving attitude through all the changes and vicissitudes of the State made his name a household word. Until the day of his death he represented in his own individuality the best history and attainments of the State of Kansas. More than to any other man is due him the credit for the construction of the important railroads of the State of Kansas. He was a charter member of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe organization, which line started from the city of Atchison, as its eastern terminus. He helped to build up the farming industries of the State, and was always consulted in all matters of farming and stock raising. His natural instincts were in harmony with an agricultural region. He was the best representative of an agricultural State.

Gov. Glick was married in 1857 to Elizabeth Ryder, of Massillon, Ohio, whose grace and dignity adorned his home and added honor to his official life. Mrs. Glick still lives at Atchison in comfort and happiness, enjoying the rewards of a well-spent life. A son, Frederick H., and a daughter, Jennie, are the fruits of this union. Gov. Glick died at his home April 13, 1911, and was buried at Mount Vernon Cemetery, Atchison, Kans. Thus ended the earthly career of one of the ablest, most active, and useful citizens who ever lived in Kansas, and whose achievements are indelibly written upon the pages of history of the State for more than a half century. It is therefore clear that for his historic renown and distinguished civic services he is in every way worthy of national commemoration by the State, and it is entirely fitting and proper that his statue in marble should be presented by the State of Kansas and accepted by the Congress and placed in the National Statuary Hall.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, George W. Glick was a resident of Kansas for more than 50 years. He devoted much of his life to the promotion of the agricultural interests of the State. He was a genial, affable gentleman, who had attractive social qualities and made many personal friends. His professional and political career was not conspicuous. He was a member of the legislature of the State for many years, served on the State board of agriculture, I believe, from its organization to the time of his death, and was governor for two years.

He was the only real Democrat ever elected governor of Kansas, except the present incumbent of that office. L. D. Lewelling and J. W. Leedy were elected governors over their Republican competitors, but they were both Populists, and were elected on a fusion ticket supported by the Populists and Democrats. Mr. Glick was elected governor in 1882, defeating Gov. John P. St. John, who was running for the third consecutive term. During St. John's incumbency of the office the prohibitory amendment to the constitution was adopted, and he began a vigorous crusade to enforce it. As a result the anti-prohibition Republicans bolted and voted for Glick, who had been nominated by the Democrats on a strong antiprohibition platform.

It is an interesting coincidence in Kansas history that Gov. Glick, the only avowed antiprohibitionist who has ever been elected governor of Kansas since the prohibitory amendment was adopted, is to be honored by the people of his State with a statue in Statuary Hall, though the issue upon which he was elected governor, that of opposition to the prohibitory amendment, has passed away. I have been told by friends of Gov. Glick that before his death he admitted that prohibition had been beneficial to Kansas. And the party which nominated him and denounced prohibition in the most violent terms has now repudiated its antiprohibition declarations and at this time is standing for the prohibitory law and its enforcement. So that, in fact, Gov. Glick and the party which he represented now admit that the issue upon which he was elected governor was a false one. The temporary victory which the Democratic Party won in the State by the election of Mr. Glick resulted in no legislation adverse to the prohibition law of the State. In fact, the law has grown stronger year by year, and to-day is more strongly intrenched in the minds of the people of Kansas than at any time since it was adopted, 34 years ago.

If I had had a voice in the selecting of the second Kansan to be commemorated by a statue in the National Capitol, there are many others that I would have chosen in preference to Gov. Glick. But the legislature, upon whom the responsibility is imposed, has made this choice, and I am glad to commend his good qualities and personal virtues.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, for more than 25 years my home was at Nevada, Vernon County, Mo., located in the southwestern section of the State. Vernon County adjoins Bourbon County, Kans., of which Fort Scott is the county seat. These cities are about 20 miles apart. Fort Scott is the most important city in southeastern Kansas, and Nevada is one of the most beautiful, progressive, and important cities in southwestern Missouri. Because of the proximity of these counties and cities the people residing in them, respectively, were constantly brought into intimate intercourse with each other. Years ago I had a somewhat extensive acquaintance with the people of that part of Kansas tributary to Fort Scott. Back in the seventies and eighties I participated, more or less, in political campaigns in the Sunflower State, particularly in the southeastern section. In the campaign of 1882 George W. Glick was the Democratic candidate for governor. I was complimented with an invitation to deliver several addresses in support of the ticket of which he was the head, and it was during that contest that I first became acquainted with Mr. Glick. Mr. Glick was elected governor in that somewhat memorable struggle. His victory was the occasion of great rejoicing among his political followers throughout Kansas, heartily shared in by thousands of Missourians of his political faith, especially along the western border of that State. I met him frequently afterwards, and although I can not say that I ever knew him intimately, I did know him well. He was a strong, virile, intellectual man, whose heart was full of kindness and sympathetic regard for his fellow men. He was broad minded and large hearted. He was a typical man of the then new and rapidly expanding West. He was one of the big men of Kansas—patriotic, clean in his life, devoted to the higher duties of citizenship, and withal brave and fearless.

He rendered numerous valuable services to his State and country, and justly held a high place in public esteem. His long and distinguished life was closed among the people to whom he had become greatly endeared, and when he died his countrymen felt that a great man had fallen.

Among the States that make up our Union, Kansas, because of her exceptional history and marvelous development, stands forth as somewhat unique and remarkable. She is one of the great States of our federation, and for her the spirit of promise stands like a shining figure beckoning her onward. Gov. Glick bore a conspicuous part as a builder in making Kansas beautiful and great. It is well, therefore, that the people of Kansas should honor the memory of this man who was so useful to them and the country by giving him a place in Statuary Hall among the mute marble images of so many of the great sons of America.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the home of Gov. Glick for many years was within a few miles of Kansas City, where I reside. It therefore happened that I had occasion to follow with some degree of accuracy his career.

George W. Glick was a warrior on the battle fields of progress. He was one of those men, all too rare, who place principle above popularity and subordinate private interests to the public weal.

For a half century he waged a desperate struggle on behalf of the principles of a party hopelessly in the minority in his home State. During at least 40 years of that time not a single star of hope illumined the dark horizon. His contention therefore was without expectation of emolument or reward. No man in Kansas could anticipate political preferment who marched under the banner of Democracy. His fidelity through the long years to that cause is certain proof that he found his inspiration in duty.

In this long and desperate contest his spirits never flagged, his zeal never abated. After each disaster his was the first hand to raise the stricken banner from the dust. His voice rang loud and clear as he rallied the scattered hosts. His valor always inspired the hearts of others with courage. So he continued from early manhood until the day of his death to contend for great principles the adoption of which he believed essential to the welfare of the Republic. He saw those principles grow in popularity and strength. He lived to witness the crystallization into law of many reforms for which in the beginning his voice resounded almost alone.

It is eminently proper that the Federal Government unite with Kansas in paying honor to the lofty citizenship of such a man. It is to men of his fiber and character the country owes its onward march. Sincerity in public life, self-sacrifice, and high courage are the qualities which in the end make up the sum of human progress. It has been such architects as George W. Glick who have laid the foundation and erected the walls of the temple of civilization.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, George W. Glick was a type of the early westerner, the man who cast his fortunes and utilized his talents upon the frontier in the stirring days when there was a frontier. In those days the venturesome and the ambitious were attracted by the El Dorado of the West, and, obeying that instinct which has impelled the human race westward from the dawn of civilization, he entered upon a career having its beginning in a rude western and uninhabited land and its full fruition in its redemption from barbarism and its occupation by the white man.

Gov. Glick was elected to the chief magistracy of the State which he helped to found at a time when questions of internal interest and importance had weakened the loyalty of the great majority party to its ticket. He became conspicuous by reason of the fact that he was the first Democratic governor of the State of Kansas; but with the eyes of the country upon him in consequence of that unique circumstance, he bore the burdens of his position with dignity and discharged its duties with eminent success.

It is altogether fit and proper, Mr. President, that the marble effigy of such a man should be the companion piece from the State of Kansas of that of the great Senator, John J. Ingalls, who was conspicuous for so many years in the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

The concurrent resolution was unanimously agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 17824, being the general deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17824) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. BURTON. I take it that the House provisions of the bill will not be read at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The House provisions of the bill can be read. I did not ask to dispense with the reading of the House provisions.

Mr. BURTON. How long would it take to read the provisions of the bill as it comes from the other House? I should like, as the bill has just come before us, to have those provisions read.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know how long it would take; but if the Senator from Ohio wants to hear every word of the bill read, of course, he can insist on that being done.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Virginia has simply asked that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply asked that the formal reading be dispensed with.

Mr. BURTON. Will every item, including the House provisions, be read?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They will not, with my approval; but if the Senator from Ohio so desires, that will be done. I might just as well be frank about it; nobody pays any attention to the reading of every word of the bill; but if the Senator from Ohio desires to have every word of the bill read, it can be done.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly; I can hardly understand the restiveness of the Senator from Virginia in regard to this. Here is an appropriation bill reported last night and placed on our desks this morning. It seems to me we should have an opportunity to understand what is in it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] preclude the reading of the bill? My understanding is that the bill will be read at his request.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have not asked that the reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BRYAN. The House text of the bill will have to be read under the request of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may be permitted, the understanding of the Chair is that it is the formal reading of the bill which the Senator from Virginia asked might be dispensed with.

Mr. BURTON. Well, then, the whole bill will be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 2, after line 11, to insert

To pay the Trans-Atlantic Fire Insurance Co., $9,500; Prussian National Fire Insurance Co., $2,850; North German Fire Insurance Co., $8,000; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Co., $10,450; Royal Insurance Co., $25,100; Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Co., $6,900; New Zealand Insurance Co., $6,025; Fireman's Fund Insurance Co., $9,250; National Fire Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., $4,150; Caledonia Insurance Co., of Edinburgh, Scotland, $750; in all, $82,975, the aforesaid sums being the amounts paid by each of the said companies on account of insurance against fire on property in the Territory of Hawaii, which property was destroyed by the Government in the suppression of the bubonic plague in said Territory in the years 1899 and 1900.

Mr. BURTON. I am not going to oppose that item; I know it has been before Congress for a very long time; and in the discussion upon it which once occurred its merits were clearly set forth. I believe in several instances it has been adopted by the Senate but stricken out by the other House. I do wish, however, to say something in regard to the proper scope of a deficiency appropriation bill.

As the very name imports, a deficiency bill is a measure which includes provisions for branches of the public service appropriated for in regular appropriation bills, but for which provision has proved incomplete or insufficient. Under any ideal system a bill of this nature should be restricted to that class of items. There has been a marked tendency, however, in recent years to bring into this measure very old items, which have been heretofore considered and rejected. There are certain manifest disadvantages about that—the dangers of mistake.

This bill is considered by the Committee on Appropriations; some of the items inserted here have been theretofore considered by other committees of the House or Senate—by the Post Office Committee, by the Agricultural Committee, or some other committee. There is danger that, after careful consideration has been given to a proposed appropriation by a committee other than the Committee on Appropriations, the item will be disposed of without sufficient information or consideration of the subjects. I do wish to express my objection—I may say my protest—against making this deficiency bill a sort of omnium gatherum in which all sorts of items are included. I ask the Senator from Virginia why this item has not been placed upon some bill other than the deficiency bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio can answer that question as easily as can I. I have no idea whether it was ever incorporated in a bill or, if rejected, why that was done. The item that is inserted here has passed the Senate, it has had the approval of this body as well as of the committee of this body. It seemed to the committee to be an exceedingly urgent matter. When the Government burns up the property of its citizens in order to prevent a plague from spreading through the community, it seems to me restitution ought to be made as soon as possible. The committee so thought. It is for the Senate to say, and, if the Senator from Ohio objects to the item, the Senate will have to determine the question.

Mr. BURTON. I am not going to object, but I think it is an erroneous policy in making up our appropriation bills. I do not see how it can be very urgent, for the claim seems to be at least 14 years old.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is a deficiency in the sense that Congress appropriated over a million dollars—I think a million and a half dollars—for the purpose of paying for property destroyed in the Hawaiian Islands to suppress the bubonic plague. At the time the appropriation was made, it was estimated that that amount would cover all of the just claims; but I think that over $2,000,000, as I remember, of claims at that time were filed, and so far as the amount of money appropriated would permit they were paid. These were claims that fell in the class of claims approved of later, but the appropriation was not sufficient to cover them. When these are paid, then all of these particular claims against the Government will have been paid. It is virtually a deficiency in the sense that there was not enough appropriated in the original bill to cover all of the claims against the Government.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator will yield to me, this is for reimbursement for claims paid by these respective insurance companies for property destroyed by the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct. I want to say to the Senator that there were claims, in addition to these provided for in this bill, amounting to $1,500,000, which have been paid, and these would have been paid immediately if the original appropriation had been sufficient to cover them. The only reason why these claims have not been paid is, as I have stated, that the amount of the appropriation was paid out before these claims were reached.

Mr. BURTON. When was the appropriation of $1,500,000 made?

Mr. SMOOT. In 1901 or 1902, I think—I have forgotten the exact date.

Mr. BURTON. Was the provision made in an appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Provision was made in an appropriation bill to cover the other claims.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator from Utah recall in which appropriation bill the provision was made?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not, because I have not had occasion to look it up. The matter has been before the Claims Committee many times, and the Claims Committee has reported bills on the subject at least half a dozen times. I myself five or six years ago favorably reported a bill on this subject to the Senate, and it was passed; but up to this time the matter has always been held up.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 10, to insert:

To pay the claim of H. H. Downing and A. G. Weaver, attorneys, for professional services rendered in connection with the acquirement, by purchase and condemnation, of 5,200 acres of land in Warren County, Va., for a remount station at Front Royal, Va., including traveling and all other expenses incurred in attendance upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia at Lynchburg and Charlottesville, and the condemnation commission at Front Royal, said services embracing the period from June 6, 1911, to August 6, 1913, $5,000: Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated shall be in full satisfaction of all services hereafter to be rendered by said Downing and Weaver in connection with the purchase or condemnation of said land.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill why the Government should be required to pay attorneys not connected with the Department of Justice for services such as are described in this amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that Congress appropriated $200,000 to acquire land for a remount station. It required legal services far beyond the possibility of the district attorney. There were 45 tracts of land to be acquired, about 18 of them, I believe, in condemnation proceedings, which required going to half a dozen counties in Virginia. I will not go into the details, but it became absolutely necessary to employ special counsel.

Mr. THOMAS. These were employed by the Department of Justice?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know that they were employed by the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice approves the payment of the amount. They were employed by the War Department. The War Department had charge of the acquisition of this land.

Mr. THOMAS. This sum has been approved by the Department of Justice?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Substantially it has. The testimoney taken before the——

Mr. THOMAS. By the proper authorities, at any rate?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has. It was agreed on by the quartermaster officer, Capt. Conrad, who was in charge of the work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 26, after line 10, to insert:

Lincoln Memorial Commission: Authority is hereby given to pay H. A. Vale for services as secretary of the Lincoln Memorial Commission from March 16, 1913, to February 7, 1914, the sum of $1,000 from appropriations now available for the erection of the Lincoln Memorial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 16, to insert:

To erect at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., under the direction of the Secretary of War, a monument in memory of Francis Scott Key, author of The Star-Spangled Banner, and the soldiers and sailors who participated in the Battle of North Point and the attack on Fort McHenry in the War of 1812, $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. In the preparation of the plans and selection of a site for said monument, and the execution of all work in connection therewith, the Secretary of War shall form a committee, composed of the mayor of Baltimore, the chairman of the National Star-Spangled-Banner Centennial, the president of the board of park commissioners of Baltimore, and two other persons, to be designated by the Secretary of War, whose suggestion he shall invite and with whom he may confer and consult: Provided, however, That the decision of the Secretary of War shall be final in all matters: Provided, That the money herein appropriated may be drawn from time to time, as required in the progress of the work, upon requisition of the Secretary of War.

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order against this amendment that it is general legislation proposed to an appropriation bill, and that it is not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I wish to say that I introduced a bill in the Senate appropriating this sum of money some little while back, and that bill has been reported to the Senate, and is on the calendar to-day.

I hope there will be no opposition to this item. Ordinarily I would not ask for its insertion in a deficiency bill, as I am satisfied it will pass the Senate. It has been considered and favorably reported by the Senate Committee on the Library. My reason for asking that it be put in this deficiency bill is because between September 6 and September 16 there is to be a celebration commemorating the Battle of North Point, Fort McHenry, and the author of the anthem "The Star-Spangled Banner." Except for that I would not ask it.

I think this is a most appropriate time and occasion for starting this monument; and if the Senate will indulge me for a few moments I should like to give my reasons. I have informed myself recently as to the historical facts, especially in regard to the most decided and influential part that was taken by the State of Maryland in the War of 1812.

Whatever controversy there may be as to the propriety and justness of the declaration of war by the United States on Great Britain on June 18, 1812, there is no controversy as to the importance of Maryland's part in that war. The war was popular in Maryland. Her people were driven by a deep and sincere faith in the justice of the cause to respond to President Madison's call and the requisition of the Twelfth Congress by an appropriation made at an extra session of the legislature of $20,000, a large sum for those days, to aid the war. Maryland at the same time raised 6,000 men. A newspaper and its editor who opposed the war were mobbed in Baltimore. Later, after the ignominious surrender by Gen. Hull at Detroit, Maryland raised a regiment, commanded by Col. William Winder, and $15,000 by popular subscription to fit it out, in addition to manning all the forts and coast defenses within the State with little or no Federal aid, and when the United States Government asked a war loan of $16,000,000 Maryland, though a small and then sparsely populated State, subscribed $3,000,000 of the loan. After all, probably no conflict has ever been undertaken with so little thought as to the means of carrying it to a successful termination.

The War of 1812 might have ended with an almost unbroken succession of defeats sustained by our soldiers on land except for the Battle of New Orleans, when Andrew Jackson so decisively defeated the British, and the Battle of North Point, a few miles east of Baltimore, on September 12, 1814.

In 1813 Admiral Cockburn, with his British fleet, had blockaded the Chesapeake and pillaged and terrorized the people along its shores. Towns were burned and private property wantonly destroyed.

In August, 1814, the British forces were further strengthened by the arrival of Admiral Cochrane and his fleet. With him came Gen. Ross and 3,000 veterans of the Napoleonic wars.

Except for a repulse by Maryland militia, at Caulk's field, when the British commanding officer, Sir Peter Parker, was killed, Admiral Cochrane and Gen. Ross met no effective opposition.

Admiral Barney had to destroy his own ships, fitted out at such pains and expense to the United States, to avoid capture by the British in the tributaries of the Potomac. Gen. Ross landed soldiers and sailors and marched to Bladensburg without difficulty, where he defeated and actually routed our troops, though far superior in numbers to his. President Madison, instead of serving a repast prepared for the American officers to enjoy after the anticipated victory, fled with his Cabinet across the Potomac, destroying the bridge behind him. Washington was pillaged and partially burned by an invading foe for the first and the last time.

Baltimore was selected as the next object of British attack. On Sunday, September 11, 50 British ships were within sight of the mouth of the Patapsco River, 14 miles below Baltimore. Gen. Samuel Smith, in charge of the American forces about Baltimore, perceived that the British would land troops and attack the city by land and water.

Everybody in Baltimore, in anticipation of the British attack, had drilled or thrown up fortifications about the city. Volunteers far exceeded the available arms. Fort McHenry, named for Washington's Secretary of War, guarded the city's inner harbor. Temporary defenses elsewhere were hastily thrown up and batteries installed. The city was in an uproar.

Seventeen hundred men under Gen. Stricker were sent out on Sunday down the Philadelphia road to what is now the North Point road. They encamped about an old meeting house some 4 miles from the present modern fortifications, known as Fort Howard, or North Point, at the junction of the Patapsco River and Chesapeake Bay. Maryland did not contribute all the men destined that Sunday night to take part in the battle of the following day, for in Gen. Stricker's command were companies from Marietta, Hanover, and York, Pa.

Early Monday, September 12, the British forces landed at North Point, where Fort Howard now stands. Gen. Robert Ross was in command; with him was Admiral Cockburn. Admiral Cockrane remained aboard ship. Four miles' march up Patapsco Neck brought the British face to face with the Americans. Gen. Ross, veteran of the wars in Egypt, on the Peninsula, and in Holland, was killed in a skirmish before the actual battle began, presumably by two Maryland boys, Wells and McComas, who were in turn killed later in the day. Buried together, their grave is marked by a handsome and fitting monument which is a familiar landmark in Baltimore, and marks the place their bodies have rested nearly a century, now in one of the busiest sections of the city.

Early in the afternoon of Monday the 12th the battle between the British veterans and the nondescript collection of Americans began. After an hour and a half's fight Gen. Stricker retired in good order toward the city, to Worthingtons Mill. Next day the British followed, but never attacked the American forces again on land, and withdrew Tuesday, the 13th of September. The day following the Battle of North Point the British fleet attacked and bombarded Fort McHenry. During most of the day all the ships lay beyond the reach of the American guns. Finally three British ships ventured within range, but within half an hour were driven back to the old anchorage. One, the Erebus, was saved from destruction with great difficulty.

During the night of the 13th 1,250 men were sent from the British ships in barges with scaling ladders to storm and take the American defenses. Two barges were sunk and a number of the attacking party killed before the British withdrew. The bombardment continued all through the night of the 13th and did not cease until 7 o'clock on the 14th. Nearly 2,000 shells were discharged from the British ships, and but 4 Americans were killed and 24 wounded. In the land engagement at North Point on Monday the 12th 150 Americans and 600 British were killed.

Peace was declared on December 24, 1814—a Christmas present to the country. Thus one of the few successful land engagements of the war came at the end, and, like the Battle of New Orleans, did much to reestablish the reputation of American arms; for the brilliant exploits and successes of Decatur, a Marylander, at sea and of Perry on the Lakes exceeded anything done on shore.

The Battle of North Point and the futile bombardment of Fort McHenry next day were not big battles, it is true. They resulted immediately in preventing the sack and pillage of Baltimore and redeemed in a measure the earlier mortifying experiences of the war, besides making possible better and quicker terms of peace. Such material results are not to be despised, but, on the other hand, are to be desired and appreciated. Even now, however, it can not be doubted that the greatest good to our Nation growing out of the two days' fight and the one thing which has done most to foster and stimulate our patriotism as a Nation is entirely due to an accident, or, perhaps it is wiser to say, a Providence.

Francis Scott Key, a very young man of extraordinary patriotism and talent, had gone on board one of the British ships several days before under a flag of truce to render some service to a family friend taken on board a British ship down the bay as a prisoner on some capricious charge.

Fearing Key might divulge their plans if released before the battle, the British detained him on board the Minden, which was anchored during the bombardment out of harm's way. It was from the deck of the Minden that Key watched throughout the day of the 13th the bombardment of Fort McHenry. Through the darkness of the night of the 13th, pacing the deck of the ship of an unfriendly power at war with his native Government, he thought those immortal thoughts which found expression and permanent being in the lines of the "Star-Spangled Banner." On the 14th of September he and his friend were released by the British, and he completed his poem, begun during the actual noise and suspense of the conflict. On the 15th it was first printed. This is the plain story of the way our national anthem was born. It will never die.

The State of Maryland and the city of Baltimore invite the people of the whole United States to share with them and to celebrate with them the centennial anniversary of the birth of this same stirring anthem.

It is fitting that the Government of all the people should have a part, and the largest part, in this celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the triumph of American military valor, and literary inspiration unsurpassed. While the love of country, while memories of great and brave men who have made our land, and while the sentiment which has stirred every true American for nearly 100 years who has heard the inspired words and quickening strains of the Star-Spangled Banner can not be reduced to terms of dollars and cents, some more precious medium of exchange must be used; still it is not amiss to remind the Senate that participation in this celebration befitting the occasion and this Government can not be had cheap.

The municipal government of Baltimore, headed by Mayor Preston, have dealt energetically with the scheme for this celebration; committees of citizens and patriotic organizations have banded together and laid out a tasteful, interesting, and dignified program for this centennial celebration to begin on September 6 and to end on September 13 next. The time is short; the necessity urgent for any action to be effective to be promptly taken. Maryland and the city of Baltimore have raised $150,000 toward the expenses of this celebration. We think it proper and we ask and urge the active cooperation of Congress in paying appropriate tribute and respect to a national benefaction, priceless to a patriotic people.

Mr. President, I think there is no more fitting time than this to help to celebrate this occasion by an appropriation from Congress of the amount provided in the amendment. I would say that I have had the bill before the Senate, and it has been reported favorably by the committee and is now on the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS. When was it reported?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It was reported yesterday. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not only not object to the amendment but will vote for it. I think it is entirely appropriate and it should be adopted.

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. SMITH of Maryland,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland will suspend for a moment. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

After the conclusion of the speech of Mr. SMITH of Maryland,

Mr. THOMAS. If a bill for this purpose has been favorably reported we can consider it on its merits. I object to such items being tacked on a general appropriation bill, because it is no part of a deficiency and can not be.

It is not the purpose of this bill, Mr. President, to act as a medium for the enactment of legislation which ought to stand upon its own merits. It is too much the custom of Congress to permit such things, in consequence of which large amounts of money are appropriated which upon their own merits might be rejected.

If the rule of the Senate is intended for anything it is intended for just such an emergency. It provides that—

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto.

Of course this must be submitted without debate under the rule. I did not see fit to raise the question of order, preferring the Senator from Maryland should have the courtesy of making his statement in regard to the item. That statement has consisted of a historical account of the battles around Fort McHenry and the circumstances under which the Star-Spangled Banner was written.

Mr. President, I of course do not in any way wish to detract from the historical value of that discussion or from the great service Mr. Francis Scott Key rendered to the Nation in writing the Star-Spangled Banner, but this country needs the money which it has in its Treasury for the living. There are many things that are insistent which are called to our attention but which can not receive proper consideration on account of the possible deficiency and on account of demands of this sort, which are increasing very naturally from time to time after the precedent has been started. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Colorado there was a similar bill before the Senate the other day, and he withdrew his point of order against it.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and my conscience has been haunting me ever since.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The reason why I have asked for the adoption of the amendment on this bill is, as I stated before, because of the appropriateness of the occasion and the time when we are going to give this celebration. Probably there will be 100,000 people from all over the country at the celebration in Baltimore, and a sum in excess of $150,000 has been appropriated by the State of Maryland and the city of Baltimore and subscribed by citizens to properly celebrate this event. My object in having the amendment go on this bill is because this is the most fitting time and occasion in which to start a monument for the sailors and soldiers of the Battles of North Point and Fort McHenry and the author of the anthem of the Star-Spangled Banner. I do hope the Senator from Colorado will take these facts into consideration and withdraw his point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. I will state that on the occasion to which the Senator refers I was satisfied it was largely due to the precedent established the year before with reference to the Battle of Lake Erie, and that in its turn would be followed by similar appropriations. If this thing continues we are going to be bedeviled by applications for appropriations for statues from all the States, for all occurrences which have historic value, and they will in all probability be presented in the shape of amendments to the deficiency and other general appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the amendment the Chair is inclined to submit the question of order to the Senate. The question is, Is the amendment proposed by the committee in order on this bill? [Putting the question]. The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, one moment. I did not understand the question as it was put to the Senate and I do not think that some other Senators did. I certainly did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will restate the question submitted to the Senate. Is the amendment proposed by the committee in order?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I submit respectfully that the question has been put and the amendment has been sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Chair does not care to have any misunderstanding of his position.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the question be put again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be put again. Is the amendment of the committee in order? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado demands a division. Senators who believe that the amendment is in order will rise and stand until counted. [A pause.] Those who believe it is not in order will rise and stand until counted. [A pause.] The ayes have it, and the Senate decides that the amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to be heard for just a minute, because in the committee I voted against putting this amendment as a rider upon the appropriation bill. My objection is not that it is not a very commendable event that ought to be celebrated, for it is, in fact, one of the great events, but my objection is due to the fact that it is not proper, in my judgment, to place it on this appropriation bill. I told the Senator from Maryland I would not make a point of order against the amendment, but that I would probably oppose it in the Senate.

Mr. President, there ought to be some general arrangement, some general plan of allowing monuments to be erected, if we are going to erect them outside of the District of Columbia. I understand that very few monuments have been erected by the United States Government outside of the District of Columbia, and it seems to me that we ought to adhere to the rule that they shall be erected here. If we do not adhere to it, as we have deviated from it in the case of the Battle of Lake Erie and the Battle of Lake Champlain, it ought to be under some general rule. It ought to be under a rule that the State or the city that desires the monument shall pay a certain proportion thereof.

It is true that the city of Baltimore and the citizens thereof have subscribed a large sum of money, probably $100,000.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and it will probably reach $200,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The city of Baltimore and the citizens have given that amount for this celebration, but the difficulty with that argument is that it is done for the purpose of getting people there. They expect to get the money back. The city of Denver gave $100,000 to get the Democratic national convention there, but it expected to get it back. Such contributions are made by cities not for the monument, but it is to draw great crowds. As the Senator from Maryland has said, 100,000 people will go to Baltimore at the centennial of this event.

There has been sent to me by some one, I do not know by whom, a pamphlet, and in that pamphlet there is an illustration showing a statue already of Key, the author of the Star-Spangled Banner, and it is a very beautiful monument. I understand that Fort McHenry is only a few miles away, that it is practically a part of the city of Baltimore, with street railway connections. Is it possible that we ought to have a monument erected in Baltimore at Fort McHenry when there is already a monument, beautiful in its design, which will probably cost $75,000, within a stone's throw, practically, of the monument that is proposed to be erected?

It does seem to me that that is one of the reasons why we ought not to attach such items on appropriation bills. They ought to be investigated and the question ought to be determined and there ought to be some kind of a pro rata arrangement between the city or State and the National Government, if the Government is going outside of the District of Columbia and erect monuments.

For that reason, Mr. President, it seems to me that this monument ought not to be paid for by the National Government as an entirety, even if we adopt such a theory; and I am opposed to going out of the District of Columbia except in the rarest case, such as we have done in one or two cases. I think it was not proper to do it in the case of Lake Champlain, which we passed the other day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask for a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Fortifications in insular possessions," on page 28, after line 7, to strike out:

The action of the Secretary of War in heretofore transferring submarine mines and appliances to operate them to the value of $17,075.78 from stock on hand for use in continental United States for the protection of harbors in the Philippine Islands is ratified and legalized.

And insert:

For the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them for closing the channels leading to our principal seaports, and continuing torpedo experiments, being in reimbursement of the cost of submarine mines and appliances to operate them transferred for the protection of harbors in the Philippine Islands, $17,075.78.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," subhead "General Land Office," on page 34, after line 16, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of George W. Evans, chief disbursing clerk, Department of the Interior, the payments made to James F. Gill for services rendered as superintendent of reconstruction and general repairs to the toilet rooms, Pension Office Building, from November 11, 1912, to May 31, 1913, at a compensation of $150 per month, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "United States courts," on page 37, after line 13, to insert:

For clothing and transportation, including the same objects specified under this head for this institution in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914, $51.07.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Commerce," at the top of page 40, to insert:

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

For payment to the Alaska Steamship Co. for damage inflicted by the Coast and Geodetic Survey steamer McArthur to the steamer Dora of the Alaska Steamship Co., $25.10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 5, to insert:

For payment to the Hartford & New York Transportation Co. for damage to the barge C. T. Marston by the Coast and Geodetic Survey steamer Hydrographer on August 30, 1913, $121.42.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 41, after line 7, to insert:

To pay to Mrs. Margaret D. Bradley, widow of Hon. William O. Bradley, late a Senator from the State of Kentucky, the sum of $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 10, to insert:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, as follows:

For salaries of clerk, $2,220 per annum; assistant clerk, $1,440 per annum, and messenger at $1,200 per annum, to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor from July 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915, and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 19, to insert:

To pay to James M. Porter, at the rate of $2,000 per annum, from March 26 to April 6, 1913, and Nettie K. De Freitas, at the rate of $1,200 per annum, from March 26 to April 14, 1913, as clerk and stenographer to Senator SHERMAN.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 42, to insert:

To pay to E. W. Lillard, at the rate of $2,220 per annum, Rella M. Lane, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, and Ephraim S. Lillard, at the rate of $1,200 per annum, the same being for services as clerk, assistant clerk, and messenger, respectively, to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, for 60 days' services, from May 7, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 6, to insert:

To pay to L. W. Jones for services as assistant clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs from June 1 to 4, and from July 1 to 15, 1914, at the rate of $1,440 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 10, to insert:

To pay to R. B. Nixon for compensation and expenses in disbursing for the Joint Committees on Federal Aid in the Construction of Post Roads; to Investigate Second-Class Mail Matter; to Investigate General Parcel Post; and to Investigate the Purchase of American-Grown Tobacco by Foreign Governments, from January, 1913, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 17, to insert:

To pay Hon. Blair Lee for expenses incurred by him in the proceedings involving the validity of his credentials and his right to a seat in the United States Senate, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 20, to insert:

To pay Hon. Frank P. Glass for expenses incurred by him in the proceedings involving the validity of his credentials and his right to a seat in the United States Senate, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 43, to insert:

To pay to Frank Oliver for extra services as clerk to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, $750.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that we are considering committee amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We are, by unanimous consent. If the Senator wishes to offer an amendment, he will have to wait until we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. My only reason for not waiting is that I am very anxious to leave the Chamber.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It would be a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement. I would have no objection, but I do not think it would be proper to have the unanimous-consent agreement violated by anyone.

Mr. SIMMONS. After that statement by the Senator, I shall not insist upon offering the amendment now.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 2, to insert:

To pay Atwell J. Clopton, as additional compensation for extra services rendered the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary engaged in the investigation of the maintenance of a lobby, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 92, during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-third Congress, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 8, to insert:

To pay Dennis M. Kerr for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-third Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 13, to insert:

To reimburse the official reporters of debates for moneys actually and necessarily expended by them to June 30, 1914, $3,000, and to pay Eugene C. Moxley, clerk on Journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for extra services, $400; in all, $3,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 16, to insert:

JUDGMENTS, UNITED STATES COURTS.

For payment of the final judgments and decrees, including costs of suits, which have been rendered under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," certified to Congress at its present session by the Attorney General in Senate Document No. 546, and which have not been appealed, namely:

Under Department of the Interior, $1,228.60.

In all, $1,228.60; together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date thereof until the time this appropriation is made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 46, line 9, after the words "One thousand and forty-nine," to insert "and Senate Document No. 647," so as to read:

For the payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 1049 and Senate Document No. 547, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 12, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$29,208.52" and insert "$30,438.65," so as to make the clause read:

Under War Department, $30,438.65.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 13, after the words "Navy Department," to strike out "$20,302.20" and insert "$20,601.10," so as to make the clause read:

Under Navy Department, $20,601.10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 17, after the words "Treasury Department," to strike out "$48,596.54" and insert "$49,736.76," so as to make the clause read:

Under Treasury Department, $49,736.76.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 19, after the words "In all," to strike out "$102,270.97" and insert "$104,940.13," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $104,940.13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 1, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1912 and other years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. 548, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. I wish to say that being at work on the Judiciary Committee, while I did receive a notice of the meeting of the Committee on Appropriations, I was negligent in not bringing it to the attention of the committee. I believe the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will state the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] wishes to leave the Chamber on an urgent matter, and I ask the junior Senator from North Carolina to withhold his amendment for a few moments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly; I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SIMMONS. Between lines 2 and 3, on page 43, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Frank G. Jones for 15 days' extra services rendered to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals during the tolls hearing the sum of $75.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the following amendment——

Mr. OVERMAN. I have sent an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will indulge the Chair. There is an amendment pending. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] moves to amend, on page 55, after line 15, by inserting the following:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby directed to adjust, settle, and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed in all the sum of $175,000, to officers of the Army, their heirs or legal representatives, pay as commutation for longevity rations, or other pay or allowances that may be due said officers, their heirs or legal representatives, under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding, which claims have been heretofore barred from adjustment and settlement by section 3480, United States Revised Statutes, repealed by act of Congress approved July 6, 1914.

Mr. OVERMAN. Congress at the present session repealed section 3480. The Senate had repealed the section several times, but it had always failed in the House of Representatives. It went to the House of Representatives at this session, and by an almost unanimous voice the House repealed the section. To carry out the repeal of the section and allow the Confederate soldiers who fought in the war, such as Gen. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, and others, to receive the amount of money that is actually due them on the books of the Treasury Department I have introduced the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the amendment may be inserted at the end of the bill, after line 9, on page 58.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well, let it be inserted at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 8, insert the following:

To pay Byford E. Long, jr., for indexing and extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, Sixty-third Congress, first and second sessions, $800.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I offer this amendment in behalf of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. The object of it is to pay the clerk of the Committee on Pensions a sum somewhat smaller than has been heretofore paid to that official for extra services rendered during a session of Congress. For the past 15 years such an appropriation has been made, and in nearly every case a larger sum has been appropriated. The Committee on Pensions have been extraordinarily busy during the present session. They have acted upon something like 3,300 bills. This is an extremely faithful official, who has rendered a great amount of laborious service, and has done everything in his power to facilitate the work of the Senate. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senate may dispose of this matter as it sees fit; I am not going to say anything in opposition to it. But I am going to say, in order that Senators may understand the course I will pursue in the future, that this has been, it seems, an abuse for 15 years, and there could not be a more flagrant abuse than the practice of increasing a salary by a donation at the end of a session. It has been running through a period of 15 years, and I am not opposing it at this time; but I give notice that hereafter I will raise the point of order and I will resist to the utmost such gratuities asked for at the closing hours of the consideration of an appropriation bill. If the salaries paid are not sufficient, and if Senators will come before the committee with amendments to the law increasing the compensation of the employees of their committees, such amendments will have careful consideration, but this is the last time that I will sit quiet and not oppose what I consider an intolerable abuse.

We know nothing about these things. There is not a committee clerk in the employ of the Senate in behalf of whom Senators might not get up here and make the same statement. I want some system about this matter, but I will say not one word against this amendment. It has been done, it seems, from time immemorial; but this is the last time that I shall acquiesce, if I can prevent it, in an appropriation of this sort.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following:

To pay Byford E. Long, jr., for indexing and extra services as clerk to the Committee on Pensions, Sixty-third Congress, first and second sessions, $800.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of July, 1914, including the Capitol police, the Official Reporters of the Senate and House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I raise a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. My point of order is that this proposed appropriation is not estimated for or reported by a standing or select committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the rule is perfectly plain. Why does the Chair wish to submit the question to the Senate? It has been raised before, and has always been sustained. I do not know that anybody will contend that the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I made a similar point of order a few moments ago, but my recollection is that the Senator from Florida voted against it.

Mr. BRYAN. That has nothing to do with this case. The Senator's point of order was not good.

Mr. THOMAS. It was a good point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. It was not. I repeat, this amendment has not been estimated for.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true, and I stand corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has been advised that a point of order like the one now made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] has been heretofore made and has been overruled. The Chair has the privilege of submitting the point of order to the Senate, and he therefore so submits it.

Mr. BRYAN. The point of order has never heretofore been overruled to my knowledge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has the privilege of submitting the point of order to the Senate, and does submit it to the Senate. All who believe the amendment is in order will make it known by saying "aye." [A pause.] Those who believe the amendment is not in order will make it known by saying "no." The noes have it, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it is not a pleasant task to raise this point of order. There are many employees who do real work around the Senate and the other House whom I would be perfectly willing to see paid more money on account of the long sessions of Congress, although I believe the salaries ought to be fixed in accordance with the work done. I will vote as freely and as willingly as will any other Senator to pay just salaries; but, sir, the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota goes much further than that, for it means an additional appropriation of between $150,000 and $200,000. I can not get my consent to sit silently by, without raising the point of order, to pay that sum to people already receiving as much money, if not more money, than they could in any other activity of life, either in private or public employment.

I have raised this point of order on every appropriation bill upon which it has been offered, and I shall continue to do so, because I do not believe we have, in good conscience, the right to take a sum of money ranging, perhaps, up to $200,000 to pay to employees some of whom are getting good salaries for but little work.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. KERN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to any trust company or other claimant, taxes erroneously assessed or illegally collected under section 2 of the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898 (30 Stat. L., p. 448), from such trust company or other claimant on its capital, surplus, or undivided profits, in accordance with the decisions of the circuit court of appeals in the case of Treat, collector v. The Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. and the Central Trust Co., of New York (185 Fed. Repts., pp. 760 to 765).

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, this amendment simply provides that the United States shall pay this money, which it owes according to the decision of the court. It is conceded by the Secretary of the Treasury that such is the case. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know that I comprehend the force of the amendment. I should like to have it again read.

Mr. KERN. It provides for the refund of taxes unlawfully collected.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I raise the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. There is a proper place for these claims before the proper committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit to the Senate the point of order raised by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, if there is any question about the United States owing these people the amount that is conceded by the Secretary of the Treasury, justification is found for this appropriation in the decision of the court. The matter has been heretofore before the committee, and I think the justice of it is conceded by everybody; no one disputes the justice of the claim.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if so, the Senate can take the matter up in the regular and proper manner and consider and pass it. We do not know how much money is involved in this amendment. Such claims ought to be properly presented. I am not usually very jealous about other committees; but we have a Committee on Claims established for the purpose of considering claims against the Government, where the evidence is looked into, where the amount of the claim is examined, and where reports from the departments as to the amount of such claims are asked for and sent to the committee. I think it is bad legislation to put a wholesale amendment on a deficiency or other appropriation bill without knowing what is the amount involved or what are the circumstances of the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Senator from Florida any idea of the amount which will be involved?

Mr. BRYAN. I have none whatever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Senator from Indiana any idea of it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I addressed the Chair to take the floor in my own right. I thought the Senator from Florida was through. I rose to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. Evidently this matter is to be submitted to the Senate, and we want to vote correctly on it if we can. I ask the Senator from Indiana to make a brief statement covering this case. What are the facts?

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, the matter has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations very frequently at different times, and I presume the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] knows more about it than do I. I have no interest in the claim at all. I offer the amendment because two trust companies in my State have made this claim to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I understand that a number of other trust companies have done likewise.

The claim is for taxes erroneously assessed and illegally collected under the war-revenue act of 1898. The Secretary of the Treasury, I know—for I have seen his written statement to that effect—admits the justice of these claims; but he contends that under the existing statute he is without power to pay them and has relegated these people to Congress for their remedy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the circuit court of appeals given a favorable opinion on the claims?

Mr. KERN. The circuit court of appeals in the case referred to here of Treat, collector, v. The Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. and the Central Trust Co. of New York have so decided. That decision is accepted as the law by the Treasury Department.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a great many times during my service here stated that if the United States were a private party or a corporation, and there was a law that would incarcerate persons or corporations for not paying their honest debts, the United States would be in jail all the time.

Mr. KERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I have put myself on record as being in favor of paying every just claim that a citizen of this country has against the United States. I do not know but it would bankrupt the Government, for the Government is treating its citizens in this regard shamelessly, as I look at it. As the court has decided that this is a just claim, and as it is not controverted by the department, as I understand, I certainly shall vote in favor of putting it on any bill that it can properly be put on until it is paid.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to say, in reply to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], that I should like to have the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read.

Mr. KERN. I have not the letter at hand.

Mr. BRYAN. Who has this information?

Mr. KERN. The Senator will have to take my word for some things. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I think, is acquainted with the circumstances.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, my recollection is that some of the tax collected under the war-revenue act of 1898 has been refunded, and bills have been pending before the Committee on Claims a good many times providing for additional refunds. Some of those who paid, as they had a right to do, at the time the tax was collected paid the money under protest or filed claims within a certain period of time. Sixteen years have elapsed since that tax was levied, and now on this fragmentary showing and upon the recollection of some one as to what the Secretary of the Treasury says ought to be paid, we are asked to appropriate an unknown sum.

These claimants have had their remedy in the courts; and the committees of the Senate have been open to them for 16 years to make any showing they could that they had either legal or equitable claims which could have received the attention of the Senate. I think there can be no question that the point of order is well taken, because no Senator will undertake to say that this is not general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment in order? Senators in favor of declaring the amendment in order will vote "aye"——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to know how the question is going to be put to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators who believe the amendment is in order will vote "aye"; those who do not believe the amendment is in order will vote "no."

Mr. BRYAN. The question does not come upon the merits of the amendment, but it comes upon the question of whether the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so stated. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Chair would put the question in that way, for that is the way in which it should be put.

Mr. President, I feel that there is no doubt that the point of order lies against this amendment. I should dislike to be put in the position by voting to incorporate the amendment in the bill of voting at the same time against what I believe to be an absolute compliance with the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Utah think it is general legislation? Does he think that point is well taken?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. On a matter that relates to two corporations?

Mr. SMOOT. We can not tell how many it refers to; it is general legislation covering everybody who would come under the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not so understand.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be one, or it may be a thousand; we can not say how many there will be.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are but two named in the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. The amendment could not be framed in much more general language than it is. It applies to everybody who comes within its terms.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore, if the question is put in that way, I shall have to vote that the point of order is well taken, because I think that it is, and I believe that under our rules the ruling of the Chair could not be otherwise than to sustain the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is, Is the amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it; the noes have it, and the amendment is declared to be out of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, at the request of the department, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it be inserted in the proper place in the bill. If the point for its insertion indicated on the amendment is an improper place, I ask that the Secretary may change it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

BUREAU OF FISHERIES.

Fish hatchery, Saratoga, Wyo.: For addition to the Saratoga, Wyo., fisheries station, including construction of buildings and ponds, improvement to water supply, and for equipment, to remain available until expended, $25,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if an estimate has been made for that amendment?

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that I have just received a letter from the department regarding this matter. If the Senator would like to hear it, I will ask that the letter be read.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the letter be read.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send the letter to the Secretary's desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 18, 1914.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Knowing your interest in the establishment and construction of the Saratoga, Wyo., fish-cultural station, I beg to call your attention to the condition which now exists in connection with the funds available for this purpose. Of the $25,000 appropriated, $2,000 has been expended for land and water rights and $250 for incidental items, including travel, surveys, etc. The balance of $22,500 it is proposed to use in the construction of a hatchery building, superintendent's residence, tool house, and other small buildings, water supply, a stock pond and two rearing ponds, and general equipment.

With the above work completed the station will be established and may be operated in a limited way. The experience of the Bureau of Fisheries has, however, amply proved that an appropriation of $25,000 is not enough to procure a site, construct, fully equip, and complete a modern and efficient fish-cultural station, and the investigations in connection with the Wyoming site have confirmed this.

In order to complete this station so as to get the best results it will require at least $25,000 more than is now available. This additional sum would be expended in the development of the water supply, construction of more stock ponds, rearing ponds, and buildings, and the purchase of more equipment, and would enable the Bureau to more than double its output of the valuable fishes of Wyoming.

It is therefore suggested that the following item be incorporated in the deficiency bill now before the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

"Fish hatchery, Saratoga, Wyo.: For addition to the Saratoga, Wyo., fisheries station, including construction of buildings and ponds, improvement to water supply, and for equipment, to remain available until expended, $25,000."

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I should like to inquire when was the original $25,000 authorized?

Mr. WARREN. It was appropriated some three years ago.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Why has it taken so long to complete the work?

Mr. WARREN. Because they were not able to secure title to the land until within the last three months.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 15, after line 19, I move to amend the bill by inserting the following:

Spanish Fork, Utah, post office: For site and commencement, $7,500.

I will state to the chairman——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah is merely to cover an omission inadvertently made by the department. It is similar to other items in the bill, and ought to be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. I will ask that the amendment be stated at the desk. I did not catch it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

Spanish Fork, Utah post office: For site and commencement, $7,500.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that a couple of years ago a bill passed authorizing the construction of a post office at Spanish Fork, Utah, and $50,000 was appropriated for that purpose. The department have just called my attention to the fact that they have now assurance that the site can be purchased within the limit fixed by the law, and the amendment simply follows the lines of similar items which are already included in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On behalf of the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 19, after line 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

Refund of sums paid for documentary stamps: The time within which claims may be presented for refunding the sums paid for documentary stamps used on foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries, specified in the act entitled "An act to provide for refunding stamp taxes paid under the act of June 30, 1898, upon foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries and authorizing rebate of duties on anthracite coal imported into the United States from October 6, 1902, to January 15, 1903, and for other purposes," approved February 1, 1909, be, and is hereby, extended to December 31, 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is to relieve certain grain exporters who filed claims in due time in accordance with the law, but at the time were not able definitely to state the exact amounts to which they were entitled. Afterwards, on learning the amount of the documentary stamps which they had purchased and put upon bills of exchange, they discovered that the claims they had filed did not amount to half the actual sums expended by them. In the meantime the limit of time prescribed by the law within which claims might be filed had been reached. This is simply to extend the law so that they can file their claims and be paid for those stamps under a provision of the law which, after the matter had gone to the courts, was found to be unconstitutional.

Mr. BRYAN. I raise the point of order that the amendment proposed is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask if the point of order was sustained on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]?

Mr. BRYAN. It was.

Mr. KERN. Yes; it was.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, if the point of order lies against that amendment it also lies against this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A similar point of order having been submitted to the Senate this morning and sustained by the Senate, the Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph on page 39, after the amendment agreed to on motion of Mr. WARREN, the following:

Fish hatchery, Baker Lake, Wash.: For the reconstruction of the hatchery building and barn recently destroyed by fire, $4,500.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have a letter, which I received only a few moments ago, from the Secretary of Commerce urging the adoption of this amendment. It is very brief, and I will read it:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 18, 1914.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Knowing your interest in the operations of the Bureau of Fisheries in salmon propagation on the Pacific coast, your attention is respectfully called to the total destruction of the hatchery building and barn at the Baker Lake (Wash.) station of the bureau.

Unless this hatchery building can be reconstructed before the fall run of salmon occurs, it will be impossible to conduct fish-cultural operations at Baker Lake during the current fiscal year. There are no funds now available for this, and it is suggested that the following item be incorporated in the deficiency bill now before the Senate Committee on Appropriations:

"Fish hatchery, Baker Lake, Wash.: For the reconstruction of the hatchery building and barn recently destroyed by fire, $4,500."

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

In order that the information may be available for consideration in connection with this matter later on, I should like to state very briefly the extent and nature of the work done at this hatchery. It is the principal fish hatchery in the State of Washington, or was so regarded before it was destroyed by fire.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to inquire whether the structures were insured?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not advised whether or not they were insured. My impression is that the Government does not insure its buildings.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that public buildings are not insured in the District of Columbia. I do not know how it may be outside of the District, but there is no insurance carried on Government buildings in the District.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this fish hatchery is in a forest reserve at the head of Baker River and on Baker Lake, and is devoted to the propagation of blueback salmon, silver salmon, humpback salmon, and steelhead trout. Its output for the last five years has been 47,905,000. For the last three years the annual output has been as follows: In 1912, 6,371,000; in 1913, 7,666,000; and in 1914, 3,643,000. In 1914 the output fell off on account of the conditions being poor, and that year might be called an off year. Its chief output is blueback salmon, and it is the only hatchery in the State putting out that variety of salmon. This salmon is found in large quantities only in the Columbia and Skagit Rivers, and this hatchery is located near the Skagit River. The blueback salmon is a very valuable commercial variety, and it is most important that it should be maintained. To delay work and prevent any output next year would affect the salmon run for years hence.

As I have indicated, the Baker Lake Station is the Government's main station in the State of Washington. The Government has four or five other hatcheries, but Baker Lake is the main one, and the only one propagating the blueback variety of salmon.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Senator to say that the blueback salmon was found only in the Columbia River and what other river?

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the Skagit.

Mr. STONE. Are these fish very numerous in those streams?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are exceedingly numerous. It is one of the principal commercial varieties of the salmon in Puget Sound, and the run of salmon there is of very great commercial value.

Mr. STONE. I am asking to get light on a matter which I do not understand. What is the function of this fishery? Do they produce fish and distribute them?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They do.

Mr. STONE. Where are they sent?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are placed in the waters of these streams, where they develop and follow the usual life history of salmon. When they grow to a certain size they leave the streams and go to sea, and at a certain period they return to the streams; and as they return, under certain regulations, they are trapped and canned for the market.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I understand that; but I was curious to know why the natural production in streams would not be abundant to maintain the supply, without the semiartificial way of adding to or taking care of the supply to prevent its exhaustion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad the Senator asked that question. Of course it involves the entire policy of the artificial propagation of fish which the Government has been engaged in for many years and has developed to a very high point of efficiency, not only in regard to salmon, but in regard to cod, shad, and various inland fish.

As to why the natural reproduction of these fish is not sufficient to maintain the supply, my judgment is that it is because of the tremendous extent to which the fish are caught. It has been found from experience that unless some artificial aid is given they will be exterminated.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon an interruption, it is not only because of the increased destruction through the use of fish, but there is no period in the life of the fish when they are so susceptible to destruction by those forms of fish that take the eggs from the bed of the stream as at the egg period. It is a fact that carrying them through that period in these artificial fish hatcheries to the point where they can in a measure protect themselves by flight very largely increases the percentage of the development and preservation of the small fish. That is why the artificial production is so much preferable to the natural production at that particular point in their existence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on page 42, in line 20, after the figures "1,500," I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment on page 42, line 20, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

To pay to the Hon. K. I. Perky the sum of $267.12, being the compensation of a Senator of the United States for 13 days, January 25 to February 6, 1913, during which time he served as a Senator from the State of Idaho.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, there is no doubt about the justice of that amount. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

Martinsburg, W. Va., post office and courthouse: For extension, remodeling, rebuilding, reconstruction, or improvement, including installation of an elevator, $20,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As I understand, that is within the limit of cost, and the amendment ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, in order to make it as unobjectionable as possible, I will state that the amendment I send to the desk is offered by me for another Senator, Mr. REED. I have a memorandum in regard to it that I will read in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following, after line 18, on page 43:

To pay the following named for overtime and expert services rendered to the Committee on Banking and Currency, assisting in compiling and indexing the hearings on the federal-reserve act from October 20 to November 5, 1913, by detail from the Government Printing Office, the sum set opposite each name respectively: Helen C. McGown, $46.26; Elizabeth M. Eggert, $39.76; Elizabeth A. Spilman, $35.91; and Minnie B. Hegeman, $20.90; in all, $142.83.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who was obliged to leave the Chamber, left with me this memorandum about the amendment. He says:

The hearings on the Federal reserve act before the Banking and Currency Committee began September 2, 1913, and were concluded October 28. The hearings cover 3,200 printed pages.

It was necessary that the index of these hearings should be prepared immediately in order to have the volumes printed and before the Senate when the bill was taken up for consideration. The committee had no additional clerical assistance, the force consisting of a clerk and two stenographers. The Printing Office was called upon to detail expert assistants in connection with the indexing, and four young ladies were detailed in compliance with this request. They assisted the clerk, night and day, including Sundays, from the 20th of October to the 5th of November. They were paid for the regular hours of employment by the Government Printing Office, but have received no compensation for the extra time they put in at night and on Sundays. The provision proposed to be incorporated in the deficiency bill makes appropriation for payment to them for this extra service, only, at the rate they would have received had they been employed overtime by the Government Printing Office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, during the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill we had a most interesting hearing by certain blind people, and two appropriations were placed in the bill in aid of the blind. They were both lost in conference.

I observe that in this bill an appropriation for the library for the blind is inserted, which was one of the provisions which was in the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I will say that our legislation in the District of Columbia for the care of the blind is very imperfect and inadequate; but some very worthy people have established a home in Georgetown, and have constructed a new building, and they are taking care of blind people and teaching them trades as far as possible, and doing most excellent work.

I am very strongly in favor of the amendment which has been inserted in this bill for the library for the blind; but I am equally in favor of giving a little aid to this institution in Georgetown, which is in debt, having a mortgage upon its property.

The provision which appeared in the District of Columbia bill appropriated $10,000 for that purpose. I am going to offer an amendment, which I am sure the chairman of the committee will be willing should go to conference, giving them $5,000, which is the same amount that was included in the bill for the library for the blind.

I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 5, after the amendment agreed to at that point, it is proposed to insert:

AID TO THE BLIND.

Aid Association for the Blind: For aid, maintenance, improvement of grounds, and purchase of mechanical equipment for the workshop of the Aid Association for the Blind, located at 3050 R Street NW., $5,000, said sum to be expended under the direction and supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire why items of that kind are not included in the District of Columbia appropriation bill? What part have they in a bill of this sort?

Mr. GALLINGER. I had just explained to the Senate in a few words that this item, carrying an appropriation of $10,000, was inserted in the District bill and passed the Senate; but it was lost in conference, as was the item relating to the library for the blind, which has been put in this bill. I wanted this item to go to conference in conjunction with the other item, and if it is lost again, of course we can not help it; but it is a very worthy purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. I think if we can lavish $75,000 upon a celebration in Maryland, we can afford to spend $5,000 for the blind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry out the provisions of Senate resolution 68, agreed to June 30, 1914, directing him to "investigate and report, as far as it is practicable, upon the mortality and the disability by accident or by disease incident to or resulting from the various occupations in which the wage earners of the United States are engaged," the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ, through the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, such temporary assistance as may be necessary to tabulate the material secured in compliance with Senate resolution 68, to be paid from the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1915.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that this is simply another duplication of work. We have the Census Department now under the Department of Commerce. Yesterday afternoon I telephoned to the Census Office and asked the Census Office if they had the information asked for in this amendment. They told me that they had the information covering a little over one-half the United States. I asked them why they did not have it to cover the whole of the United States, and they stated that the reason was that the other States had laws that were not applicable to the collection of the proper information, or at least information in which they had absolute confidence.

This work never ought to be placed in the hands of another department of the Government. To-day, under the Department of Commerce, the Census Office has a complete corps of workers for the collection of this information. If we undertake this duplication of work, if we make this appropriation at this time for the Department of Labor to undertake it, it will be only the beginning of a system that will end in a bureau in that department with an appropriation of $100,000 or $200,000 every year.

I know the Senator may say that this is simply to collect the information at this time; but experience has shown that wherever it has been undertaken in any department it has never ceased, and this is simply asking another department of the Government to do work that is being done by one of the departments at the present time.

I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and not estimated for.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this amendment to the pending bill is to carry out a resolution previously passed by the Senate during this session. It is therefore in order. On page 17 of the Standing Rules of the Senate the Chair will see the language which I am about to read.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection let me call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the resolution of which the Senator speaks was not a joint resolution. It was only a Senate resolution and has no binding effect whatever. If it had been a joint resolution, and had become a law by the action of both Houses, then the Senator's contention would be sound.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The rules do not say "joint resolution."

Mr. SMOOT. That is what has always been held by the various presiding officers of the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The rules do not specify that it shall be a joint resolution. I call the Chair's attention to the plain language of the rule:

Or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course that means a law, and nothing can be a law unless passed by both Houses. Of course it does not say "joint resolution"; but it means and has always been held to mean a resolution passed by both Houses, which is a joint resolution or a concurrent resolution.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is merely the ipse dixit of the Senator from Utah. The plain language of this rule is that the amendment is in order if it is to carry out a resolution heretofore passed during this session.

I submit to the Chair that the plain language of the rule makes the amendment in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has read the rule. The Chair holds that under four conditions such an amendment is in order: Where it is to carry out the provisions of—

(1) Some existing law—

(2) Or treaty stipulation—

(3) Or act—

(4) Or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

The resolution having previously passed the Senate during this session, the amendment is in order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senator from Texas to agree to striking out three words. This amendment provides that the Secretary of Labor shall "investigate and report, as far as it is practicable, upon the mortality and the disability by accident or by disease incident to or resulting from the various occupations," and so forth.

If we go into an investigation of the question of diseases that may occur from vocational enterprises or labor, it is an endless journey, and I do not think it is practicable. I do not see how it can be determined, except to guess. A man has a chronic disease, we will say, and he has been employed in some class of labor, some manufacturing concern. I do not know how on earth any man is wise enough to determine whether that disease was produced by the labor in which he was engaged, or whether it may not have been hereditary, or whether it may not have been produced by some other cause.

I am quite in favor of the compensation act, so far as death and disability are concerned; but I am very fearful that if we go into this question of compensation for diseases incurred we will rue the day we adopted that course.

Therefore I move to strike from the amendment the words "or by disease," and I hope the Senator will agree to have those words eliminated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 5 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "or by disease."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, these statistics are merely to serve as a basis for investigating the very question the Senator suggests. It is not to say arbitrarily that certain occupations produce certain disease, but by getting these figures the department will endeavor to ascertain whether they do or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am still of opinion that it is a dangerous field to enter upon, and I will ask to have the motion submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendemnt to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment as amended, because if it has been amended it is not carrying out the provisions of a resolution and is general legislation on an appropriation bill and no estimate has been made for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken, and overrules it.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, or some member of the committee, in regard to an item on page 46. It is for the payment of judgments against the United States. In lines 2 to 5 these words are used:

> Together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from the date thereof until the time this appropriation is made.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is in the direct language of the statute. There is a statute that provides that interest shall be paid on judgments at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] raised the same question and wanted the committee not to put in that language, but it is in accordance with law. It is necessary to be put in. It is so provided by law.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in looking it up I found that section 10 of the Tucker Act specifically provides that 4 per cent interest shall be paid upon these judgments.

Mr. BURTON. What class of judgments?

Mr. SMOOT. Judgments of the United States courts.

Mr. BURTON. Does that include the Court of Claims?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. All judgments of circuit courts.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; all judgments of circuit courts. I was not aware of it until to-day.

Mr. BURTON. That is not true of the Court of Claims, is it?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I think not of the Court of Claims, because we never allow interest on judgments of the Court of Claims; but, as I say, section 10 of the Tucker Act specifically states that 4 per cent interest shall be paid on judgments of United States courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill on the calendar which has been passed by the House and unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands. It is House bill 1698.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 1698. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the title of the bill stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think I must object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Why does the Senator object?

Mr. PAGE. Because I think it is a bill that ought not to be passed. I have not examined all of it with sufficient care to say so positively at this time, but I think I shall have to object to its present consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Of course the Senator has that privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 20, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 18, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We would approach Thee, Almighty God, in the spirit of Him who taught us when we pray to say:

Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENGROSSMENT OF CLAIMS RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the orders which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Order No. 15.

Ordered, That in the engrossment of H. Res. 532 the Clerk be directed to strike out "[Connecticut]," on page 1, line 7; and also to insert in their proper alphabetical order the amendments offered under "Tennessee."

Order No. 16.

Ordered, That in the engrossment of H. Res. 451 the Clerk be directed to insert the amendment offered on page 2, under "Alabama," in their proper alphabetical order; and also, on page 4, line 10, to strike out "[Illinois]."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the orders which the Clerk has just reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the orders.

The question was taken, and the orders were agreed to.

CORRECTION.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in the nature of a correction of the RECORD. During a discussion in the House on July 15 I understood the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] to make the following statement, which I find is so transcribed by the reporter of debates:

> This administration has been able, through its policy of wise and peaceful methods, to bring peace and good order to that disordered country.

Referring in that statement to Mexico, which statement led me to make the following observation:

> Mr. Chairman, listening to the picture of order and peace having been restored in Mexico by this administration, as painted by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE], it occurred to me that that picture of order and peace and quietude could only have been painted and could only have been imagined by a gentleman from Colorado.

I find that in the RECORD the statement of the gentleman from Colorado now reads differently, and I have no criticism to make of the improvement which I admit has been made in that statement, for it seems nearer to the demands of the truth. It is as follows:

> This administration has been able, through its wise and peaceful policy, to bring about conditions that will result in peace and good order in that distracted country.

I make this statement, Mr. Speaker, merely to have it appear in the RECORD.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 16, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CLARK: I beg to hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Yours, very truly. CHARLES H. SLOAN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ELECTIONS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Illinois, I move that CHARLES H. SLOAN, of Nebraska, be elected a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and that Mr. SYDNEY ANDERSON, of Minnesota, be elected a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report these nominations.

The Clerk read as follows:

JULY 16, 1914.

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. UNDERWOOD: I beg to recommend the election of Hon. CHARLES H. SLOAN, of Nebraska, as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and Hon. SYDNEY ANDERSON, of Minnesota, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Yours, very sincerely,

JAMES R. MANN,
Chairman Conference Minority.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these gentlemen will be elected to these places.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Democratic caucus, I also move the election of the following gentlemen to the several committees named in the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nominations of Democratic caucus:

MICHAEL J. GILL, twelfth Missouri, to be a member of the following committees: Invalid Pensions, Labor, and Industrial Arts and Expositions.

W. O. MULKEY, third Alabama, to be a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

WILLIAM L. IGOE, eleventh Missouri, to be a member of the Committee on the Judiciary

E. Y. WEBB, ninth North Carolina, to be the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these gentlemen will be elected to the places named.

There was no objection.

USE OF REVENUE CUTTERS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury with relation to certain statements that were made in the House on the 11th day of July relative to his alleged violation of the law in the use of revenue cutters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject of remarks that were made about his abuse of the use of revenue cutters. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the letter read now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be read at this time.

The SPEAKER. That will get it into the RECORD surely.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from New York if the Secretary says anything in that letter in regard to the rumor that his son, at the time he was married, was using a revenue cutter on his honeymoon trip?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. MURDOCK. Who was married?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The son of the Secretary of the Treasury, as I have heard, used a revenue cutter for the purpose of making a honeymoon trip when he was married.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, no such statement as that has ever been made.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let us hear the letter read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think anybody would make such a preposterous statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the letter be read at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 17, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: My attention has been called to page 11971 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, dated July 11, 1914, where Mr. GOOD of Iowa made the following statement:

"It is a notorious fact that every Friday or thereabouts at this time of the year the revenue cutter Prairie leaves Boston, comes to Washington, and is loaded down with Democratic officials, and they are taken for a cruise down the Potomac at Government expense; but that would not be so bad if the violation of the law stopped there."

He then quotes a newspaper item in which it is stated that the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. McAdoo arrived at Mattapoisett, Mass., July 5, on the revenue cutter Onondaga. Mr. GOOD recites a provision of the law contained in the sundry civil bill approved July 7, 1884, which provides that "hereafter revenue cutters shall be used exclusively for the public service and in no way for private purposes." He then alleges that the Secretary of the Treasury has violated this law because he rode upon a revenue cutter, and exclaims: "If the public to-day had the power, in no uncertain terms it would demand the removal from office of the Secretary of the Treasury, who not only refuses to enforce this law but himself violates it."

Please allow me to thank you for having so effectively replied to these statements of Mr. GOOD, which I can ascribe only to utter ignorance on his part of the law and the long-standing practice of this department or to wanton misrepresentation.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

If the present Secretary of the Treasury has violated the law in going aboard a revenue cutter, then every Secretary of the Treasury since the passage of this law in 1884 has been a violator of the law. Every one of my Republican predecessors, namely, William Windom, Charles Foster, Lyman J. Gage, Leslie M. Shaw, George B. Cortelyou, and Franklin MacVeagh, as well as my Democratic predecessors, Hugh McCullough, Daniel Manning, Charles S. Fairchild, and John G. Carlisle, have been violators of the law. The fact is that neither I nor any of my predecessors, Republican or Democratic, have violated the law in going aboard revenue cutters. The Secretary of the Treasury is the head of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and has been since its foundation in 1792. The purpose of the service is, among other things, to patrol our coasts and the adjacent waters for prevention of smuggling, the destruction of derelicts at sea, and the rescue of life and property imperiled at sea. In the winter cruising season no revenue cutter is allowed to remain in port longer than 24 hours without a written explanation to the department. I consider it highly advantageous to the service for the Secretary of the Treasury himself to go aboard the revenue cutters and to cruise with them as frequently as possible, because it enables him to familiarize himself with the service generally, with the character and operation of the ships, and the manner in which the officers and crew are performing their duties. On two occasions within the last 17 months, when I have been on board revenue cutters, rescues were made at sea, and I secured knowledge which I have applied with great advantage in the administration of the Revenue-Cutter Service. During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913 (report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, is not yet ready), the Revenue-Cutter Service saved 327 lives and assisted vessels and cargoes imperiled at sea to the value of $10,626,610. This service, in cooperation with the Life-Saving Service, for the same year saved 4,423 lives and assisted in saving property valued at $16,659,545.

Permit me to say that my Republican and Democratic predecessors in this office have permitted Congressmen and Senators and other officers of the Government to go aboard the revenue cutters from time to time and upon such occasions as they thought it might be beneficial to the service. In all such instances officers of the Government have been permitted to use the revenue cutters only when it did not interfere with the proper cruising arrangements of the vessels, and always, as I understand it, upon the payment by such officials of their personal expenses on the ships.

Permit me also to say that the Presidents of the United States have frequently made use of the revenue cutters. I do not believe that such use was a violation of the law. President Taft and President Roosevelt have been on the revenue cutters at various times.

Mr. GOOD says: "It is a notorious fact that every Friday or thereabouts at this time of the year the revenue cutter Prairie leaves Boston, comes to Washington, and is loaded down with Democratic officials, and they are taken for a cruise down the Potomac at Government expense." This statement is utterly without foundation.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is no revenue cutter by the name of Prairie; there is a naval supply vessel by the name of Prairie—a sort of transport, which has been employed for some time in carrying men and supplies to and from the naval fleet in southern waters. I have no control whatever over the Prairie. No revenue cutter of any kind or character "leaves Boston every Friday or thereabouts and comes to Washington" for any purpose whatever, nor has any revenue cutter come from Boston to Washington or gone from Washington to Boston since I became Secretary of the Treasury. It is inconceivable how Mr. GOOD could have made such an untrue statement, especially when he could have ascertained the facts by merely inquiring at the department.

On the occasion to which Mr. GOOD refers, namely, July 5, 1914, I did arrive at Mattapoisett, Mass., on the revenue cutter Onondaga. The Onondaga was under cruising orders, and I accompanied her on that cruise. Every item of expense occasioned by my presence and that of my wife on the cutter was paid by me.

I have never at any time been on a revenue cutter when I have not paid every item of expense connected with my presence there. This is the only occasion upon which I have ever gone from Washington to Mattapoisett on a revenue cutter.

In the course of the debate, Mr. GOOD asked the following question: "Will the gentleman name some of the duties that might devolve upon the Secretary of the Treasury which would cause him to use a revenue cutter leaving New York Harbor with the American flag flying, and immediately after it was outside of the harbor the Secretary ordered the flag pulled down and its remaining down until they reached the port in Massachusetts where his summer home is?" If by this Mr. GOOD means to charge that any such incident as this occurred while I was on the Onondaga, the charge is unqualifiedly false. I have never given orders at any time concerning the flag, and the only time I have ever seen the flag lowered on a revenue cutter was at sunset, when on all revenue cutters, as well as on all naval vessels of the United States, the flag is lowered at sunset, and the salute to the flag is given.

As the administrative head of the service, I have done my utmost to learn as much as I can about the revenue cutters, because I am deeply interested in the brave men who run these ships and in the splendid humanitarian and other work they do. Not only is this lawful, but it is in the line of my duty. Such criticism as that of Mr. GOOD displays an utter lack of understanding of the law and the purposes for which the Revenue-Cutter Service is maintained.

With kind regards, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

W. G. MCADOO.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
House of Representatives.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11317. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building at Newcastle, Ind.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 304. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain saddles and bridles for the use of the national encampment, Knights of Pythias, to be held at Terre Haute, Ind., in July, 1914.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PADGETT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KITCHIN, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DILLON was granted leave to withdraw from the files the papers pertaining to H. R. 13560, no adverse report having been made thereon.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL DAM ACT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16053.

The SPEAKER. Before that question is put the Chair will announce for the benefit of the Kansas delegation that at 3 o'clock a special order begins to present and accept the statue of George W. Glick, placed in Statuary Hall. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16053.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16053, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16053, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD].

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to the subject of railway mail pay. There will be a bill considered next week, probably, in which this matter will be discussed to some extent. I understand at that time there will not be opportunity for general debate of any consequence, and I wish now to have an opportunity to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSSON].

Mr. FERGUSSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of inserting a letter from one of my constituents correcting a statement in a speech which I made not long ago relating wholly to a matter within New Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a short article from the National Field, which is the official organ of the National Farmers' Union. It seems recently John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency, said there were $500,000,000 now available under the new law for farm loans. The representative of this organization asked farm loans from national banks and failed to obtain them, and this is a recital of the attempt.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from the Cincinnati Enquirer on "The advancing tide of business."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER].

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on unsurveyed and untaxed lands in the State of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HAIR].

Mr. O'HAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD touching upon conditions both financial and commercial as they exist in Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL DAM ACT.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] will consume some time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat at a loss to know how I ought to proceed to discuss this bill. Had I spoken upon it a week ago, as I expected to, I should have condemned it as vigorously as my command of the English language would permit, for this bill, as reported from the committee, proposed the most complete surrender of public rights to special privilege that has ever been attempted within the memory of any man upon this floor. But as Members became acquainted with its provisions, such a storm of protest was aroused that a number of conferences were held between some of the proponents and some of the opponents of the bill in its present form, and as a result of such conferences the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will itself offer amendments to the bill removing most, if not all, of its vicious features. Therefore the quandary that I am in is whether to discuss the bill as it is reported from the committee and now stands before the House or to discuss it in the light of the amendments that will be offered by the committee. After reflecting upon the matter I have concluded that I ought to discuss the bill both in its present form and also as it will stand if the amendments which I understand will be offered by the committee are adopted.

I believe it proper to discuss it in its present form, because in voting upon amendments it will be helpful to Members to know and understand that as originally reported by the committee the bill represented a public policy diametrically opposed to the public interest, a policy based upon the theory that private capital should be practically unrestricted and uncontrolled by Congress in the development of water powers upon our navigable rivers. The opponents of the bill in its original form protest against this surrender to special privilege, and the amendments which will be offered will in large measure retain in the United States proper control of these water powers and safeguard the public rights.

The bill before us, both in its present form and with the amendments proposed, is a water-power bill in fact, although navigation is the basis of our jurisdiction. In opening the debate upon this bill the chairman of the committee asserted that the paramount purpose of this bill is to develop navigation. To quote his language:

Navigability, the purpose of the bill, bears the same relation to the development of water power, so far as this bill is concerned, that the bird we are trying to catch bears to the bait with which we bait the trap. We realize that water power—hydroelectric power—is useful for a great many purposes, and can be made profitable; and, being useful and promising profit, it may be sufficient to tempt capital to construct for the benefit of the people of the United States those creations which are so expensive that the Treasury of the United States is unable or unwilling to undertake them, to make navigable three or four thousand miles of large streams in the country which ought to be navigated for the benefit of the people.

It is true that we have not caught many birds with the bait, because capital is a wary old bird.

Now, the fact is that instead of water power being the bait, it is the other way around, for in this bill navigation is the bait and the House is the bird which the water-power interests endeavored to trap. It is to my great regret that the gentleman from Georgia, wary old bird that he is, and respected by every Member of the House, rushed to the bait and was easily caught, but I congratulate him that in offering the amendments that I understand he will offer, he will extricate himself from the trap, as well as enable the membership of the House not members of his committee to avoid it.

Now, no one questions the good faith of the gentleman from Georgia, but there is not a scintilla of evidence in the hearings or in the provisions of the bill itself to substantiate the statement that the paramount purpose of the bill is to develop navigation, although improvement of navigation may result. We have a number of waterway associations in this country bending every energy to secure the development of navigation, but not one of their representatives appeared before the committee in advocacy of this bill. We have countless commercial bodies always ready to petition Congress and its committees to legislate for the development of navigation, but not one of them appears in the hearings upon this bill. The first witness appearing before the committee was J. W. Worthington, of Sheffield, Ala., interested in the Alabama Power Co., concerning which I will have something to say later, and his entire argument was devoted to the development of water power. The only other witness was Hugh L. Cooper, of Stamford, Conn., interested in the Keokuk Dam, on the Mississippi River, concerning whom I shall also have something so say later. His entire argument was devoted to the development of water power, not in aid of navigation but for commercial purposes. These are the only witnesses appearing before the committee. There are two letters from water-power engineers, and a number of letters from bankers and brokers who deal in water-power securities, and lastly there is a letter from the Secretary of War to Judge ADAMSON, which I suggest every Member of the House read, for in this letter there is not the remotest suggestion that navigation is the paramount object of legislation of this character. At the end of his letter is found a proposed bill which he asks Judge ADAMSON to introduce. I will ask the Members of the House to compare this bill with the one now before us for consideration, and you will at once see how far the committee has departed from the suggestions of the Secretary of War, the departure in every case being in the interest of the water-power companies.

Mr. Chairman, while it is clear that the paramount purpose of the bill before us is to aid water-power companies and not navigation, I would not condemn it for that reason. On the contrary, the development of water powers upon many of our streams is far more important than the development of navigation; and while our jurisdiction rests upon the right to control navigation, sometimes navigation itself should be considered as a minor and incidental matter as compared with the great public benefit flowing from the proper development of our water powers.

So, Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to be discussed as a water-power bill, for that is what it is, and I propose to discuss it as such.

The gentleman from Georgia, in his speech, made much of the fact that out of 95 authorizations for dams only 13 had been constructed. Accepting that statement as true, what does it prove? Only that a great many get-rich-quick promoters, with no money of their own and without a sufficient market for their power in the vicinity of their proposed dam, could not borrow the money to do the work. Financing of water power belongs in a class by itself. The usual procedure is for a promoter to first get an option on a dam site, then a franchise from the Government, then to issue anywhere from one to twenty million dollars of stock to himself to pay for the option and the franchise, and then endeavor to borrow money enough to buy the dam site and construct the works. Fail? Of course they fail. Why should they not? Go to a real estate broker in Washington, get an option upon a piece of real estate, and then endeavor to borrow enough money to pay for the real estate and erect a 10-story building on it, and you will count a much larger number of failures in that class of transactions than the promoters of water power count in theirs. But, aside from this, because money can not be had now to invest in water-power bonds is no reason why we should give water-power companies all the rights we hold in trust for the people.

If that is a good reason for repealing our laws containing restrictions and conditions as to development of water powers, then by the same reasoning we should at once abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the railroads for some time have been unable to borrow money, and if we would abolish the commission and permit them to charge any rates they choose they then would be able to borrow money, buy needed equipment, and make necessary extensions. There is as much reason for doing it in the case of railroads as there is in passing this bill, and there is no good reason for doing either.

Carrying this a little further, if it is good policy to surrender all of our rights to secure development of water powers, why not repeal the Sherman law in toto? Big business is afraid of it, they say. Repeal it, and big business would expand, money would be available, combinations could be made to increase prices to consumers, insuring such large profits that capital would be attracted to invest. This bill now before us is legislation of that character, and when the membership of this House fully understand it there will be no more chance of its passage than there is of the abolishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission or the repeal of the Sherman law.

But water-power development is not in such a bad way as the gentleman from Georgia seems to think.

The total stationary power now used in the United States is about 30,000,000 horsepower, of which about 6,000,000 is water power.

The great developed water powers of the country are largely controlled by 10 groups of interests, all of them more or less interlocking and connected. In 1911 these 10 groups had developed and under construction 1,821,000 horsepower; in 1913 they had 2,711,000 horsepower, an increase of 900,000 horsepower in two years. So we are doing pretty well with the legislation which we have, without making the grants to water-power interests contained in this bill. These 10 groups in 1911 held 1,450,000 horsepower undeveloped, and in 1913 they held 3,500,000 horsepower undeveloped, and their control over the water powers of the country is steadily increasing.

I have said these 10 groups of water-power interests are more or less closely connected. There is, in fact, no competition between them in any way. The General Electric Co. heads the list; next comes the Stone & Webster Co., and so on down the line, each having its own territory without competition with any of the other of the groups.

In the hearings upon this bill Mr. Cooper in his testimony stated that he raised the money to build the great Keokuk Dam, at Keokuk, Iowa, belonging to the Mississippi River Power Co. Upon page 18 Mr. Cooper was asked by Mr. TALCOTT, a member of the committee, this question:

How about the Stone & Webster group? What are the actual facts concerning the Stone & Webster group of water-power holdings?

Answer:

I know the Stone & Webster people very well. I would like to say that they are very strong competitors of mine, and they come nearer being idealists in selling things cheaper to the public than they can get anywhere else than anybody I have ever heard of anywhere. They are strong competitors of mine, and I have lost a lot of money and a lot of sleep over the fact that I can not get business that they get away from me; but I have yet to find a single place where the Stone & Webster people were not putting the price of their products down all the time.

Now, remember these two statements of Mr. Cooper, that he personally raised the money to build the Keokuk Dam and that the Stone & Webster people were very strong competitors of his. In an endeavor to verify this information I secured a copy of Moody's Manual of Railroads and Corporation Securities for 1913, and I turned to the report upon the Mississippi River Power Co., which owns this Keokuk Dam, and, notwithstanding the statement of Mr. Cooper that the Stone & Webster people were strong competitors of his, and that they were keeping him lying awake nights, I find that the president of this same Mississippi River Power Co. is Edwin S. Webster; the vice president is the same Hugh L. Cooper who testified. The directorship includes E. S. Webster and C. A. Stone. The managing agents are given as Stone & Webster. If this is Mr. Cooper's idea of competition, I wonder what his definition of monopoly would be. [Applause.]

At this point I may as well say something of Mr. Worthington, the other witness before the committee. I inferred from his testimony that he must be interested in the Alabama Power Co., but upon referring to Moody's Manual again I found that the entire stock and bond issue of the Alabama Power Co. was owned by the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co., and I found that the Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co., controlling a large percentage of the water powers of Alabama, was not a corporation organized in Alabama, not even a corporation of the United States, but is a corporation organized in Canada for the purpose of generating hydroelectric current, and so forth, in the State of Alabama, and it has, according to Moody's Manual, its principal office in Canada and not the United States.

Now, what is it that this bill does that is so dangerous to the public interest? I shall not endeavor in this general debate to discuss all of the defects in the bill, but only the vitally important provisions which are against the public interest and which unless eliminated from the bill should cause its defeat.

First. The bill gives perpetual franchises to water-power companies and deprives any future Congress for all time to come to change their terms. If this bill should pass as reported, unless the United States purchases the property of the grantee at its full value, a thousand years from now the rights of the grantee will remain fixed by this act of the Sixty-third Congress in the year 1914.

I understand that the committee will offer an amendment to the bill providing that at the end of a 50-year period Congress may impose such new terms and conditions upon the further use of the property as it may then deem wise. I have no objection to a 50-year term, for I realize that a generous term is necessary to procure the necessary capital to develop water powers, but no one can now foresee what conditions will be 50 years hence. Congress should be free at that time to deal with those conditions as they exist, and the amendment that will be proposed by the committee, I understand, will accomplish this.

Second. It grants to water-power companies all of the public lands of the United States necessary for dams, accessory works, and transmission lines upon the annual payment of 5 per cent of the value of the lands taken. It not only does that, but gives the water-power companies a preferential right to public lands as against the United States itself.

The United States may purchase lands for any public purpose, but if a water-power company needs it they are granted in this bill the right to go and take them and use them, paying only 5 per cent a year on the value.

It does not seem possible that such a provision could be incorporated in any bill having the favorable report of any committee, but here it is in language so plain that it can not be questioned by anybody.

I am glad to say that it is my understanding that the committee will offer an amendment largely eliminating this provision and providing only for the use of certain lands of the United States upon first procuring the consent of the Secretary of War and upon the payment of such charges as he may determine as just, and thus remove the objection I have stated.

Third. Section 14 of the bill permits the Secretary of War to lease the surplus water power created by any Government dam. No restrictions are placed upon the Secretary; the lease may be for 99 years or 999 years; and not only that, but when Government dams are being constructed the Secretary of War, without consulting Congress, may take in as a partner with the United States in the undertaking a water-power company, and agree with it as to what its share of the partnership contribution shall be. He is required to report to Congress his action after he has acted, but not before.

Members of the Sixty-second Congress will remember that in that Congress there was involved the use of surplus water powers to be created by Government Dams and Locks 16 and 17 on the Black Warrior River. A bill passed the Senate authorizing the Secretary of War to enter into a contract with the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co., which contract should provide that said company, its successors and assigns, should have the right to construct, maintain, own, and operate at its own cost in connection with Dams and Locks 16 and 17 on the Black Warrior River, for a period of 50 years, electrical power stations and other structures for the development of water power and selling the same not needed for lockage, and so forth. It was provided that the company should furnish free to the Government at Locks 16 and 17 all power necessary for the operation of the locks; that the contract should provide for the payment to the Government of an annual rental for its use of the water power developed at Dams 16 and 17. For the first 20 years the rental should be $1 per annum per horsepower developed, and at the end of the 20-year period the Secretary of War could readjust the same and have the right thereafter to readjust the rental at every 10-year period. It required a minimum payment, beginning with the year 1920, of $15,000 annually. (See page 4024, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixty-second Congress, first session.)

This seemed to be quite a liberal bill for the protection of the Government, but the House believed that important rights were endangered by the bill as reported by the committee, for the bill was amended in the House in the following particulars: First, requiring the Secretary of War to advertise for bids and prescribing that the lease should be made to the highest bidder; second, prescribing that at the expiration of the lease all the right, interest, and property of the company acquired by virtue of the act should pass to the Government unless Congress otherwise provides; third, cutting down the term of the lease from 50 to 25 years. Thus amended, the bill was passed by the House.

The Senate refused to accept these amendments, and it is my recollection that a compromise was reached by striking out from the bill all reference to the leasing of the surplus water power and authorizing only the construction of the dams by the Government, so that this surplus water power upon these dams in question on the Black Warrior River will be subject to the provisions of section 14, if enacted. I believe this House ought to be at least as careful of the rights of the public in the year 1914 as they were in the year 1911.

Now, in the Ferris water-power bill, reported from the Public Lands Committee, where the Government has not expended a single dollar upon the dam, but merely owns the dam site, the Secretary of the Interior is restricted in making of leases to the grant of a term not exceeding 50 years, and other regulations are provided. No one can successfully contend that we should be more liberal in the leasing of our water powers created by the expenditure of Government funds than we are in the leasing of water power to be developed wholly by private capital and where the Government owns only the dam site.

In the bill that I have referred to, proposed by Secretary of War Garrison, we find a section which covers the subject matter of this section 14, and it reads as follows:

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into revocable leases for the use of surplus water and water power generated at dams and works constructed wholly or in part by the United States in the interests of navigation at such rates, on such terms and conditions, and for such periods of time, not to exceed 50 years, and with such provision for the periodical readjustment of rentals as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient, subject, however, to the provisions of this act governing the authorization, maintenance, and operation of power plants, and to all regulations governing the use and disposition of the power, so far as the same may be applicable; and all such leases, the parties thereto, and the terms and conditions thereof shall be reported annually to Congress.

This is an excellent provision, fully safeguarding the rights of the public. But one objection can be made to it, and that is in the use of the word "revocable." I do not believe these leases should be revocable within the term for which they are granted; but in all other respects the suggestion of the Secretary of War should be adopted, and at the proper time I shall offer as a substitute to section 14 the section proposed by the Secretary of War, which I have just read, omitting only the word "revocable" therein contained.

Another provision in the bill is very important. The present general dam law, the general bridge law, and every special dam and bridge act that I know anything about has in it a provision reserving to Congress the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act. Every State that I know anything about reserves this power in the franchise which it grants; but not so with this bill. Here we find that the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act is reserved only when Congress determines that the conditions of the act have been violated by a grantee owning the dam. A perpetual franchise with no power to alter, amend, or repeal would be a fine thing for the water-power companies, but generations yet to come would look back upon this Sixty-third Congress and conclude that nothing short of corruption could have induced it to do this great wrong. There is, of course, nothing corrupt about it, but its results, if enacted, are just as bad as if there was.

The last section of the bill, section 17, is one of the worst. The plea is made that the concessions found in the previous sections of the bill are necessary to induce capital to develop water powers, but this section 17 provides that this act shall apply to all existing dams as well as those hereafter authorized, so that as to any existing developed water power now in operation, under the reserved power of regulation or power to change the terms of their charters, this section 17 makes them, too, these princely gifts of perpetual franchise and the other privileges I have discussed. This section repeals all previous legislation granting consent to construction of dams. This means the repeal of the Hetch Hetchy act, passed last year; the Los Angeles act, passed some years ago; and every other act and also every permit issued by the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War, and places all such dams under the provisions of this bill.

I understand that the committee will offer an amendment to this section removing the objections that I have referred to.

Now, many of the statements I have made as to the effect of this bill have been vigorously denied by its supporters, and in order that there can be no misunderstanding about this, I now wish to take up certain sections of the bill in detail and demonstrate that the statements I have made are absolutely correct in every particular, and I shall also indicate somewhat more in detail the amendments that I understand will be offered by the committee, removing many of the objections to the bill.

I want to go through some of the provisions now a little more in detail. I first want to call attention to section 2 of the bill. The present law provides that the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, insert in the approval of any project for a dam the stipulation that the grantee shall, at his own cost and expense, construct a lock in connection with the dam at any time that the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers may find it necessary. This bill, which is an amendment of the act of 1910, in fact, inserts one little word, the word "then," so that as this bill stands the Secretary of War must determine in advance as to whether a lock will be required in connection with the dam for the next 50 years to come, and if he makes either a mistake in engineering, or if Congress chooses to make a stream navigable throughout its length that is not now navigable, requiring a lock where none is now required, the Government itself will have to pay for the construction of the lock, and instead of such a dam aiding navigation it will, in fact, obstruct it. And there ought to be the right on the part of the United States, when a dam is constructed across a navigable stream—and that is all this bill has to do with—to reserve the power to compel the construction of a lock at any time that it may be deemed necessary in aid of navigation. Now, the engineers can not tell at the time of the approval of a project what may be necessary. To illustrate, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] and I and other Members appeared the other day before the Board of River and Harbor Engineers in reference to a canal between Lake Superior and the Mississippi River. The gentleman from Minnesota spoke in advocacy of that canal, asking for a survey, and the members of that board then raised the objection that they could not determine at this time what kind of a canal was necessary; they could not determine what kind of locks were necessary, because it had not yet been determined what type of boats would be successful upon such a canal; and yet you are compelling the Secretary of War to determine that question, which can not in the very nature of things always be determined, or else say that the Government itself must stand the expense of restoring navigation around a dam instead of at the expense of the company itself.

All throughout section 2 carries out that proposition.

Section 4 refers to the use of the public domain by water-power companies. I want to read it to you to show how it originally read:

(c) That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States such charges, not to exceed an annual payment of 5 per cent of the fair value of such lands, as may be fixed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and in fixing such charges consideration shall be taken of the benefits accruing thereby to the interests of navigation as well as to the business of such grantee.

Why, gentlemen, language could not be framed that would constitute more of a gift to the water powers of this country or a more complete surrender of the public domain that still belongs to us. You will find the proposed amendment, immediately following those words, in brackets, and that, as I said a short time ago, fully safeguards it, in my judgment.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. In section 2, on page 2, in reference to the word "then," to which you called attention, I desire to ask if the amendments to be proposed contain any provisions curing or changing this?

Mr. LENROOT. Those proposed by the committee do not. The next provision I want to call attention to is section 9. The act originally read:

That the rights herein granted shall continue for a period of 50 years from and after the date of the completion of the structure—

Which is changed to "dam"—

described in the original approval, and after the expiration of said 50 years such rights shall continue until compensation has been made to said grantee for the fair value of its property, as hereinafter provided.

Now, that meant nothing more nor less than a perpetual franchise. The right to recapture this property, with one exception, is a right that can not be changed by any provision in this or any other bill. The United States Government always has the right of eminent domain, and unless this property is of such a character that it could secure it and operate it under the exercise of the right of eminent domain, it could not be given the right to purchase it and operate it by the terms of this bill. And so under the exercise of the right of eminent domain we could always take over this property, but in exercising that right there is one element of value, namely, we might have to pay the value of the franchise, and this bill does eliminate that from consideration.

But these gentlemen keep saying, or did say, that it was only a franchise for 50 years, and, if that were true, then it meant absolutely nothing more than the right of eminent domain, because if the franchise did expire at the end of 50 years there would be no franchise value to pay for. But as it stood it went on and on forever, and the only right retained was to purchase.

Now, to illustrate how little that amounts to, you take this Keokuk Dam that I have referred to, belonging to the Mississippi River Power Co., and it is capitalized now for $37,500,000. They have developed only about half their power. I have not any question that 20 years from now it will be worth that sum with the transmission lines that will be built. Now suppose a proposition comes to Congress to appropriate $37,000,000 to take over the Mississippi Power Co., do you suppose Congress is going to do it unless the abuses are so gross as to compel it? Are they going to do it merely as a business proposition? Not at all. And so this right of recapture, while valuable, will not, in my judgment, be exercised, because it is going to involve tremendous amounts of money; and we must have a further right than that—the right at the end of the 50-year period to make such terms and conditions with reference to a new consent as we choose to make.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do I understand the gentleman's position to be that at the expiration of the 50-year lease the right of the grantee shall cease unless he shall get a new right?

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, I want to suggest to the gentleman that proposition. I believe that it is important that you put the inertia of Government in favor of the Government instead of having the inertia of Government always in favor of the grantee. Theoretically Congress has absolute control over the street railways of the District of Columbia. Practically it has not any at all, because you can never get a bill through.

Now, if the right of that street railway company to operate its cars terminated at the end of a certain period unless it got affirmative action from the Government, you would find then that the inertia of the Government would be used for the benefit of the Government, the railway company would be anxious to do business, and at the end of the given period it would have to make terms with the Government in order to continue, and they would come to speedy terms. It is not to be assumed that the Government will be unreasonable. If you do not so provide, that inertia will practically continue the franchise indefinitely.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose the inertia of the Government is still such that at the end of the 50 years no renewal is granted. What becomes of the property?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think that situation would arise; but you might, if necessary, provide for an additional period of a year or two pending negotiations; but I would certainly make it incumbent upon the grantee to get a new right. Now, he gets a right of 50 years. Why should he not at the end of that time be required to get a new one? Otherwise, I repeat, the inertia of the Government will constantly work to the advantage of the grantee.

Mr. LENROOT. There is this to be said on the other side of that proposition, and that is that at the end of that 50-year period, with this amendment adopted which will be proposed by the committee, they will be nothing but tenants by sufferance or tenants at will. They can not raise money with that kind of a title after the 50-year period.

Mr. SHERLEY. I know of a street railway company in a city—not here—that were tenants by sufferance, in my judgment, for 20 years. They did not advertise the fact, and it was usually hushed up and denied that their right was for a limited time, and they went on and borrowed money, trusting—and successfully trusting—to the inertia of that city government to prevent anything being done. The fact that they are there and that you have to move to get rid of them gives them a tremendous advantage. I would make them move in order to stay there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In reference to what my colleague [Mr. SHERLEY] has just said, it may not be amiss just now to invite attention to a contention which has arisen in the District of Columbia relative to the street car companies which are located here. Recently there was a bill before the District of Columbia Committee, which has been reported from the committee and is now on the calendar, for municipal ownership of the street railways of the District of Columbia. It has been argued before that committee—and by good lawyers—that, notwithstanding the fact that as a part of each one of these charters there is a provision that Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal those charters, it is contended by these attorneys that Congress has no right to repeal; that Congress can not repeal their franchises nor take them away from them; and that, in acquiring the physical property itself, it would be necessary also to acquire their franchises by purchase.

I say that question has been plausibly argued before that committee, and the argument is in print, and those who would like to read it can get it from the District Committee.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky, there is not so much difference between his position and mine. I have been contending throughout this entire controversy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have a little more time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have 15 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 15 minutes more.

Mr. LENROOT. I have been contending through this entire controversy that at the end of the 50-year period Congress should be absolutely free to deal with this utility as it saw fit, and the only difference between us is whether Congress itself shall initiate it or the utility.

Mr. SHERLEY. The difference is that you have a theoretical freedom instead of an actual one, because every delay works for the benefit of the grantee. I want to have it put the other way, and force the grantee to come up and get a new life.

Mr. LENROOT. The bill as drawn absolutely deprives Congress of any freedom in either event. This amendment restores it.

Now, as to the recapture provision, the committee has one amendment here, in line 4 upon page 10, that I wish to say just a word about, and which I shall discuss more at length when we get to the bill under the five-minute rule. It reads now:

SEC. 10. That at any time after the expiration of said 50 years [as Congress may prescribe] the Secretary of War may terminate the rights hereby granted upon giving to the owners thereof one year's notice in writing of such termination, and upon the taking over by the United States—

And so forth. Now, I do not know what the committee has in mind in the use of the words "as Congress may prescribe." I know of no other interpretation than that Congress may prescribe how the Secretary of War may terminate the rights on one year's notice. But it certainly does not change the provision that "the Secretary of War, after the 50 years, shall have the right to terminate the license hereby granted," which is not in harmony and is inconsistent with the amendment that will be proposed to section 9, that after the 50-year period their rights may be terminated at any time by Congress itself without a year's notice or any other act; and that, I trust, will be changed when we reach the consideration of the bill for amendment.

Now, section 13 is the section relating to the right to alter, amend, or repeal. I have discussed that already, and now want to discuss the amendment that the committee proposes to make to this section. I read:

SEC. 13. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be authorized in accordance with the provisions of this act.

That is the present law, so far. Now, they propose to amend by adding the language "whenever Congress determines that the conditions of consent have been violated." That is the way it stood as reported from the committee. Now they offer another amendment, "or after the expiration of the original contract period, as may be deemed necessary for the interests of navigation."

Now, Heaven knows, this section was bad enough as originally reported from the committee; but they have made it a great deal worse by this amendment.

As originally reported from the committee, with the amendment, after 50 years it gave the right to alter, amend, or repeal, because there would have been no franchise existing that we did not have the right to interfere with. There could be no contractual relation, and therefore after that time there could be no violation of the conditions of the contract. But now this amendment comes in:

Or after the expiration of the original contract period, as may be deemed necessary for the interests of navigation.

So by this amendment this committee says that after the 50 years have expired you may amend, alter, or repeal a franchise of a power company, or change the terms of this act, so far as it affects such power company, only as may be deemed necessary for the interests of navigation. I hope before this debate is over some member of this committee will tell this House why, after the 50 years have expired, Congress should not have the right to deal with this question absolutely as it sees fit, whether in the interest of navigation or otherwise. They ought to have the right to change this recapture clause. They ought to have the right to require compensation at that time if they choose to do it. There are a great many rights that Congress might wish to exercise at the end of the period, rights which the Congress ought to have the opportunity of exercising.

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman for information about section 10, providing for the taking over by the United States Government, one of the conditions being—

And assuming all contracts entered into prior to the receipt by it of said notice of termination which have the approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof.

Will the gentleman please explain what is meant by that language, and particularly what is meant by the—

Approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof?

Mr. LENROOT. I take it this is what is meant: Many of the States in enacting water-power laws now provide that contracts exceeding a certain length of time, usually 15 or 20 years, shall not be valid unless approved by the utility commission of the State. I take it that is what this means.

Mr. AVIS. Do you understand from that provision that the Government can go into the good faith of that contract, from the language that follows?

Mr. LENROOT. That is evidently the intention of the committee, I think. I am not a member of the committee, but I think so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield for a question, if I can get a little more time. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi anyway.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman stated—and I fully agree with him—that at the end of 50 years Congress ought to be left free to impose any conditions that in the wisdom of Congress are deemed desirable. Would not that be taken care of absolutely in this bill if the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] were to be followed, that an absolute period be put to the rights granted to the company, so that the burden would then be upon the company to move?

Mr. LENROOT. I think that would be very likely to result.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. If the amendment proposed in the first paragraph of section 13, page 14, becomes a part of the law, will it not then impliedly say that these grants of water power are perpetual? Would not that be the meaning that the statute would necessarily carry if that becomes a part of the law?

Mr. LENROOT. In reply to this question, I will say that there is a square conflict between that language in section 13 and the language in section 9 as amended, and I would not undertake to interpret or construe the conflicting provisions. I sincerely hope that when we reach the proper stage we will eliminate the provision from section 13, making it entirely clear.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it is fair to the chairman of the committee and the committee itself, and to all of us who have been more or less concerned about this bill, to inquire at this point why the language in parentheses in section 13, beginning with line 15 and ending with line 18, was placed in the bill? That language undoubtedly does upset every thought that all of us have had, and it does upset the views of the committee. In our conferences on these matters we have all agreed that they should have a 50-year contract, and we have all agreed that at the end of 50 years that should be the end of it, and we have all agreed that no such limitation as that which has been inserted should be incorporated in the bill. I want to say that I think this bill is going to accomplish great good, and I think it is full of good things, and I think it is going to be a good bill; but it seems to me that we ought now, without waiting a minute, to agree that that language go out of the bill. It has no place there. It is not in keeping with one word that any of us have ever said or thought on the subject, and I think some one on behalf of the committee ought to rise and eliminate that language.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall not undertake to discuss the bill in detail any further as my time is about expiring. When we reach the bill under the five-minute rule I shall take the opportunity to discuss it further and perhaps to offer certain amendments.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LENROOT. I am afraid I can not yield further until I have finished what I have to say.

Mr. FOWLER. I thought the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to make a few general statements in conclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to say a word about the laws of certain foreign countries relating to water powers. The gentleman from Georgia in his speech made some reference to a certain water-power company being driven to Ontario, Canada, because of the onerous conditions of our laws, and reference is made in both the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce and Committee on the Public Lands to the inducements held out to water-power companies by Ontario, Canada, and by Norway. I thought it worth while to ascertain just what those inducements were, and I was greatly surprised by what I found.

I find that in Ontario, Canada, where these people were driven to, as alleged, leases are not made perpetual as provided in this bill, nor for even 50 years, as our present law provides, but for 20 years only, with a privilege of two renewals of 10 years each, making a total term of 40 years. The lease shall contain such terms and conditions as the minister may prescribe, and the grantee shall pay such annual rent as the minister shall fix. At the expiration of the lease all the property reverts to the Crown without any payment, except the machinery employed may be removed within a term fixed by the minister. A proviso is added that when the works are permanent and useful there may be paid to the lessee such sum as the legislative assembly of Ontario may appropriate; but this is a matter of donation entirely and not a right of the lessee.

The laws of Norway provide a great many conditions and restrictions as to operation of the water power, care of employees, and so forth, and provide for an annual payment of 25 cents per horsepower per year. The term of the franchise shall be not less than 60 nor more than 80 years, and at the expiration of the term the waterfalls, improvements, works, power station, and machinery revert to the Government without any payment to the water-power company. These foreign laws can be found in the hearings of the Committee on the Public Lands, pages 531 and 535.

Now, I want to say a word with reference to the reversion of the property to the Government. I am not contending for that in this bill. But the fact is that every water power that is developed to-day provides for the amortization of their plant. In other words, these plants are built, in nine cases out of ten, from the proceeds of the issue of bonds, and in every case a sinking fund is required to pay the entire bonded indebtedness at the end of the term. So, as a matter of fact, at the end of the 50 years' franchise every dollar of that investment will presumably be paid out of the earnings of the plant. So it is not going to be at all unreasonable at the end of the 50-year period, if we renew the consent, to make a provision that in a shorter period of time the entire plant shall revert to the Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. In other words, they make the rate to the consumer of power sufficient to pay for the entire plant?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

In conclusion, I wish to repeat what I stated at the outset, that this bill in its present form is an indefensible surrender of the public interest to special privilege, and I congratulate the committee upon the fact that it will itself offer amendments removing most of the serious objections to the bill.

Some of us who have been active in opposing the bill in its present form have been severely criticized and have been charged with desiring to lock up all the resources of the United States and not utilize them at all. This charge is not true. Some men smile at the words "conservation" and "conservationist," but they are good words, and that man or that party that does not make conservation of our natural resources a part of his or its policy has but a short time to live politically.

Conservationists believe in development of all of our natural resources for the greatest benefit of all our people with the smallest amount of waste that is practicable. We do not believe they should be used to make a few men rich without resulting benefits to the great mass of our people. We do not take the position that the men who with brains and capital develop these resources should not be amply rewarded, but, on the contrary, insist that they receive encouragement and protection to the fullest extent not inconsistent with the public interest. There are those who honestly and frankly take the position that the natural resources of our country still owned or controlled by the Government for all the people should be surrendered to any private interest that will develop them. That seemed to be the theory of the gentleman from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, in proof of which I wish to read a paragraph from the hearings upon this bill. Mr. Cooper made a suggestion that the water power company be expressly permitted to make a minimum return upon the capital invested, and 9 per cent was suggested by him, and that any earnings above that sum should be divided equally between the company and the State, to which suggestion Judge ADAMSON, the chairman of the committee, replied:

> What you want is something that will keep the State from making a fight on you people. I do not think you would ever get the Government to adopt a partnership of that kind. You are riding two horses. You are going, with the conservationists part of the way and with us part of the way. (Hearings, p. 26.)

Here we have a very frank expression from the chairman of the committee that he is utterly opposed to the ideas and policies of the conservationists.

Mr. Chairman, the anticonservation policy was until a few years ago the policy of this Government. Under that policy we have had a most reckless, if not criminal, waste of our resources. To that policy more than any other cause can be attributed the existence of the great trusts and monopolies of to-day. Our oil lands have been so far placed in private ownership that our Navy can not find enough public lands remaining containing oil to supply our Navy with oil for fuel; and we have the Standard Oil Co., the greatest monopoly of all time. Our anthracite-coal lands are all in private ownership as a result of that policy, and our people now have to pay annual tribute to the Anthracite Coal Trust as a result of the anticonservation policy. Our iron-ore lands are all in private ownership, making possible a Steel Trust. But for the conservation policy, creating national forests, our forests would all be under private ownership now, strengthening the grip of the Lumber Trust. Of all of our natural resources our water power is the most important. It is the one resource that is not entirely or partially destroyed by use. Water will continue to flow downward to the sea so long as the world shall last; and on its way, without diminution, for every horsepower created by it and used 10 tons of coal are saved each year. The development of our water powers, therefore, is conservation in the highest degree; and the only question is whether this development shall be for the public good or primarily for private gain. Some time in the future our fuel resources will be gone, and unless we retain control of this, the only resource that can not be destroyed, the time will come when the owners of the water powers will absolutely dominate all of the industries of the Nation.

It is said by some that posterity can take care of itself. It can, but the legislation of this generation will determine whether future generations will care for themselves by revolution or orderly procedure under the form of government which we now have. This bill in its present form attempts to fix rights of water-power corporations a thousand years hence, and conservationists are justified in being concerned with the welfare of at least the generation which shall follow us. That the ideas of conservationists are as I have stated can be demonstrated by the bills now upon our calendar reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, dealing with practically all of our national resources still a part of the public domain. Every one of those bills makes provision for present use of those resources, but retaining control over them by the Government in the interest of all the people.

Mr. Chairman, this bill can be amended so as to secure development and at the same time protect the public interest. Each Member of the House has a duty to perform in the consideration of this bill. Partisanship has no place in the consideration of a bill of this character. While in a sense the Democratic majority is responsible for all legislation which passes this House, it is the duty of every Republican to do what he can to perfect this bill and make it a bill safeguarding the public interest. With this in mind, I and other Republicans have cooperated with Democrats in an endeavor to remove the vicious features of this bill; and while I fully realize that as a result of such efforts the Democratic majority will be relieved of much criticism and will take the entire credit for this bill, if it shall be properly amended, I am willing that they should take all credit to which they may be entitled, for the public interest should always be considered before any partisan advantage that might have been gained by the minority party had a different course been pursued.

That the bill will be amended in the public interest before it passes this House I am confident, but if by any possibility we shall fail in amending it, then better a thousand times defeat the bill entirely and say to the people of the country that we can better afford to let our waters flow untrammeled to the sea a few years longer than pass a bill denying to them and future generations any control over the most valuable resource which we possess. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I refrained from interrupting the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] because I knew that he has had that speech in his system a long time, and that it would prove disastrous to him, if not to others, if not delivered; but I desire to say that the clause in the paragraph to which he devoted so much time was not in the original bill, but was prepared as an amendment, and it was fully understood should not be incorporated as one of the amendments to the bill. The fact is that it is as much the fault of the other gentlemen as ourselves. The gentleman and his associates had a copy of all the amendments we intended to offer, and looked them over, and they were satisfactory to gentlemen on both sides. I do not think the gentleman ought to blame us any more than we should blame him for the oversight in allowing the clause printed. I desire to say that I am gratified that the gentleman is now able to find himself so nearly in accord with the bill, and feel so much gratified that I will not stop to discuss whether the defect was originally in the bill or in the understanding of the gentleman. I will remind the Committee of the Whole that there is not a single amendment in the 14 that the committee is going to offer that is inconsistent with the bill as originally drawn and introduced in this House. We discussed them over and over again, and we suggested these amendments and they were agreed to by the other side.

I further desire to state that I made this statement in opening the argument, that the fears of the gentleman were entirely imaginary; that the English language did not justify any such conclusion as they tried to deduce from the language of the bill. Mr. Chairman, I am so happy that the amendments we are going to propose, and of which I gave notice, are satisfactory to the gentleman that I have nothing further to say. I hope we will proceed with the debate and adopt as soon as possible this great and valuable constructive measure on the most important subject to the country that has been before Congress for a long time. I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] such time as he desires.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to the remarks of the distinguished and able gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I am sure that he is sincere in what he has said, and I am also equally sure that through some misinterpretation he has misled the House and carried it very far afield from what is really in this bill.

Of course the most important feature of the bill, so far as the public is concerned, is that provision in the bill that authorizes a recapture of the dam and its accessory works in the interest of the public. I can say to the House that although I have no objection whatever to the amendments that the gentleman from Wisconsin has sought to put in the bill, so far as the amendments they have put in the bill in reference to the recapture, they are far more in the interest of the corporation that will acquire the title to the dam than was the provision in the original bill. The original bill provides for the right of recapture, provides for Government supervision and regulation if the plant is not regulated and supervised by the State itself; but I will not take up the time of the House at this time to go into a discussion of the features of the bill, because they can be better and more wisely discussed when the bill is under consideration under the five-minute rule.

Mr. Chairman, for the last decade the building of dams across the navigable rivers of the country to promote navigation and at the same time create hydroelectric development has been a question much discussed, fruitful of some legislation, and productive in the end of only meager results.

The Fifty-ninth Congress passed a general dam act, which was amended in the Sixty-first Congress. This legislation was ample and complete in so far as it authorized private capital to build dams and improve navigation under the supervision and direction of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army. But the law requires those desiring to avail themselves of the law to first obtain the consent of the Congress, and it has now become practically impossible to obtain the consent of the Congress under the present law.

The objection to all bills proposed in recent years can be stated as:

First. That the general law did not provide for rate regulation in the interest of the public.

Second. That there was no provision incorporated in the law to allow the public in future years to acquire the ownership of the dam and water power except by the expensive and doubtful process of condemnation; in other words, to recapture the property for the public benefit on reasonable terms.

Third. That the persons to whom the right to build a dam was granted should be required to pay indeterminate charges or taxes to the Government or to some beneficiary named by it for the privileges granted.

Fourth. That the granting of the right to use the water of a navigable stream created a monopoly, and should not be permitted by Congress, and Congress has refused to grant permission except on conditions declared to be by those asking permits to build dams in violation of both economic and business principles, and drove capital away from such developments.

I shall discuss the last objection first, in order to determine how far the monopoly exists and to what extent we can guard against the abuse of the power.

We must not forget that there are two kinds of monopoly. The first is the industrial monopoly, in which the price of a useful commodity is privately fixed, in which competition is driven out, and in which the largest possible revenue is derived by those maintaining the monopoly. The second is a public monopoly, or a publicly controlled monopoly, such as a water-power development, the services from which are performed under public regulation. In the first class are to be found consolidations of corporations and artificial organizations and creations in restraint of trade and subject only to indirect public control and regulation, while in the second class, such as hydroelectric developments and public-service companies, are found natural monopolies performing a public-utility service under public regulation. A hydroelectric development does not produce and sell a commodity in the same sense in which steel, oil, or tobacco are commodities. Hydroelectric power is not subject to periods of overproduction and underproduction, to storage, and to other methods of market manipulation, subject to rising and falling prices, but supplies its consumers to the extent of their demands and to the extent of the capacity of the hydroelectric development, and all the time at the same price as regulated and fixed by utility commissions or other legally authorized regulatory authorities.

Supporting the contention that hydroelectric developments are natural monopolies, the following quotations from various authorities are offered:

From the testimony of Hon. Walter L. Fisher, then Secretary of the Interior, before the National Waterways Commission, November 23, 1911:

> I do not think there should be any provisions in these grants against so-called combinations or monopolies, but do believe there should be no assignment of the grant without the permission of the Government. I think hydroelectric development is essentially monopolistic and should be essentially monopolistic in its character. That is why I think it should be effectively regulated. I think they should have the advantage of the control of the market and the freedom from harassing and vexatious competition if we are going to put them under the disadvantages of effective public regulation.

It is of interest to note that ex-Secretary Fisher admits "the disadvantages of effective public regulation," by which it is inferred that he means that such regulation is not advantageous in financing hydroelectric developments, and such regulations restrict and limit profits.

From the testimony of Mr. Gifford Pinchot, before the National Waterways Commission November 23, 1911:

> I am very strongly in favor of the consolidation of water-power plants, coupling them up over large areas * * *. Better service to the community would be forthcoming if water-power companies operated over large areas. But there must be public control of their operations to prevent the benefits which come by reason of such consolidation from being translated into a general overcharge to the consumer.

From the report of the National Waterways Commission (S. Doc. No. 469, 62d Cong., 2d sess.):

> The important fact to be gathered from the entire discussion of this phase of the subject would seem to be not so much that financiers and promoters might find it to their advantage to promote a monopoly as that the economic considerations and the natural character of the business make monopoly almost inevitable, and perhaps desirable, when subject to strict public regulation.

The President of the United States, in an address before the students of the University of California in 1911, said:

Public-service corporations are, in a very interesting sense, natural monopolies. * * * It is perfectly obvious that if other companies are allowed to compete with them there is a wasteful duplication in outlay and equipment, so that competition generally results in the eventual combination of the competing companies and the necessity to charge a price on what they supply that will pay the interest on twice as great an investment as was really necessary for the service.

By Hon. B. H. Meyer, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission (the American Political Science Review for August, 1911, p. 374):

There are few things which the industrial history of advanced nations proves more conclusively than that competition in the field of public utilities has failed to insure reasonably adequate service at reasonable rates. The public has had occasion to learn this lesson many times on a large scale. * * * Certainly we have had enough repetition of disasters to the public as well as to investors to lift this subject out of the field of controversy; but somehow these lessons have not been on a sufficiently large and overwhelming scale, for the fetish of competition is still being worshiped, and the cry of competition is still raised by many as the touchstone capable of dissolving every obscure entanglement which the strained relations between the utilities and the public sometimes create.

The Wisconsin public-utilities law is a repudiation of the fallacy of competition as a guarantor of good service at reasonable rates and is planted squarely upon the idea of monopoly in the utility business except in the case of telephones. Give a utility plant a definite field and compel it to do its proper work reasonably well within that field; this is one of the basal ideas in the law.

Electric Light & Power Co. (1 N. Y. P. S. C., 1st D., 226) (1908).

Here the commission refused to authorize a large issue of securities on the ground that they were to be used to construct a competing plant, which was unnecessary. The commission says, at pages 249, 250, and 251, in part as follows:

The whole electric history of New York City points the futility of competition.

Col. Roosevelt is to be complimented upon his progress and his assimilation of the common-sense doctrine of monopoly and its control, that in his late speech at Pittsburgh he says:

Unlimited competition has proved one of the greatest curses of modern civilization. It was unlimited competition which created the great trusts, exactly as it created the sweatshop, and is chiefly responsible for child labor. The new freedom is merely the old, old freedom which permits each man to cut his neighbor's throat.

Combination is as natural in business as it is in human society. Only among primitive peoples is every man a law unto himself and an enemy to his neighbor. Combination was the first step toward civilization and is a force which will persist while civilization continues. In so far as it may invade individual rights, the remedy is not to seek its destruction, which would be impossible, but to compel its regulation for the public good. It is the expression of greater experience, better knowledge, and higher intelligence, the result of education, the effect of gradual appreciation of certain fundamental principles, and the transmission of those principles into practical operation.

Only by regulated monopoly, and not by competition and duplication, can the best services and the lowest rates be secured. As many as 20 States, recognizing the important economic fact and principle of regulated monopoly as a method of control for public-service corporations, have passed laws prohibiting competing service in public utilities until after it is shown that the necessity for competing service is required, and then a "certificate of necessity" is granted by public authorities.

A reading of the Adamson bill will disclose that sections 7 to 13, as also section 15, provide for complete and effective control of hydroelectric-power development in the public interest.

Assuming, for the purpose of this argument, that the granting of the right to dam a stream to create hydroelectric power will create a local monopoly in the distribution of the power produced, though, as a matter of fact, it may in some cases produce active competition, and is more than likely to do so when the power is used for manufacturing purposes, and assuming further that the eminent authorities I have just quoted are correct in their advocacy of the control and regulation of a public monopoly rather than its destruction, the question is squarely presented to us as to whether the bill H. R. 16053, known as the Adamson general dam bill, under consideration, fairly and effectively meets the public demand for regulation and control for the public good.

Section 7 provides that any grantee who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War, made in accordance with the provisions of the act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Power is given the Federal courts to issue injunction, mandamus, or other process to prevent the violation of the act; and if the unlawful maintenance and operation are shown to be such as shall require a revocation of all rights and privileges held under authority of the act, the court may decree such revocation.

This section gives ample power to enforce the law. The power to regulate the rates is given in section 11:

SEC. 11. That in all cases where the electric current generated from or by any of the projects provided for in this act shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce the rates, charges, and service for the same to the consumers thereof shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable and unduly discriminatory charge, rate, or service therefor is hereby prohibited and declared to be illegal; and whenever the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that the rates or charges demanded or collected on the service rendered for such electric current are unjust, unreasonable, or unduly discriminatory, upon complaint made therefor and full hearing thereon the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what shall be the just and reasonable rates and charges therefor to be observed as the maximum to be charged and the service to be rendered; and in case of the violation of any such order of the Secretary of War the provisions of this act relative to forfeiture and failure to comply shall apply. That in the valuation for rate-making purposes of the property existing under said approval of the project there may be considered any lock or locks or locks or other aids to navigation and all other capital expenditures required by the United States.

The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to include among the conditions for his approval of any plans or any project herein provided, as an express condition thereof, a clause reserving to the Secretary of War the same rights, powers, and duties set forth in this section, together with the same penalty for violation thereof: Provided, That whenever the State in which such current shall be used shall have provided by law adequate regulation for rates, charges, and service to the consumers for such electric current and such regulation shall not be unduly discriminatory or unjust against the service or charges in any other State arising from the use of the power from the same project, and such facts shall be established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, then in such case the provisions of this section shall not apply to the rates, charges, and service in and for such State.

You can not obey two masters at the same time. Priority is given to the State to regulate the charges in the interest of its citizens if it desires to do so; if not, ample authority is vested in the Federal Government to protect the consumers of the power.

The bill, therefore, protects the public against monopolistic abuse by providing just governmental regulation.

The right to recapture the property by the Government is provided for in sections 9 and 10 of the bill.

The direct grant is limited to 50 years, and the Secretary of War is given the power to terminate at any time thereafter upon giving one year's notice to the grantee of his intention to do so, the Government being required to pay the fair value of the property to the grantee, but it is provided that—

In determining the value of said property upon the termination of said grant as above provided, no value shall be claimed by or allowed for the consent hereby granted (the franchise), nor for good will, profit in pending contracts, nor other conditions of current or prospective business.

Should the Government determine to recapture the property, it will not be compelled to pay anything for the franchise rights, business developed, or good will, but merely for the fair value of the property belonging to the grantee. As the dam, the power house, the machinery, and the transmission lines are subject to depreciation and decay it is in the interest of the Government that the price of recapture should be the fair value and not the original cost. To provide that the grantee should receive less would prohibit men with both money and brains from entering upon the development of the power, for, with Government regulation, the profits will of necessity be limited, and the grantee takes all the chances of developing a paying business.

In the hearings before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on the subject of general dam legislation it was stated that—

All hydroelectric engineers, as well as all investors, in fact, nearly all political students of hydroelectric developments, agree that experience has established the following business facts:

First. Hydroelectric, more than any other class of industrial investments, must bear a trying interest burden over longer nonrevenue initial periods of construction.

Second. The hazards of hydroelectric investment are greater than in any other class of investments.

Third. In proportion as any lease period is shortened or unprovided for at its termination, as is the case in the present general dam law, in like proportion bond issues on such developments are with greater difficulty and more expensively negotiated.

Fourth. Electrochemical and electrometallurgical operations, upon which water powers must largely depend for development and must rely for consumption, require and must secure power at extremely low rates, covered by long contracts.

Only four important dams have been constructed in the navigable streams of the country in the last decade: Keokuk, on the Mississippi River, under a perpetual tenure, the cost of the development to date being $8,000,000 above the estimated cost; the Hales Bar Dam, on the Tennessee River, with a tenure of 99 years, at a cost of $6,000,000 above the estimated cost. Of these, only two dams have been constructed under the general dam law of 1906–1910—the Coon Rapids Dam, on the upper Mississippi River, and the Lock 12 Dam, on the Coosa River, the latter costing $500,000 above the estimated cost.

At the Keokuk power development, of the 120,000 horsepower now ready for sale there is an available market for only 90,000 horsepower, and a market must be created for as much as 90,000 horsepower to be developed at Keokuk before the total possible power development can be sold.

Of the 40,000 horsepower developed at Hales Bar, less than one-half of this power has been marketed, and a market will have to be created for as much as 25,000 horsepower of the total development.

Of the 40,000 horsepower developed at Lock 12, on the Coosa River, the Alabama Power Co. will be competing two years with the cheap coal in the Birmingham district before all of the power at Lock 12 is sold.

Not a single joint improvement of navigation and development of water power by private enterprise in a single navigable stream in this country is under construction at this time. The so-called new principles exploited by those who have made a political football of their so-called conservation policies have succeeded in putting a stop to all such joint improvements by legislative obstacles.

This bill undoubtedly protects the rights of the public, and my only fear is that it does not hold out sufficient inducements to capital to encourage investment in such enterprises.

The remaining objection that has been made to the present law is that no tax or charge is made for the use of the power.

I will not enter upon the discussion of the constitutional right of the Government to charge for the use of water in a navigable river for power purposes. I believe the beneficial use of the water belongs to the riparian owners, subject to the laws of the State in which it is located, and that the Federal Government has no right to make a special charge or tax as a condition of its enjoyment. [Applause.] No harm can be done by not incorporating a provision to tax in the bill, for the Government at all times possesses the power to levy an excise tax on each horsepower of electricity created by water power in the United States, so long as the tax is uniform and applies to all alike. No just man would propose to tax a dam built to-day and let go untaxed a dam built yesterday. [Applause.]

The best reason why no charge should be made and no tax be levied is that the people are entitled to as cheap electrical power as it is possible to give them, whether it is used in their homes for light and heat or in the factories for manufacturing. If you put the charge or tax on the owner of the dam, he, of necessity, will hand it down to the consumer of the power.

Public regulation and the right to recapture in the interest of the public are in the line of true progress; to go further would not only be injurious to the public but in all human possibility would prevent development.

The great issue involved in this bill is the development of navigation, the cutting down of freight rates, and the development of our commerce, but it is so apparent that it is in the public interest to make a stream navigable when it is done without cost to the Government or the people that I will not delay you with a discussion of the benefits to be derived from that feature of the bill, but I do desire to call your attention to some apparent competitive economic facts, and more particularly do I wish to call your attention to some of the benefits that our country will derive from the development of the hydroelectric power in our navigable rivers, that at this time is unfortunately, and with great loss to the country, going to waste.

In the joint improvement of navigation and development of water power in the navigable streams of this country, and in the enactment of laws that will encourage these developments, we are confronted with certain competitive economic facts which neither Federal nor State legislation can regulate or control. As an example of one of these there may be cited the instance in my own State of Alabama, where the Alabama Power Co., even in large units of hydroelectric power that can be supplied from its development at Lock 12 on the Coosa River, would refuse to name a price for power lower than one-half cent, or 5 mills, per kilowatt hour. At this rate—1½ horsepower-hours being equal to 1 kilowatt-hour—the yearly cost per horsepower would be about $33, and yet electric power can be generated, using the by-product gases from by-product coke ovens in Alabama, at a cost of 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour, or at a cost of about $16.50 per horsepower-year.

The production of coke in Alabama is now running at the rate of about 3,000,000 tons per annum. This coke, when all produced in by-product coke ovens, will yield waste gases that will produce under boilers 100,000 steam horsepower. It may be expected that in 10 years, as is the case now in Germany and Austria, there will be no coke manufactured in Alabama in beehive ovens, but that all of the coke manufactured in that State will be manufactured in by-product ovens, and the waste gases from these ovens will produce steam power at about one-half the cost of hydroelectric power.

Thus we find a competition between cheaper steam power produced by waste gases from by-product coke ovens and hydroelectric power, which competition exists as an economic fact and can not be regulated by law.

Another economic fact, not to be controlled nor regulated by legislation, is that the hydroelectric power developed by building dams in the navigable streams of this country can only find its largest consumers through electrochemical and electrometallurgical processes, and by far the largest consumer will be the electric furnace. It is not necessary to review all of these processes to arrive at practical and correct conclusions for constructive legislation on this subject.

First, let us follow briefly the history of the manufacture of aluminum, the most useful of the light metals and more abundant in nature than iron, yet which costs, by chemical methods, at least $1 per pound to produce, though by electrochemical methods it is manufactured and sold with a profit at 25 cents per pound.

Aluminum was first manufactured in this country at Pittsburgh, but the lower cost of hydroelectric power at Niagara Falls drew the industry away from Pittsburgh in 1893, and now aluminum is manufactured on an immense scale at several places where water power is cheap and abundant. It is of interest and strikingly pertinent to find that when the manufacturers of aluminum, desiring to locate nearer raw materials needed in its manufacture, established their factories not on navigable streams but selected locations on nonnavigable streams. The American manufacturers have constructed their new plant on the Little Tennessee River, where they can enjoy a perpetual tenure in the supply of power, and it is significant that when it was suggested that larger supplies of power could be furnished for their operations from developments made in the navigable streams of the country, they replied that they would not make investments in factories for the manufacture of aluminum with a tenure of only 50 years, as proposed by the Federal Government for developments in navigable streams. Likewise, when the French Aluminum Co. decided to establish its factories in the United States, it did not apply to the Federal Government for a permit to build dams in navigable streams for the development of its required power, but selected a very expensive power development on the Yadkin River, a nonnavigable stream in North Carolina, where an investment of ten or twelve million dollars is now being made by the French Aluminum Co. This company preferred to select a location on the Yadkin River, where hydroelectric power will be produced at a higher rate than can be produced at a number of points upon the navigable streams of the country, but they said, we prefer to locate where hydroelectric power is higher in cost but where, on a nonnavigable stream, we are free from the restrictive and prohibitive laws proposed by the Federal Government in navigable streams.

In both developments, the one on the Little Tennessee River by the American company and the one on the Yadkin River by the French Aluminum Co., the United States lost two large navigation improvements in the navigable streams of the country which, with more favorable and reasonable laws, the improvement of the navigable streams of the country would have secured free of cost to the United States.

Congress, in passing a general dam act, can not ignore the competition between developments on nonnavigable and navigable streams.

Second, investigation of the electric steel-furnace industry develops important economic facts as related to the development of hydroelectric power. The latest records show that at the present time there are 159 electric steel-furnace plants in operation and under construction in the various countries of the world, as follows:

France	24
Switzerland	2
Belgium	4
Germany	44
Austria	13
Hungary	2
United States	21
England	18
Italy	12
Russia	6
Sweden	6
Norway	3
Brazil	1
Spain	1
Japan	1
Mexico	1

And the productive capacity of all of these plants when in operation is estimated at over 1,500,000 tons per annum of electrical steel.

In order to operate electric steel furnaces cheap power is the first essential. Though the United States is the greatest steel and iron producer in the world, we stand third in the electrical steel industry—Germany first. The great steel corporations of the country, with waste gases from their by-product coke ovens for the manufacture of cheap electric power, have a practical monopoly in the manufacture of electrical steel.

As a measure of the importance of electrical steel as affecting the safety of passenger transportation, it is reported that there are now 10,000 tons of electrical steel rail under test in the tracks of half a dozen railroads of this country, and not in a single instance to date has there been reported a blemish or fracture.

One of the most important items of cost in the manufacture of automobiles is the high-grade special steel required. This class of steel is now being manufactured in electric steel furnaces, using cheap electric power, and very fast electrical steel is supplanting crucible steel hitherto manufactured at a much higher cost in crucible furnaces.

Not only so, in considering this question, it is of unusual interest to know that of the 159 electric steel furnaces now in operation and under construction in the various countries of the world, 18 of these furnaces are making war materials.

That the electric steel furnace in its future enlarged operations, when cheap hydroelectric power is abundantly available in the navigable streams of the United States, will contribute to the safety of passenger transportation and to the decreased cost of living there can be no doubt.

Third, more economically important and of larger commercial interest is the manufacture of air fertilizers by the use of very cheap power, and only by very cheap power through the electric furnace using the cyanamid process. We find, and it is a shock to our commercial pride, that only in foreign countries are cyanamid plants, or lime nitrogen plants, located and in operation for the manufacture of air fertilizers in electric furnaces. While there are no such factories in the United States, these factories are in operation in foreign countries, as follows:

Norway	2
Sweden	2
France	1
Switzerland	1
Italy	2
Austria	1
Japan	1
Canada	1

Total number of plants 14, having a total productive capacity of 200,000 tons per annum, and a total investment of over $30,000,000. The total capacity represents an output of $15,000,000 per annum.

One English company alone is proposing the development of 1,000,000 continuous horsepower for the production of cyanamid and its derivatives, 600,000 of which has been secured in Norway and 400 000 in Iceland.

In addition to the operations using the cyanamid process in Norway there are also factories producing nitric acid and air fertilizers utilizing hydroelectric power with the arc process to the extent of over 200,000 horsepower, with a capital investment of $27,000,000, making a total investment in these industries in foreign countries at the present time of nearly $60,000,000.

Of infinitely more commercial importance, however, than the mere fact that these factories are located only in foreign countries, when we realize that not only are these factories engaged in the fixation of the atmosphere as a fertilizer, is the wonderful economic fact that the product from these factories competes directly with nitrate of soda, or Chilean saltpeter, found only in the country of Chile.

As a measure of the economic importance of this question, we find that the estimated investment in Chile employed in the nitrate of soda industry, or Chilean saltpeter, is approximately $140,000,000. The export duty imposed by the Chilean Government is $11.16 per ton, and 60 per cent of all Chile's revenues are derived from this one source alone. During 31 years, beginning with the year 1879, the world's industries and its agriculture have paid Chile a bill of nearly $500,000,000. The official figures showing imports of nitrate of soda into the United States, by years, for 31 years, from 1883 to 1913, inclusive, amount to 6,516,031 tons, with a value of $209,971,246. In the year 1883, 56,937 tons, with a value of $2,262,701, were imported, and the importations increased so fast that in 1913, 589,135 tons, with a value of $20,718,968, were imported; and yet 500,000 horsepower of our estimated 30,000,000 undeveloped horsepower in the streams of this country now going to waste, if employed constantly during a year would produce cyanamid, or lime nitrogen, equal to the amount of Chilean nitrate imported in the year 1913, at a price of $21,000,000 to the people of this country. And yet we find gentlemen on the floor of this House who by captious criticism would destroy legislation that would effect results of this kind to the people of the United States, and say that they do it in the public interest. [Applause.]

The fixation of the nitrogen of the atmosphere as a fertilizer through the use of the electric furnace, supplied with very cheap power, ranks among the very first industrial and economic achievements of science in modern times, and while the commercial importance and growth of this new industry has been by leaps and bounds in other countries and is established commercially in other countries by every encouragement foreign countries could give to the industry, the United States, in contrast, holds the unenviable and humiliating distinction of driving away the factory proposed to be established at Montgomery, Ala., to be supplied with power from Lock 18 on the Coosa River under a grant passed by Congress in 1912 under the general dam law of 1906–1910, which grant the President of the United States promptly vetoed.

While the electric furnace is to be an economic factor in our future steel industry, the electric furnace, supplied by cheap water power, is to find its most useful service to the people of the United States in the electric furnace's relations and contributions to agriculture.

The manufacture of air fertilizers, now established in other countries, when established in this country promises alone to create a new epoch in our fertilizer industry—and the fertilizer industry is the most important of all industries in its relation and possibilities for the reduction of the high cost of living.

These present-day accomplishments and practical lessons of industrial achievements are but object lessons of the immense importance which the electric furnace, supplied by cheap water power, is assuming in our daily lives and in our industrial operations.

The very latest achievement through the electric furnace using cheap hydroelectric power, and in a sense still a secret, but of wonderful economic and commercial importance to the fertilizer industry, is the production of phosphoric acid from phosphate rock, so abundant in the States of Tennessee and Florida and also in Western States, and so indispensably necessary to the fertilizer industry.

The increasing business in this country of selling phosphate rock at the mines and of manufacturing commercial fertilizer made largely from phosphate rock is a matter of common knowledge.

The process of obtaining phosphoric acid from phosphate rock for use in agricultural fertilizers has been hitherto both tedious and very expensive. The process now and for many years employed for procuring phosphoric acid has been the system known as the sulphuric-acid process or treatment, in which process the ground phosphate rock is subjected to saturation with sulphuric acid. This process is unsatisfactory and expensive, both in failing to extract completely the free phosphoric acid from phosphate rock and also as requiring the use of large quantities of sulphuric acid, not beneficial to plant life. Very recently it has been established as a commercial success that with the electric furnace charged with phosphate rock and operating with very cheap water power phosphoric acid without the use of sulphuric acid can be successfully manufactured. The effect of this achievement and its importance to agriculture and its final contribution to the reduction of the high cost of living can hardly be realized.

Congress in passing general dam legislation can, with great interest and profit to the country, ask "Where do the manufacturers of phosphoric acid under this new process with the electric furnace, supplied with cheap power, propose to locate their factories?" The answer to that question is that the first manufacturers propose to locate in Canada, on the Saguenay River, where they have secured 200,000 to 300,000 cheap horsepower with a perpetual tenure.

Thus a second electric-furnace operation, for the manufacture of phosphoric acid, so indispensable to the manufacture of cheap fertilizers for the farmers of the United States, follows the lime-nitrogen factory, which was driven to Canada, and which had proposed to locate in Alabama and use Coosa River power. And where do the manufacturers of phosphoric acid at their proposed phosphoric-acid plant to be located on the Saguenay River in Canada expect to secure their supply of phosphate rock? Surprising as it may appear, they propose to ship Florida phosphate rock by water up the Atlantic coast to their electric phosphoric-acid plants and manufacture phosphoric acid with cheap power on the Saguenay River in Canada, and ship phosphoric acid back to the Atlantic ports for distribution to the farmers of this country. How significant it is that those who propose to carry Florida phosphate rock to Canada by water and ship phosphoric acid back by water to the United States, to be distributed largely by rail to the various States, have asked no permission of Congress, nor have they requested this Government for the right to develop water power in the navigable streams of this country, when millions of horsepower are going to waste by non-use in our navigable streams. [Applause.] Are those who propose this $10,000,000 new fertilizer development by this new phosphoric-acid process Canadians, and do they locate on the Saguenay River inspired by pride of country? Not at all; for the financial organizers of this new development are citizens of the United States. They go to Canada because of the cheap water power to be found there and because the water-power laws of the United States do not invite them to the cheap water powers in the navigable streams of this country. And I wish to say in passing that gentlemen who expect to make political capital for themselves by throwing obstructions in the way of honest legislation to develop the great water power of this country, when these facts become known to the agricultural classes of this country, will have a day of reckoning at their own homes. [Applause.]

For seven years Congress has continued its debate upon this question, and while we talk about the conservation of our water-power resources other countries build dams and conserve their water powers, while ours go on to waste.

In the arid regions of the West it is water, not land, which measures agricultural production. In the cotton fields of the South it is fertilizer, not land, that measures production.

An examination of the summary of appropriations made by Congress for western land irrigation and reclamation discloses the following:

Early irrigation surveys	$350,000.00
Reclamation fund	79,450,438.53
Authorized bond issue	20,000,000.00
Expended by Geological Survey	4,500,000.00
Expended by Department of Agriculture	956,000.00
Expended by or through office of Indian Affairs	10,797,316.29
Total	116,003,754.82

These contributions of the Federal Government by these appropriations in aid of the reclamation of the arid lands of the West are most wisely made, for Congress can make no appropriations and pass no laws so useful to the country as those appropriations and laws which contribute to the increase of our food crops.

What appropriations has Congress made, what encouragement has the Government given to the increased production and cheaper production of fertilizers, so indispensably necessary to the food crops of the farmers of this country from Massachusetts to California and from Maine to Texas? The agricultural fertilizer bill in the United States during the single year 1909 amount to $114,882,541, and the fertilizer bill for 1909 of the 11 Southern States—North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas—was alone $63,992,626.

Is it sound, is it sane, that out of the Federal Treasury the enormous expenditures of public funds for the reclamation of the arid lands of the West be continued—and they should be—and Congress refuse to pass constructive dam legislation that will invite and protect private capital, to be invested at its sole expense in the construction of dams for the joint improvement of navigation and development of power in the navigable streams of the country, which power will be largely employed in the manufacture of fertilizers which are just as necessary to increase the food crops and cotton crop, especially of the Southern States, as water is necessary to the production of food crops on the arid lands of the West?

As an illustration of what atmospheric nitrogen means as a fertilizer, Mr. Frank S. Washburn, president of the American Cyanamid Co., which company has its factories at Niagara Falls in Canada, says:

> Experiments at the Rothamstead Agricultural Experimental Station in England, conducted now over a period of 60 successive years, prove that an amount of nitrogen equivalent to that produced in the cyanamid process by one continuous horsepower will increase wheat production by 150 bushels per year. This means that the application of a horsepower in the United States to the cyanamid industry will some day increase the food supply the equivalent in value of $150. The factory sales price of the quantity of nitrogen thus required would be practically one-half this amount, or about $75.

The President of the United States vetoes a bill passed by Congress authorizing the construction of a dam in the Coosa River, the water power from which was to be used in the fixation of the nitrogen of the atmosphere in that commercial form that competes directly with Chile saltpeter, and the very first year succeeding the date upon which the President vetoed the bill this country paid to Chile $20,000,000 for nitrate of soda used in the arts, sciences, and agriculture.

We man our forts and ships with big guns and pay big bills to Chile for nitrogen material to manufacture powder to shoot our guns with.

In view of the very startling testimony of Gen. William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance Bureau, before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Sixty-third Congress, second session, the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department has been, under congressional authority, endeavoring to accumulate a reserve supply of 65,000,000 pounds of sodium nitrate. Gen. Crozier's statement was made confidentially to the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives and was never printed, for the reason that this Government at that time did not care to disclose to the world the absence of a reserve supply of Chilean nitrate, indispensable to the manufacture of powder.

Pursuant to the recommendations of Gen. Crozier, appropriations were made for the erection of storehouses and for the accumulation of a supply of sodium nitrate, and we now have on hand between 40,000,000 and 50,000,000 pounds. At the present rate of supply it will require something over five years to complete the reserve.

We use approximately 3,000,000 pounds annually of sodium nitrate from Chile, in addition to that which goes into the reserve, in the manufacture of powder, and I think the Navy uses a somewhat greater amount.

Contemplate, if you please, the unprotected position of this country for an adequate supply of sodium nitrate in time of war.

Shall the United States be the only important country in the world wholly dependent upon other countries and pay an export tax to other countries for the essential and principal material necessary for the manufacture of powder? Shall the farmers of the United States pay for fertilizers manufactured with the cheap water powers in Canada and in Europe while our own water powers go to waste and the navigation of our rivers goes unimproved? Shall we continue to preach conservation of our water-power resources and conserve them not at all? Shall we put to service the power along the waterfalls in the streams of this country now going to waste by nonuse and manufacture fertilizers to restore the fertility now fast failing in our farm lands? Every sentiment of national pride for our industrial future demands that we do so.

It has been lately and very truly said:

> The United States in our time is undergoing profound and far-reaching changes. The first great chapter of the Nation's history is closing with the passing of the public lands. From the earliest years of our national existence almost until the present the main work of our people was to acquire and to occupy the public domain, continental in extent. The continent, however, is now practically occupied; there are no longer great stretches of free land rich with all manner of unowned, undeveloped resources. We have come, consequently, to new national bases of life, and are forming new national habits. Our country, in truth, has entered a period of fundamental readjustment—economic, social, and political.

In this "fundamental readjustment" there will be proposed many new "economic" theories of government, many "social" panaceas, many "political" poultices; but none of these should cause us to forget that the earth supports us; that whatever embarrasses and is a burden to agriculture—the very foundation of all wealth—harms society; and whatever contributes to agriculture contributes to the happiness of the human family. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat, will he yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman referred to the monopoly of these electric powers. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that electricity now generated at Lock and Dam No. 12, which Congress provided for a few years ago, is being distributed at the present time at Gadsden, my home town. Up to a few weeks ago the people of that place were paying 16 cents per kilowatt-hour for the use of the electricity. When this distribution or transmission plant was located at Lock 12 the people made complaint that the charge was too much. They demanded a reduction, which was refused. The laws of Alabama require that these electric plants shall supply all parties at the same rate. The people at that place then said to those who were supplying them with electricity for lighting purposes, "We will contract with the Alabama Power Co.," and they went to that company and found they could get a much lower rate, and now those with whom they had contracted, or from whom they were taking these supplies for their electricity at 10 cents, have reduced it to 12 cents, or a reduction of 25 per cent. That is the kind of monopoly that that brings about.

Take the town of Leeds, which is a little town in the gentleman's home county. That town would not be able to erect a lighting plant, but it is to-day securing electricity from that company to light the town. Lincoln, in Mr. BLACKMON'S district, is the same, and numbers of other little towns all through that section of the country are going to be supplied with electricity, and numbers of manufacturing plants are to be supplied with electricity that actually could not obtain it if they had to have their own plants to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with my colleague. Some gentlemen who are obstructing legislation of this kind upon the ground that they are conservationists, I regret to say in my judgment are obstructionists against the best interests of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, while I have very decided opinions about the fundamental principles on which this bill is based, I think it prudent for me not to discuss them now, because I have a distinct local interest in the bill and am anxious that it should become a law whether it adopts the changes and compromises which are being negotiated or not. My interest springs from the fact that men in my district are awaiting the passage of this bill in order that they may dam the Connecticut River between Springfield and Hartford, and create an enormous water power which is certain to stimulate and develop industrial activity all through that enterprising and teeming valley. But this new development and diffusion of power, although highly advantageous, is not what most attracts me in the new project. My chief interest is that I see in it the consummation of the design for which I have labored many years of bringing salt-water navigation to Springfield and Holyoke. You gentlemen who have been here longest know that discouraging story which I have told so often that I will not repeat it now. It is sufficient to remind you that though one of the most popular and influential members of the River and Harbor Committee was deeply interested in the plan and by his position could exert great influence on Congress, yet the project was repeatedly and conclusively balked by the opposition of the War Department. As you know, all Congress could do against their veto was to keep ordering surveys, and that was done so repeatedly that it seems to me there ought not to be a pebble which has not been located or a pollywog or bullhead whose favorite pool has not been charted.

When, however, this plan for a power dam was proposed the War Department at last became favorable and reported in favor of a Government appropriation in conjunction with it which would insure the long-sought end. Then we should have at once not only navigation but a stimulating diffusion of cheap power. But just when everything seemed favorable and our long-delayed navigation seemed certain of immediate fulfillment, there arose over our bill in the Senate that memorable constitutional debate which for the first time developed the two fundamental lines of opinion on the subject of water-power development. It seemed like fatality that our measure which for years had encountered such unforeseen and unavoidable obstacles should be the one over which this constitutional question should be fought out. We did not care particularly which side won. We were willing to accept the charter on the terms which either side offered—and each side was most friendly to us and was desirous we should be incorporated—but was only unwilling that in our charter the principles of its opponents should triumph; and so we were the unfortunate victim of the conflict of two opposing forces neither of which wished us any harm, but both of which together united to annihilate us.

Now, at length it seems that the antagonistic principles are in the way to be harmonized and compromised and that a general law will be enacted under which we can develop our desired water power and the Government will give us our longed-for navigation. And therefore I refrain from discussing or criticizing the bill or its amendments. I carefully abstain from interposing any element of discord, and I only urge that this bill in some form be speedily passed and made law.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] such time as he may desire.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, before beginning my remarks I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I receive quite a number of circulars and letters every day through the mail, but this morning I received a circular addressed to me which I opened and read, and I was interested in the same because of the statements therein made, and I desire to read it for the information of the House. It is from Local Union No. 691, affiliated with the United Textile Workers of America and the American Federation of Labor. I will state that the headquarters of the United Textile Workers of America are located in the city of Fall River, Mass., where I reside, and that John Golden is the president and that Albert Hibbert is the secretary and treasurer. This circular is dated "Newark, N. J., July 6, 1914," and is as follows:

[Local Union No. 691, affiliated with United Textile Workers of America and American Federation of Labor.]

NEWARK, N. J., July 6, 1914.

DEAR SIR: The flax dressers of Newark, N. J., and vicinity wish to have your attention drawn to the harm which has been done their trade by the passage of the tariff act of 1913, and to ask you to use your best influence to have Congress restore the protection which is necessary to enable them to meet foreign competitors on an equal basis. We have always had a 3-cent per pound duty on dressed flax until the passage of the recent tariff act, which placed dressed flax on the free list and left us without any protection whatever. The result is that the Barbour Flax Spinning Co. and other firms have already disposed of fully 80 per cent of the men employed in their hackling departments. They have opened hackling departments in Europe, where they now have their flax dressed at a much cheaper rate than it could be produced in this country. In a very short time hackling of flax will become a thing of the past unless prompt action is taken to have the duty restored on all dressed flax coming into this country.

We workingmen who have been and are being deprived of the opportunity to earn our living at our trade appeal to you to save our trade from being entirely lost to us. We again wish to remind you that prompt action is needed. For once the firms which have given us employment in the past ship their machinery to Europe, it will be impossible to recover the trade to this country.

I am, yours, respectfully,

CHAS. LAUGHLIN, Secretary,
46 Pomeroy Avenue, Kearny, N. J.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not catch the name of the manufacturing firm that employed this writer.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The Barbour Flax Spinning Co.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What proportion of the labor employed by that concern is employed in hackling?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not know.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is rather important to know.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts—

I know not what the truth may be,
I tell the tale as 'tis told to me.

The circular explains itself, and if the gentleman had paid attention he would have found out something about what was stated in the circular which I read. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. He is very much interested in advancing the interest of his section of the country, and I am very glad he is, and I believe this country will grow and prosper and that every man ought to take care of his own part of it, but I believe we should all be broad enough to not forget the interests of all sections of this broad land. The South has great advantages and has enjoyed great prosperity for many years under Republican administrations. I was interested also when he talked about the obstruction to legislation that has occurred in past administrations. I think there is some obstruction here even with the Democratic Party in control in this House, and there is some legislation that has been put on record since the Underwoor Tariff Act was passed which I fear may prove to be not altogether for the best interests of the people. The persons who issued the circular which attracted my attention just referred to it as the tariff act of 1913. For fear anyone should be misled as to what tariff act that circular refers to I desire to say it refers to the Underwood tariff bill of 1913, which was voted for by nearly all the Members on the other side of the House and by a few misguided Members on this side of the House. I thank God I was one of the Members who did not vote for it. I do not believe in it.

The country is beginning to reap some of the fruits of the passage of that legislation. This is simply a cry of distress that comes from a section of the country that feels the effect of this law that was put on the statute books that destroys the efficiency of these men of New Jersey as workmen, and deprives them of the continuous employment which they enjoyed under the policy of protection to American industry, which has always been maintained heretofore under Republican administrations.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. For just a question; yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In the section of the country to which the gentleman refers, the number of depositors in the savings banks has increased and the amount of the deposit of each individual depositor has increased.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. I decline to yield for a speech. I have not the time to yield, because I have only a few minutes. I want to say I know something about the industrial conditions of this country. I know something about the people who are working for a living; I know something about what they suffer from the legislation that has been inflicted by the Underwood bill, and I hope the time will soon come, and I believe it will soon come, when we shall wipe this legislation from the statute books of the country, and the Republican Party will replace it with such legislation as will be for the benefit and advantage of the men who work for a living, and also that the men and women and executors of estates who have capital invested may reap some benefit from their investments.

This country will enjoy prosperity to a greater extent when the interests of both labor and capital are best conserved and property safeguarded.

But the cry has not alone come from the men employed in the flax-hackling plants of the State of New Jersey. I call the attention of the Democratic majority to the fact that there are other flax-hackling plants in the United States; but the men employed in that industry in Massachusetts are in the same situation as their brother workmen in New Jersey, but they tried to impress their unfortunate situation upon the Democratic Party before the Underwood tariff law was enacted, but their cries of distress fell upon deaf ears then. What is the answer of the Democratic majority now?

One of the very few flax-hackling plants in the United States is in Massachusetts, in the fifth district, which is ably represented on this floor by my colleague Mr. ROGERS. I refer to the Smith & Dove Manufacturing Co., of Andover. A year ago last spring, when the Underwood tariff bill was being prepared, the employees of that concern, of their own volition, sent for my colleague Mr. ROGERS. He met them during the noon hour, and they told him that if the rates then forecasted for flax hackling—which rates were later enacted into law—should prevail, it would mean the end of flax hackling in this country. While the debate on the Underwood tariff bill was in progress, on May 2, 1913, Mr. ROGERS offered an amendment designed to prevent the disaster predicted by the 100 or more workmen who had interviewed him, and told more fully the story I have sketched here. Nevertheless, like every other meritorious amendment offered by the Republican side of the House to that measure, it was contemptuously rejected. Apparently the letter from the workmen of New Jersey which I have read establishes the fact that the fears of those wage earners were not idle forebodings.

During the discussion which arose while the Underwood tariff law was being considered in the House of Representatives last year the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] frequently stated that the measure which he presented was a revenue measure, and, if enacted into law, it would remove the burdens which had been inflicted upon the country, and especially upon labor, by the laws which had been enacted while the Republican Party was in power.

He stated that the measure which bears his name would be a competitive measure, because it would provide competition from abroad, and thereby reduce the cost of living to the consumer. He has yet to learn that in order to be a consumer to any considerable extent the laborer must have employment, and that employment is dependent upon the prosperity of the United States rather than the prosperity of any foreign nation.

While considering this phase of the situation I am reminded that the President, when he addressed the Congress, stated that it would be necessary to sharpen the wits of the American manufacturer by bringing him in competition with the manufacturer from abroad.

This is Democratic theory, and will become Democratic doctrine if the people indorse this theory when they cast their votes in the elections that are to take place in the months that will soon confront the American people.

The rumblings of the thinking voters of the State of New Jersey are beginning to find expression in notes of dissatisfaction, which the circular I have read so clearly sets forth.

I want to emphasize what they state in their circular addressed to me, and I assume that they have mailed a similar circular letter to every Member of the House of Representatives, and I quote as follows again from the circular:

> We workingmen, who have been and are being deprived of the opportunity to earn our living at our trades, appeal to you to save our trades from being entirely lost to us.

Gentlemen of the Democratic majority, it is possible for you to grant the petition of the wage earners of the State of New Jersey. Will you do it? These wage earners know that their misfortunes which have blighted their hopes are the result of erroneous tariff legislation. They do not hesitate to so state. Loss of employment at any stated occupation is a serious misfortune; but when the full result of that misfortune is to transfer an industry to another country, and you have the power to prevent that misfortune and to correct the errors and mistakes of your own party in visiting the trouble and distress upon the innocent victims of your erroneous legislation, I repeat, gentlemen of the Democratic majority, will you listen to the Macedonian cry for help which appeals from the laboring men of New Jersey?

There is another feature of the Underwood tariff law which demonstrates the utter futility of the Democratic Party's attempt to work out a theory, which should have been clear to them in advance, as it now shows by experience to be a colossal blunder in its results upon the industry which produces the finer grades of manufacturing tools and machines in this country. In the tariff law which the Underwood law repealed raw materials which are a necessity to advance this important industry which gives employment to high-grade, well-paid mechanics were admitted free of duty; but under the Underwood law these raw materials are subject to a duty, but the finished product, which employs foreign labor to produce, is admitted free. This theory finds exemplification in many phases of the Underwood tariff law. The results in practice is that the interests of the foreign workmen is better provided for than the interests of American workmen, while the policy of a tariff for revenue only may possibly loom large in the item of receipts at the customhouse.

The Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act was a good revenue producer, but the tariff against the products of foreign labor provided in that act gave full protection to the skilled American laborer of the United States.

Our Democratic majority in the Congress seem to forget that they do not represent the majority of the American people.

They unthinkingly assume that they have been commissioned by some mysterious authority to carry out the will of the people.

They forget that they are still the minority party in the country, and that only through the divisions in the ranks of their opponents they are permitted to exercise a little brief authority. Episodes like the circular letter addressed to Members of the House of Representatives should cause them to hesitate in their policy of enacting destructive legislation and to examine themselves and consider whether or not they will be likely to destroy themselves in their anxiety to overthrow the policies in governmental affairs which have given protection to American labor and prosperity and happiness to the American people.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman permit me to make a request?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article from the Chicago Tribune of July 17.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to extend his remarks as indicated?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On what subject?

Mr. FOSTER. On the subject of prosperity in the West.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to withhold my motion for a moment, in order to advise my friend from Massachusetts to answer his correspondent that he should date the cause of the disaster further back, to the tariff of 1909. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16053 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ACCEPTANCE OF STATUE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON GLICK.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the resolution for the special order, which is as follows:

House resolution 558.

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Kansas of the statue of George Washington Glick, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, July 18, 1914, at 3 o'clock p. m.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] to act as Speaker. [Applause].

Mr. TAGGART assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Kansas of the statue of George Washington Glick, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, July 18, 1914, at 3 o'clock p. m.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the law provides that the several States of the Union may send to Statuary Hall statues of two citizens of the State eligible for such an honor, and for the acceptance of such statue by the Congress of the United States. This House is now for the second time engaged in the acceptance of a statue from the State of Kansas. John James Ingalls, in statue, has for many years occupied a place in Statuary Hall. George Washington Glick, formerly governor of the State, was a pioneer. He went to Kansas before it became a State. He went before there were railroads west of the Mississippi River.

When he arrived upon the prairies of Kansas in Atchison County he was at the end of the road trail in that direction. Travel had not gone beyond, and when he stopped he began the work of a pioneer in making Kansas a habitable place in which to live. At that time nothing greeted him and those with him except the broad expanse of prairie that receded from the Missouri River westward to the Rocky Mountains. There were no common carriers of interstate commerce, no bridges, no public buildings and but few of a private character. There were no gas or electric light plants, no telephones, or rural delivery of mails. A young man full of energy and ability even then saw opportunities in that part of our domain that was then designated upon the map as the American Desert. He knew, as those with him knew, what it would require to make that desert a habitable home for a splendid citizenship. He knew of the sacrifices, of the energy, of the determination that it would take. He devoted himself to the work of making Kansas a great State from the day that he arrived upon her prairies until the day of his death. He found it a raw prairie; he left it a fertile field, inhabited by a prosperous and happy people. When he came he found nothing; when he left the people had everything. Gov. Glick saw the prairie broken, houses, barns, schoolhouses, churches, bridges, courthouses, colleges, statehouse, and charitable institutions all built and paid for.

Gov. Glick was one of the many thousands of heroes who went to the front and removed the frontier. The frontier is gone, and those who moved it are going. No honor is too great for them, and George W. Glick was one of their leaders.

He was early engaged in politics. He was a Democrat. He worked for and voted with his party, and yet almost from the beginning of his political career he was elected to office by the vote of his political opponents. He was a member of the Kansas Legislature from the early days of the State's admission to the Union, at odd intervals, whenever he could be prevailed upon to go, up to the time that he served as governor, in 1882.

He was a peculiarly popular man with those who knew him. He had a way of getting close to his associates. It is not strange, therefore, that the people of Atchison County sent him to the Kansas Legislature whenever he expressed a willingness to go.

In 1882 a peculiar political situation arose in the State of Kansas, which finds its sequel here this 18th day of July, 1914, in the acceptance of a statue for the Hall of Fame of the man who saw opportunity and seized it.

In 1880, after a long struggle, Kansas began as a prohibition State. The Democratic Party in its platforms had been declaring against sumptuary legislation of any character whatever. It had declared for resubmission of the prohibitory amendment to the constitution. But the people of Kansas did not adopt constitutional prohibition in a spasmodic frame of mind. It was a deliberate judgment upon their part. It was a determined forward movement from which they did not propose to recede. One of the great men of Kansas and the Nation, John Peter St. John, was the leader of the prohibition cause. He had just served four years as governor and had much to do with the adoption of prohibition in the State. He was running for governor for the third time.

The Democratic Party nominated George Washington Glick as their candidate for governor upon a resubmission platform and in opposition to a third term, and the campaign was made on two lines—opposition to a third term for Gov. St. John and resubmission of the constitutional amendment for prohibition. Many men who were opposed to the Democratic Party and were ardent Republicans had not yet brought themselves into hearty sympathy with prohibition, and they found it easy to vote for a candidate for governor who was making the issue that Gov. St. John had already had two terms. It was a violation of the precedents for the people of Kansas to give to any man a State office more than two terms.

Glick was elected. His term of office as governor was not conspicuous for any great achievement. The legislature was Republican. Gov. Glick was the only man elected that year on the Democratic State ticket. At the end of two years he retired to his home in Atchison, after one term as governor, with the respect of his political foes and with the devotion of his political friends. He was many times rewarded by his party and given place both of honor and emolument. He attended many Democratic national conventions as a delegate. He was the choice of the Kansas Democrats in the national convention of 1884 for Vice President. He was twice appointed by Grover Cleveland as pension agent for the Topeka district, at Topeka, Kans., pensions being distributed from there to the veterans in a number of adjoining States.

In 1911 Gov. Glick, ripe with years and experience and full of honor, reached the end of his earthly career. Gov. Glick was chosen by the Kansas Legislature for this honor from among a long line of Kansans eligible for the Hall of Fame. Offhand, I think of John Brown, Jim Lane, Charles Robinson, Preston B. Plumb, David J. Brewer, Charles W. Blair, and George T. Anthony. I think of others whom death will enroll in the list. Among the many, John Peter St. John, now full of years and crowned with honor. He is rising above political prejudice, and is esteemed and honored throughout the Republic for his devotion to a great cause. But I must not speak more of the living nor much more of the dead. A statue of Gov. Glick, that does credit to the artist who prepared it and to Gov. Glick himself, stands in Statuary Hall at the left of the door as you pass from the House to the Senate. The statue of Ingalls stands at the right of the door. They were neighbors in Atchison. They are together in the Hall of Fame. The statue of Gov. Glick has just been unveiled. I favor the resolution providing for its acceptance by Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HELVERING assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] is recognized.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, George Washington Glick was the ninth governor of Kansas. His name comes of that virile and sturdy German stock, of which people no less than 6,000,000 have come to the shores of the United States since the year 1820, at which time we began the practice of making accurate statistics of immigration.

His grandfather, George Glick, who was the son of the original German immigrant, served faithfully as a soldier in the War of 1812. The father of the mother of Gov. Glick, who was George Sanders, a Scotchman, also fought in the War of 1812 under the flag of the United States. The ancestors of Gov. Glick were residents of Pennsylvania and were identified with the interests and industries of that State. His father was a public-spirited man and took an active part in the affairs of his community. He removed to Fairfield County, Ohio, where the future governor of Kansas was born on the anniversary of American Independence in 1827. George W. Glick became a law student at an early age, and at 21 was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law at Fremont, Ohio.

A young attorney could acquire a reputation 70 years ago more rapidly and more effectively than at this time. The profession was held in high respect. It had not suffered the unfortunate taint of commercialism that has come to it, especially in our great cities. It was then distinctly a profession. It has now become scarcely anything more than a business. Young George W. Glick attained local prominence and high respect as a practitioner of law at Fremont.

Sixty years ago the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska offered to young and ambitious men the most promising field of any part of the Union. There were no railroads in those Territories at that time, and transportation was conducted by means of steamboats on the Missouri River. At that time there were two cities of importance in the Territory of Kansas, only about 30 miles apart and located on the Missouri River, namely, Leavenworth and Atchison. These were perhaps the most alluring places for ambitious young professional men who sought to identify themselves with the new and growing Territory. The name of Kansas had gone abroad throughout the world. There, upon that soil, men met each other face to face and debated with each other, sometimes with terrible meaning in their voices, the grim question as to whether or not the State of Kansas should be slave or free. So intense had become that issue that there was bloodshed in Kansas. "There were drops on the bunch grass, but not of dew." The reputation of the exciting struggle that was in progress added to the enthusiasm of the young and vigorous class of men who emigrated there.

George W. Glick heard the call of Kansas, and in 1859 he went and cast his fortune in the town of Atchison. He immediately identified himself with the movement for a free State. He was an uncompromising foe of slavery.

I presume we have all noticed how certain towns produce a great many noted men. We can go up into the little town of Concord, Mass., and find that in that little city of a few thousand inhabitants there are perhaps a dozen names of men and women that have gone forth throughout the world—names destined for immortality. And we find it so in many another place. Perhaps in every State of the Union there is some one city which, for some reason or another, was the dwelling place of an unusual number of celebrated persons.

About the same time there came to the same town of Atchison another man whose statue adorns Statuary Hall alongside of that of Gov. Glick—John James Ingalls.

Strange, incongruous Kansas. Within that "grassy quadrangle" the unexpected seemed to be the law of life. There, in the midst of the pioneers who were passing through Atchison, was the polished and cultured Ingalls, an orator whose genius approached that of Burke, a satirist outrivaling Juvenal, an intellectual gladiator whose arena for 18 years was the Senate of the United States.

In that very same year came a young man to Atchison, Kans., from Brownsville, Pa., the town in which James G. Blaine grew up, and this young man afterwards became a governor of Kansas, the next following Gov. Glick. He was John Alexander Martin, secretary of the convention that drafted the constitution of Kansas in 1859, and colonel of the Eighth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, a gallant regiment, whose record for sacrifice, heroism, and suffering stands high in the list of the military organizations that have served under the flag of the United States. Albert H. Horton, afterwards a distinguished chief justice of the Supreme Court of Kansas, came and took up his residence in the little town of Atchison at about the same time that George W. Glick came there.

John Seaton, a mechanic and ironmaster—a man who had learned his trade in the old-fashioned way—came and established a foundry in Atchison and became one of the wealthiest men in that city. He left after him not only wealth but an inheritance of honor and a name and reputation for justice toward labor, for personal interest in everyone who took part in his life work with him, and for an exalted type of citizenship that will remain as one of the brightest traditions of the city of Atchison.

I shall not name the living now, nor can I call to mind all the distinguished dead who lived and worked out their careers in that one city. Suffice it to say, without mentioning States or State lines, which seem to mean less as time goes by, that they who came to Atchison represented all that was enterprising, generous, high-minded, and progressive in the American people.

George W. Glick formed a partnership with an able lawyer of Atchison—Hon. Albert G. Otis—and in this partnership continued in the active practice of law until 1894. Mr. Glick was recognized as one of the foremost attorneys at the Kansas bar. Railroad building was active in his time, and his services were sought by railway companies in the multitude of difficulties that beset their path in the beginning of their operations in Kansas. He often received large fees, but it was said of Gov. Glick that if a poor person had a case and seemed to have a right to be heard in court, regardless of whether he was to receive any fee or not, he never refused or failed to see to it that poverty did not prevent a fair hearing in court.

No successful atttorney has ever escaped at least being requested to take part in politics. Very few have been able to resist that temptation. George W. Glick was a Democrat, and it is well known that for the first 30 or 40 years of the history of Kansas the State was overwhelmingly Republican in politics, and there was little, if any, opportunity for one having other views politically to attain to any high place in that State. Mr. Glick, however, accepted a nomination for the legislature, and he was elected in 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and then again in 1868 and 1876 and 1882 as a member of that body.

He took a very active part in preparing legislation in Kansas. He was especially interested in civil procedure, and his work was of immense value to the bench and bar. Prior to his service in the legislature the Supreme Court of Kansas was not required to render its opinions in writing. Through the influence of Mr. Glick as a member of the legislature laws requiring opinions to be fully written and a syllabus to be prepared by the judge who speaks for the court were enacted. In 1863 he drafted and secured the passage of the first law in Kansas regulating the rate of interest on money. In the early days of Kansas, as in all other frontier places, exorbitant rates of interest were allowed by statute. He had a law passed through the legislature changing the then prevailing rates of interest from 5 and 3 per cent a month to 10 and 12 per cent per annum, with penalties attached for usury.

He also took an active part in framing the marriage laws of Kansas. It was extremely difficult under the early statutes of many of the States to prove marriage. This was simplified so as to establish, without all of those difficulties, the legitimacy of children and the title to property. He took part in establishing and perfecting the occupying claimant law, the law relating to wills, the mechanics' lien law, with many others passed in the early sixties that have stood the test of time and still remain as a part of the settled policy of the State of Kansas.

In 1876, although the legislature was overwhelmingly Republican, Mr. Glick was chosen speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives of Kansas. This honor, more significant than it perhaps may sound, usually means in the house of representatives of that State that the speaker pro tempore presides over a large part of the deliberations. But one speaker pro tempore for an entire session is elected, and he has much to do in conducting the proceedings. George W. Glick was a ready and able debater. He had the faculty of immediately grasping the meaning of everything that is done in the legislature. He was a practical lawyer. He did not have to read a statute over and over or examine a bill at great length to grasp the full import and meaning of it. His services were therefore of great value in a legislative body.

He was three times elected a delegate to Democratic national conventions, serving in that capacity in 1868, in 1884, and in 1892. A fact in his history that is not well known is that the Kansas delegation in the Democratic national convention at Chicago in 1892 presented his name as a candidate for Vice President, and he received a large number of votes.

He was nominated for governor of Kansas in 1868 at a time when he and everyone else knew that there was no opportunity to elect a Democrat to that office. He accepted the nomination, performed his duty to the party, and made an active campaign throughout the State. The people of Kansas remembered the canvass that was made by George W. Glick, and in 1882 he was again put in nomination as the unanimous choice of his party for the office of governor.

Something was said by Mr. CAMPBELL of the situation which obtained in Kansas at that time. One of the ablest platform speakers that has ever appeared in Kansas, or, perhaps, elsewhere, was then closing his second term as governor of Kansas. John Peter St. John, who still survives, and though past the age of 80 years, retains apparently the fire and vigor that characterized his movements 40 years ago, was elected governor of Kansas in 1880 for the second time, and, in 1882, offered himself as a candidate for governor for the third term.

It is a strange fact that unwritten laws are very often enforced with greater rigor and with more certainty than the most solemnly enacted statutes. The Republican Party of Kansas in 1880 for the second time, and in 1882 offered him- had its rules and regulations. It had its unwritten laws, and whenever any member of that organization in public life, having enjoyed two terms in office, presented himself as a candidate for a third term, he was almost invariably disciplined by the Republican Party of Kansas. Two great facts made George W. Glick governor—the unwritten law of the prevailing party, and the uncontested and acknowledged excellence of his character and attainments. He was elected by a majority of more than 8,000 votes, although the prevailing party had an ordinary majority of more than 50,000 votes in that State.

He entered upon the discharge of his duties as governor on the 8th day of January, 1883. Sometimes I think that those who are elected by a minority party, aided by some of the majority, make a special effort to serve the people. Their administration is always interesting. They are always respected by the majority party. They are almost idolized by the minority party, to which they gave, perhaps, an unexpected victory. George W. Glick was very popular as governor of Kansas. His administration was marked by intelligence and dignity. His long experience in the legislature and his knowledge of the affairs of the State fitted him in the highest degree to discharge the duties of governor.

He was an economist in public affairs. Perhaps ultimately it was hopeless, as it seems hopeless always, to protest against prodigal expenditures. It has always been an issue in every new and growing State. Gov. Glick protested with the utmost vigor against extravagance in public office. Perhaps he injured his popularity to some extent by his protests; but he foreshadowed in his administration and in his canvass for governor the fact that some time the people are going to take their minds off the issues that are not so vital, and give their consideration to the more pertinent and practical issue of public expenditures. He knew that the American people pay the heaviest of all taxes. The national, State, county, school district, and city or township taxes of the American citizen added together make the greatest per capita expenditure for public purposes in the world. He entered his vigorous protest against this great abuse, so incidental to a wealthy and growing community.

Gov. Glick was a pioneer. He had that advantage that only pioneers have. He saw a country as nature had fashioned it, and witnessed the work of man by which it was converted into homes. This can happen but once. Great artists have undertaken to paint scenes that could have occurred but once in the history of the world. Poets have sought after themes describing incidents in the history of the man as classics because they never happened before and could never happen again. The untouched prairie could be broken but once, and in his time he saw that prairie converted into a landscape that would delight the eye of one who can paint on canvas the glory of rural life.

He was always interested in everything incidental to the growing community. While he was governor he caused to be established the Live Stock Sanitary Commission for the protection of live stock in the State. He insisted on and had enacted into law statutes prescribing better care of the public funds. And let it be said that since his day not a single dollar of the public money of Kansas has been lost.

In 1885 he was appointed pension agent by President Cleveland, and afterwards reappointed. In that capacity he disbursed $85,000,000, and among his papers is the receipt of the Government, showing the faithful disbursement of that vast sum of money.

He gave the last years of his life to agriculture, especially to the improvement of the live stock of Kansas. He had one of the finest stock farms in the State and took a pride in breeding fine cattle. He was one of the commissioners appointed by the State to the Centennial Exposition in 1876. He was again sent to the International Exposition in Omaha in 1898. Throughout his long life he was an interesting figure in the history of Kansas, and was identified with every important or exciting event in the history of the State.

He went out as a volunteer in the Second Kansas Regiment and took part in the protection of Kansas when it was attacked in what is known as the Price raid.

In 1857 he married Elizabeth Ryder, of Massillon, Ohio, a lady descended from a distinguished colonial ancestry. Her ancestors were among the first settlers of Concord, Mass., and she derived her name from forbears who were well known among the early colonists of New York City. For 50 years and more this noble matron having with her the best traditions of American life presided over the hospitable home of George W. Glick, with the grace and dignity inherited from a fine ancestry. She added to the success of his public life the greater blessing of domestic happiness. Two children were born of this union—Frederick H. Glick and Mrs. James W. Orr, of Atchison, Kans.

George W. Glick died April 13, 1911, at the age of 84 years, having devoted to the world two-thirds of a century of active and valuable service, all of which added to the welfare of his fellow men and the progress of the great and growing community that was the scene of his noblest efforts.

In conclusion, let it be said of George W. Glick that he had one of those fortunate frames of minds which was not easily changed nor readily prejudiced nor carried away by any sudden impulse. He never moped nor mourned over defeat. He was calm, good-natured, and sensible in victory. He never visited revenge of any kind or character upon an enemy, if indeed there was anyone who ever had such resentment against him as to be described as an enemy. He was a kind and gentle citizen, full of enterprise and hope. He was approachable and sympathetic. George W. Glick was one of the best of that great multitude of enterprising citizens who were the pioneers of Kansas. There was no bitterness that gnawed out his life. There was no hatred that troubled his spirit. In his heart was good will toward all men. He saw the beginning of a great State and witnessed its progress for more than 50 years. He left it better than he found it. He added to the sum of its enterprise and he helped to develop its resources. He left his name and his work as a part of its history. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, there are several considerations which lead me to add to the expressions already made here this afternoon, and not the least of the moving causes has been the nature of the addresses made by the gentlemen who immediately preceded me, Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. TAGGART. In the nature of things that portion of the Capitol once the Hall of Representatives, and now known as Statuary Hall, in which each State may place two statues, will soon be closed to additional memorials. It may not be amiss to remark in passing that as the custom of placing statues there grows old, and, because of the physical limitations of the area itself, as well as the provisions of the law, draws to a close, the legislative business of presenting a statue to the Nation has become more or less perfunctory, a function performed in a wilderness of empty seats, before a drowsy reporter or two in the press gallery and a scant baker's dozen of other auditors. And yet the function, I submit, desperately formal as it has grown to be, carries with it a kindly office; for there must be virtue in the mellowing reminiscences which on these occasions well up out of the era that is gone, when, through the mists of the past, the hard lines soften and the soft lines glow as they have to-day to me, as I listened to the addresses of the two gentlemen who have preceded me.

George W. Glick belonged to an exceptional generation in time and place. The first settlement of Kansas came about not so much through the lure of land as from challenge of political contest, grown white-hot with the contention of 50 years. Men moved from the South and from the North into Kansas to battle. Largely because of river travel, then the sole means of public conveyance, the first part of Kansas settled was the northeastern corner, which is touched by the Missouri River. In this section of Kansas the chief cities were and are Atchison and Leavenworth. George W. Glick was from Atchison. Across the river is St. Joseph. That part of Kansas and Missouri is one of the richest agricultural sections in the world. It was here that the spark of conflict that had irritated a Nation for decades burst into devastating flame. The nomenclature of Kansas shows in many instances how early the southern element dominated politically, for you will find on the map of Kansas names of men who were politically prominent in the South 60 and 70 years ago. The contest here was high-tensioned and all-absorbing. There was no neutral ground. And no man was neutral. Each new arrival was to one side a loss, to the other an acquisition. And no man escaped.

As a boy I heard my father tell the story, legendary but illuminating, to the effect that when the proslavery men possessed the northeastern corner of Kansas it was their custom to post themselves at an important landing on the Missouri River and interrogate the new arrival to determine whether he was proslavery or antislavery. The crowd had tied to a convenient post a cow, and they asked the newcomer what the animal was. If he said it was a cow, they permitted him to remain as likely to be proslavery, but if he said it was a "keow," pronounced with what was believed to be the New England twang, they sent him back posthaste across the Missouri River as surely antislavery.

To the struggle for political possession the untold agricultural possibilities of the domain remained for the moment secondary and subordinate, for knowledge of its resources was necessarily limited. The map makers had libeled it by including a part of it in the "Great American Desert." Even its Indian population was not large. Some of it was unknown, for indeed only a few years before—that is, until the Mexican War—a part of Kansas was Mexico. The territory was a long amphitheater, sweeping gently upward from the Missouri River to the foothills of the Rocky Mountains—prairie—with all the mystery and fascination and loveliness that Bryant limned when he wrote—

> These are the gardens of the desert, these
> The unshorn fields, boundless and beautiful,
> For which the speech of England has no name—
> The prairies. I behold them for the first.
> And my heart swells, while the dilated sight
> Takes in the encircling vastness. Lo, they stretch
> In airy undulations, far away,
> As if the ocean, in his gentlest swell,
> Stood still, with all his rounded billows fixed
> And motionless forever. Motionless?
> No; they are all unchained again. The clouds
> Sweep over with their shadows, and beneath
> The surface rolls and fluctuates to the eye;
> Dark hollows seem to glide along and chase
> The sunny ridges. Breezes of the south,
> Who toss the golden and the flame-like flowers
> And pass the prairie hawk that, poised on high,
> Flaps his broad wings yet moves not—ye have played
> Among the palms of Mexico and vines
> Of Texas, and have crisped the limpid brooks
> That from the fountains of Sonora glide
> Into the calm Pacific. Have ye fanned
> A nobler or a lovelier scene than this?
> Man has no part in all this glorious work:
> The hand that built the firmament hath heaved
> And smoothed these verdant swells, and sown their slopes
> With herbage, planted them with island groves,
> And hedged them round with forests. Fitting floor
> For this magnificent temple of the sky—
> With flowers whose glory and whose multitude
> Rival the constellations. The great heavens
> Seem to stoop down upon the scene in love—
> A nearer vault, and of a tenderer blue,
> Than that which bends above our eastern hills.

This prairie, this fair domain, had its civil birth in the red passion of fratricidal strife, and a State, fitted incomparably by nature as a theater for peace and contentment, came to the Nation as "Bleeding Kansas."

But the vastness of its natural resources were not long unrecognized. After the Civil War the immigration which came into Kansas was largely that of the soldiers of the Union Army, men who had been tempered by the mighty rigors and discipline of war. They launched, individually and collectively, not only into the development of the State, but into politics, and there followed in that period of the history of Kansas a day of the most spirited political contest, conducted with a partisan discipline which was, in its severity, almost military. The Republican Party dominated. Its conventions were huge affairs of tremendous contentions and intense factional passion. But the discipline was perfect. The defeated aspirant for a nomination pledged fealty. To "scratch" a ticket was an unpardonable sin; to be "read out of the party" a disgrace. A nomination was an election. Kansas in this period was probably the most partisan Republican of all the States in the Union.

The Democrats of Kansas at that period were mostly men who had been Democrats before the war, many of whom had served in the Union Army during the war. Immigration to the State added to their number, and in all localities they formed small groups of individuals who held fast to their opinions and who as a determined but always cheerful minority struggled at each election in precinct, city, county, and State; never, however, with notable success until George W. Glick was elected governor.

Gov. John P. St. John has been referred to here by Mr. TAGGART as one of the strongest, if not the strongest, man on the platform this Nation has seen in a generation. He is, in fact, one of the strongest men this Nation ever produced, the pioneer in a principle which spreads around the world. He had been a highly popular governor for two terms. His adherents attempted a third term for him. He was attacked by the Democrats under the leadership of George W. Glick, and Mr. Glick as a Democrat was elected governor of Kansas in this most partisan of Republican States, a little less than 20 years after the close of the Civil War. This event was manna to the Kansas Democrats. They had traveled long in the wilderness. And in their hour of triumph and jubilation as partisans they exalted George W. Glick. That initial triumph remains in the minds of Kansas Democrats epochal, and it led to the legislative preference which sent his statue here.

In the election of George W. Glick party discipline in Kansas had broken down and it was known of all men that despite its strong partisan qualities at bottom Kansas was politically individual in its mental processes. The conditions which led to the early settlement of Kansas invited no weaklings there, and the conditions in Kansas were such that if a weakling came he could not stay. The early Kansans were sons of strength. That is not mere laudation voiced by one partial to his State. As a boy I knew most of the Kansans who have been mentioned here to-day—Robinsons, Hudsons, Martins, Ewings, Anthonys, Brewers, Thatchers, Lelands, Wares, Ryans, Crawfords, Plumbs, the Elders, the Pecks, the matchless Ingalls, the Speers, and hundreds of others I could name were each distinct individual types, all of exceptional talent and strong fiber, men capable of every responsibility and worthy of statues here.

Kansas was the first of the Union States after the war to send an ex-Confederate, W. A. Harris, to the United States Senate. This was in 1897. But as early as 1883 Kansas was forgetting the lines of political division that grew out of the Civil War and was turning to the issues of the future. It was in Kansas among these same strong people later, in 1890, that the new foreseeing element of Populism arose, thriving prodigiously overnight in the fertile soil of political independence in the individual, which is and will continue to be one of the chief characteristics of this liberty-loving State.

The self-reliance of the early citizenship was general. It touched every walk of life. My grandfather, Thomas Murdock, was a minister of the gospel and had part in these rigorous times. Margaret L. Wood, widow of Sam N. Wood, an early Kansan, who was cruelly shot down in one of the county-seat wars, wrote me the other day from Boise, Idaho. In her letter she instanced the dauntless spirit of that people by saying: "Your grandfather Murdock used to walk from Emporia to Cottonwood Falls to preach to us. One of the coldest Sunday mornings I ever saw, my husband came in and said, 'Now get ready to go to church.' I said, 'The weather is too cold.' He replied, 'That old man has walked 20 miles this biting morning to preach to us. The wagon will be at the door in 15 minutes and all of us must go.' The girl whispered to me, 'We will have to go though we freeze to death.' We went, and heard a good sermon. Your grandfather was like the old-fashioned Methodist ministers of Ohio and Kentucky—conscientious, devout, brave, and self-denying."

I knew Gov. Glick in his later years. He had all of the qualities which have been ascribed to him by the two gentlemen who have just spoken. He was old-fashioned in his devotion to frugality. He believed in and he practiced economy. Like all strong men, he was strong in his opinions, firm in his convictions. Like all strong men, he was mistaken in some of them. In common with its entire citizenship, he rejoiced in the high estate Kansas reached in social progress, for he grew to see the State of which he was an early governor rise to the highest development that in many respects, I think, it is possible for a people to attain. He lived to see the day when this vast expanse which he knew as a youth as an endless, treeless, virgin prairie had grown to a rich Commonwealth, populated by a contented folk in the midst of rich fields, churches, schools, with bursting bins of plenty, with bank deposits reaching $600 per family, with $750 per family in live stock. He lived to see his State, consisting of 104 counties, number among them 87 counties without any insane, 54 counties without any feeble-minded, 96 counties without any inebriates, 38 counties without any poorhouses, 53 counties without any persons in jail, and 65 counties without a representative in the State penitentiary.

He lived to see the State which he entered under the lure and invitation of political contest bring to the vision of his old age the splendid spectacle of an era of finished development, of rounded citizenship, of peace and permanent prosperity.

As I said in the beginning, and as I shall say in closing, nearly all the States having given their quota of statutes in yonder Hall; this custom will soon pass. Available space for this statue was found with difficulty in the chamber. We are among the last who will so officiate. Let us account ourselves fortunate that for a few minutes we may put aside the fever and hurly-burly of political strife and, harking back to the contests of other days, which time has softened, pay tribute, in this presentation to the Nation, to the memory of a virile man who lived among virile men in a virile generation. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that a concurrent resolution has been adopted by the Senate accepting the statue of Gov. Glick, but that it has not yet come over from the Senate to the House.

The SPEAKER. It can as well be adopted on Monday as to-day. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that it has not yet come from the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, July 20, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, we turn again to Thee because without Thee we can do nothing. We have no strength of our own for the battles of life. All power belongeth unto Thee. Thou art the creator of all things. Life and death are in Thy hands. But we thank Thee for Thy love, which has provided for all our needs. We come, therefore, with great confidence into Thy presence and look steadfastly into Thy face. We linger at Thy feet. "Our soul waiteth for Thee more than they who watch for the morning." Guide us this day in the way that Thou shalt choose, and may we work out all our problems in harmony with Thy righteous laws. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

TRANSPORTATION OF COAL AND OIL (H. DOC. NO. 1124).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting a report of the investigation in the matter of the relation of common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce to coal and oil and the transportation thereof. The communication has already been printed, and it will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO. 550).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Postmaster General submitting an estimate of deficiency appropriation in the sum of $10,000 to cover the period from March 9, 1914, to June 30, 1914, for payment of amounts accruing under the provisions of the disability clause contained in the postal act approved March 9, 1914, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO (S. DOC. NO. 549).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 16th instant, certain information relative to the truth or falsity of the press report sent out from Vera Cruz, Mexico, and published in the United States, that an ensign in the United States Navy caused to be shot unarmed Mexican prisoners under the so-called Mexican "ley de fuga," which, on motion of Mr. POINDEXTER, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wyoming, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3201) for the relief of John J. Duncan, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 4012) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Grand Junction, Colo., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 694) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 6131) granting a pension to Alpheus W. Clark (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 6132) granting a pension to Marie Love (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 6133) granting an increase of pension to David Delahanty; to the Committee on Pensions.

PENSION BUREAU EMPLOYEES.

Mr. GOFF. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. I dislike very much to object, and I am not going to do so; but I give notice that I shall object to any other requests for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 427) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to the Senate the following information:

First. The names, age, and length of service of all employees of the Bureau of Pensions on March 4, 1913.

Second. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States.

Third. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been promoted since said date.

Fourth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $100 per annum since said date.

Fifth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $200 per annum since said date.

Sixth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $300 per annum since said date.

Seventh. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $400 per annum since said date.

Eighth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $500 per annum since said date.

Ninth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who are now receiving pensions.

Tenth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been dismissed or whose resignations have been asked for since said date.

Eleventh. Total number of Confederate veterans employed in said bureau on the date named.

Twelfth. Total number of Confederate veterans so employed who have been promoted since said date.

Thirteenth. Total number of Confederate veterans so employed who have been demoted since said date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the resolution lie over until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution, under the rules, will lie over until to-morrow and be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING SITE AT OWEGO, N. Y.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 15320) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Owego, N. Y. As this is a very important matter, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the nature of the bill for which the Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for present consideration?

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator from North Carolina proposes to object, I trust he will withhold it until I can make a statement. A site has been purchased on which to construct a Federal building at Owego, N. Y. This bill proposes to waive that portion of the law requiring that a site selected for a public building shall be bounded on at least two sides by streets. The option for the purchase of the site will expire in a week. It is therefore very urgent that the bill should be passed. It has already passed the House of Representatives, and I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I just made a statement a moment ago that I should object to any further requests for unanimous consent, but if the Senator from Virginia thinks this is a very urgent measure I shall not object, although I hope I shall have the strength to object to any further requests of a similar nature.

Mr. SWANSON. There will be no objection to the passage of the bill if it is read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to disregard that portion of section 33 of the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, which requires that the Federal building site selected at Owego, N. Y., shall be bounded on at least two sides by streets.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEALTH CONDITIONS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a brief article from The Outlook of the 27th of June, 1914, relating to health conditions in the Philippines. It is a very important article, as I regard it; and, without taking the time of the Senate to have it read, I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From The Outlook, June 27, 1914.]

"LETTING IN THE JUNGLE."

All travelers in the Tropics know how quickly cultivated land reverts to jungle, and how continuous the struggle against fever and the plague must be in Cuba, Panama, and the Philippines. As quickly as the panic at the coming of the elephant, panther, wild pig, and python enabled them to overrun the Indian village in the Kipling story, so smallpox, cholera, and enteritis excite a terror in men of our breed, and unless they are controlled they effectually bar all colonizing enterprises. The jungle does the rest.

The new administration has had a free hand in the Philippines. The general approval given to the tariff law and the currency bill has served as a certificate of good character. At the same time the remoteness of the islands and the widespread indifference to the results of the American occupation have protected important details of Philippine administration from proper publicity and criticism. For example, improper appointments by the governor of New York or a careless speech by the Speaker of the House at Washington are challenged at once by the daily papers, but similar happenings on the other side of the world lose their umbrage before they are known, if, indeed, they are known at all. We give all credit for good intentions to the President, but he ought to know the hara-kiri which is being committed under his authority in the islands. Of course, as Napoleon said after Trafalgar, "I can not be everywhere," nor can the President be expected to know the full significance of the acts of his subordinates in Manila or in the mountain Province of Luzon. So long as department clerks remain prone to gloss over the errors of their chiefs, first-hand information for the President is exceedingly difficult, if not altogether impossible, to obtain.

The prompt passage of the penal clauses against peonage and slavery raised the greatest expectations as to the efficiency of the new island government. In spite of the dismissal of hundreds of experienced men from the different insular departments, the indiscreet credit given by the new Governor General for the Filipino indorsement which had secured his appointment, and the withdrawal of military control from the southern islands, men experienced in the ways of the East hoped even when their judgment disapproved. But now, as the first hot season is on in Manila, when the American colony is utterly disheartened, and when every berth on every ship is crowded by those whose one wish is to get away from the Philippines, plain words become a matter of public duty.

Not since 1902 has there been such cause for anxiety. A smallpox scare is now terrifying Manila, and the wholesale increase of flies and mosquitoes attests the "letting in of the jungle." Only the great health and sanitary measures followed indefatigably for the last 12 years keep back such a cholera epidemic as ran its course in 1902. The decrease in the number of American health inspectors and the appointment of Filipino inspectors in their places is the explanation. These native inspectors agree with their neighbors about the uselessness of garbage cans, and through race or family sympathy fail to report glaring violations of sanitary order. Thus in six months is undone the work of years.

The English change their viceroys in India, but no one of them would think of dismissing one of that great army of military and civilian subordinates who have become specialists in doing the "day's work" in coercing the native population into some scant respect for decency, law, and order. The health office of Rangoon, hemmed in as it is by cholera, black smallpox, and bubonic plague, is kept in the hands of medical men impervious to any appeal or command save that conducive to sanitary order. They are under no pressure from native public opinion as to what the natives wish done, but with staccato of voice and bearing enumerate to both tourist and native what they must do to survive. The changes in the Philippine civil service, under the present Governor General, coincident with the installation of a new administration in the United States, threaten to brand the whole country as a failure in colonial as well as municipal government. Judged by the warnings of the first hot season, neither the natives nor the Americans now in power are fit to govern in the Philippines, and we should at once determine to "stay" efficiently in the islands, or there will be little but a few figureheads to withdraw.

EDWIN A. SCHELL.

MOUNT PLEASANT, IOWA.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR BACON.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday, December 8, immediately after the routine morning business I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of my late colleague, Senator A. O. Bacon. I have placed the time so far ahead at the request of Senators who desire to pay tribute to the life and distinguished services of our late colleague, and who wish this time to do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there was so much confusion in the Chamber I could not hear the date suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Tuesday, December 8. As I stated, there are Senators who can not be here this summer who especially desire to take part in the exercises, and whom I know Senator Bacon would have been pleased to have had take part.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has been called from the city, and has asked to be relieved from acting further as one of the conferees on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I ask the Chair to appoint a conferee in his place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will be excused, and the Chair appoints the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] in the place of the Senator from Wyoming.

WATERS OF THE RIO GRANDE—GEN. ANSON MILLS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on Saturday last the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] presented a request to publish in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by Gen. Anson Mills, referring to some comments in the course of my remarks upon Senate joint resolution No. 117 on the 23d and 24th of last March. The Senator from New York very kindly called my attention to this communication before offering it, and asked if I had any objection to its presentation. Of course I had none.

Since the adjournment of the Senate on Saturday I have read this letter. I intend to take up but a very short time this morning in referring to it. I would not do this were it not that I think if any criticism is to be offered to a document of this sort or to the remarks of a brother Senator it should be done at the earliest possible moment.

Gen. Mills takes me quite seriously to task for what he seems to think, and perhaps correctly so, unjust aspersions upon officials, both living and dead, which I made in the course of my discussion of the treaty, so called, between the United States and Mexico.

Mr. President, before I spoke to the Senate in support of that resolution I availed myself of almost every known avenue of information. I was convinced that the subject was one of considerable magnitude and involved a somewhat devious history. I was therefore extremely careful to obtain information as closely at first hand as was possible, and only after securing it did I present the resolution to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. President, Gen. Mills does not contradict many of my facts. He confines himself to denying the justice of my conclusions, and particularly as they concern his own conduct.

It may be that I have unjustly characterized the acts which constitute the history of this transaction, but I do not think so. There is no question in my mind—and I do not think there would be in the mind of anyone who will give the same consideration to this treaty—but that it had its origin and its consummation in the presentation and subsequent recognition of claims of the Mexican water users against the Government of the United States which had no foundation in justice, in morals, in law, or under any treaty negotiated between the two Republics. Nor can there be any question but that the opinion of Attorney General Harmon delivered in December, 1905, and deliberately ignored from that hour to this, conclusively and finally disposed of all equities based upon such considerations. This opinion Gen. Mills refers to very gingerly, for he can not challenge its existence nor the cavalier treatment it received from the hour of its delivery.

Mr. President, the effect of that treaty upon the people of my State and those of the State of New Mexico has been to deprive them of the use of the waters of the Rio Grande and its tributaries, which are absolutely essential to the development and population of that great section of the country. This great property right has been by alleged processes of law confiscated to the end that the Government of the United States may supply the people of Mexico with 60,000 acre-feet of water every year and at the expense, too, of the Reclamation Service, from which fund $10,000,000 have been and will be taken to construct the reservoir system, which is the fountain source of this perpetual drain. I felt that the people of my State and the people of the United States should be placed in possession of all the facts leading up to the consummation of that treaty and of those as well which have resulted in their deprivation of the water to which they are entitled by virtue of their constitution and under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

So I have nothing whatever, Mr. President, to retract as the situation now stands, and if I had to repeat the speech which I made last March upon the subject I should, if possible, give greater emphasis to some of the facts than I gave to them at that time.

Gen. Mills accuses me of following very closely a communication from Dr. Nathan Boyd, who was at the head of the Rio Grande Dam & Irrigation Co., an enterprise which was completely destroyed by the pernicious activities of those representing the Mexican claimants and the advocates of an international dam. It was a legitimate enterprise, which had commanded a large investment of capital from Great Britain. It had the sanction of the Government, the support of the people of New Mexico, and the decisions of the courts all behind it; yet it was swept aside by a Government suit based upon the wholly gratuitous assertion that its construction interfered with the navigation of the stream, an assertion made worse than absurd by the fact that the Government is building its dam at the same place and on a more extensive scale. If the Government does not reimburse the unfortunate investors in this enterprise, it can not escape just and merited criticism.

I very cheerfully acknowledge, Mr. President, my obligation to Dr. Boyd for the sources of much information which I spread upon the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but that circumstance does not deprive it of its elements of undoubted truth. His company has been obliterated by a process to which the Government was a party, having for its ultimate object, indirectly at least, the confiscation of the waters of the Rio Grande and of its tributaries for the benefit of the people of the Republic of Mexico which belong to the people of my State, and of which they have been unjustly despoiled. The pity of it is that this confiscation was both unnecessary and unbeneficial, since the waters which are the subject of our controversy disappear, either by absorption in the earth or in the atmosphere, long before they complete their journey through the desert country lying between the sources of these tributaries and the location of the Engle Dam. The statements of Gen. Mills himself, which I quoted last March, fully substantiate this.

Gen. Mills also declares that he had nothing to do with the expenditure of the appropriation of $50,000 for the Chamizal arbitration, which I criticized. That may be so. My information comes, however, from the State Department, and until I am satisfied of its incorrectness I shall insist that my statements are in accord with the facts.

Mr. President, as I said at the outset, I do not now intend to occupy the time of the Senate with a discussion of what may be, after all, a personal matter; I shall at another time again discuss my resolution, and I shall then take up the Mills letter in extenso. But there is one other statement in this letter to which I must refer before taking my seat. I may say before doing that, however, that I am by no means through with the controversy between the State of Colorado, in which the State of New Mexico is interested, and the Government of the United States as the outgrowth of these treaty conditions, and shall not be so long as I occupy a seat in the Senate, until the waters belonging to the people of my State are restored to them, to the end that they may be utilized for the upbuilding and the development of the great San Luis Valley, with its hundreds of thousands of acres needing only the fertilizing touch of these waters to yield its harvests in ever-increasing abundance to those who are waiting to utilize them and who must continue to wait until their own Government shall grant them tardy justice.

Gen. Mills, among other things, in his letter says:

> Senator THOMAS'S speech was delivered on the responsibility of his oath as a United States Senator, representing the great State of Colorado. By wise and necessary constitutional provision he may not be questioned for anything he has said therein "in any other place."

Mr. President, it is true that every Member of the Senate is privileged as to anything that he may see fit to utter upon this floor; but a Senator who will shield himself behind such a privilege and by reason of it make a statement here that he would not make elsewhere is unworthy to occupy a seat in this body. Especially is that true if the statement is one of a personal character. I therefore take this occasion to say that I have never, as a Member of this body, uttered, and I hope I never shall give utterance to, either a principle or an assertion, and shield myself behind my privileges as a Senator as against its consequences. I shall endeavor to say nothing here that I would not say anywhere in the country. If I have given or shall give utterance to anything that is offensive, I shall, if it proves to be incorrect or unwarranted, at all times be ready to make due reparation; if, on the other hand, my statements are justified by the facts as I understand them, then I am prepared, Mr. President, to assume responsibility for them in all respects as though I had made them in my capacity as a private citizen. I can reconcile my sense of civic responsibility with no other course of conduct.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill, so called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object.

Mr. NORRIS. I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in this connection I wish to say that at a meeting of the Interstate Commerce Committee this morning it was determined best not to press the trade commission bill to-day, but to occupy the time of the committee in perfecting the securities bill, which is now nearing completion. We therefore will not urge the trade commission bill to-day.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. When does the Senator anticipate that the securities bill will be reported to the Senate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I expect to be able to report it to-morrow.

Mr. BURTON. At the beginning of the session?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Is the Senator able to state to the Senate when the so-called Clayton antitrust bill will be reported to the Senate?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am told that that bill is ready to be reported; but some question has arisen as to one or two sections of it. The matter will be considered this afternoon, and the bill will probably be ready to report to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is commonly known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who is absent on account of sickness in his family, and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is absent from the city, but I am privileged to vote on all matters relating to this bill. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH. I inquire if the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. WALSH. I have a pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. STONE. I inquire if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. STONE. I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is not present. I transfer the pair I have with him to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that my pair, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], is not present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "yea."

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the pair between the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], between the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and between the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bankhead	Lane	Pomerene	Sterling

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, on Thursday last I was speaking of the deficiency of facts and statistics relating to river and harbor improvement, and sought to show that this deficiency was one main reason for errors in our legislation on this subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I noticed in the RECORD—indeed, I think I was present when the statement was made—that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] declared the other day that there was not a single item in this bill that was not meritorious. I think that is the substance of his observation.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio, if he will permit me, to two items I find discussed in the Washington Herald of this morning, and I will read them:

Between Knoxville and Chattanooga the Tennessee River maintains a depth of from 3 to 4 feet. In the pending bill is an authorization for the construction of a dam at a cost of $1,600,000. The construction of this would raise the water to a 6-foot depth for 22 miles in the center of a stretch of 188 miles, an obviously useless expenditure in so far as benefiting commerce is concerned.

The tonnage on the Red River below Fulton, Ark., last year was 44,967, of which 42,640 tons consisted of saw logs. This total tonnage was valued at $354,715. The total amount appropriated for this stream to date is $2,768,377. The cost of this commerce per ton to the Government, averaging over a period of years, tonnage and expenditures, amounts to $4.68 if the logs are included and $90.56 if the logs are excluded. The cost per ton-mile amounts to $1.53. The average charge per ton-mile on freight carried on railroads in 1911 was $0.00757. And yet this project is given an additional $100,000 in the Senate bill.

I will ask the Senator from Ohio if he is familiar with those two projects that are in the present bill; and if so, whether they come under the head of "meritorious," as it has been asserted all of these items are?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think they do.

Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. KENYON addressed the Chair.

Mr. BURTON. I am anxious to pursue a consecutive line of argument. On Friday last there was a very interesting discussion between Members of the Senate, in which I did not participate, as to the quality of the items in this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURTON. In a moment. I do not like to anticipate remarks which I am intending to make by taking up those items now, except that I do say it can be shown with the utmost ease that there are scores of items in this bill that are absolutely without merit, and by the time we are through with the debate here I do not think anyone on the floor of the Senate will maintain that they do possess any merit.

Take the items referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire. What is the project? The Tennessee River above Chattanooga is 188 miles in length. For many years an effort has been made to obtain 3 feet of low-water depth by open-channel work. In a recent report it is recommended that that stretch of river be improved at an expense, I think, of somewhat over $3,000,000, with a depth of 3 feet at extreme low water and 4 feet at ordinary low water; but as a part of the project it is recommended that a lock and dam be constructed midway between Chattanooga and Knoxville, about the center of the 188 miles, to furnish a depth of 6 feet. That lock and dam will cost $1,600,000.

Now, what kind of a transportation problem is that—working for an ultimate depth of 3 to 4 feet for the 188 miles, but at an expenditure of $1,600,000, providing 6 feet for 22 miles in the middle of it?

There is another phase of this matter to which I shall call attention later in the argument. You may examine the provisions of the river and harbor bill of 1912–13 and you will find no mention made of any lock. There is reference only to an executive document. When you look at the executive document you find that the local engineer in charge of that improvement submitted an estimate for the improvement of the whole river to cost $34,000,000! Even he was staggered by that, and so he recommended an improvement costing $10,000,000 between Chattanooga and the mouth of the river, and, as I recall, something over $3,000,000 between Chattanooga and Knoxville. The division engineer took up the matter, and utterly disapproved so expensive a plan. Then it went to the board of review, and they recommended still another plan, cutting down the recommendation of the local engineer, and saying that these two locks and dams above Chattanooga were not desirable and that the project be limited to open-channel work in the upper section with one lock and dam in a portion of the middle section. The Chief of Engineers then comes in with still another plan, more expensive, recommending a lock and dam in the section between Knoxville and Chattanooga and another in the middle section.

But under a provision in the river and harbor act of 1912, which does not mention which of the plans in the report is approved—under a provision which says nothing whatever about locks and dams—there has been expended already $23,000 for borings in the upper section for a proposed lock and dam there; and now, unless there is legislation here, the Engineer Corps will go ahead to build that lock and dam, to canalize those 22 miles midway between Knoxville and Chattanooga, to make that part of the river 6 feet deep, while the main body of the stretch is only 3 or 4 feet deep!

I must repeat, Mr. President, that I do not like to attack the recommendations of the Engineer Corps, but before we are through with this matter it is necessary that we should discuss and analyze this constant argument that is offered here, "Oh, the engineers recommend it," and see whether the engineers are altogether right in all their recommendations. I can say no word of them except in kindness, because of my long association with them; and again and again I repeat what I have said, that they have been hampered, embarrassed, and demoralized by the action of Congress in overruling their findings when they were consulted.

As to the other project in the Red River, I called attention to that four years ago. Why, Mr. President, for the amount that we are spending for so-called maintenance on that river, with the amount that this bill proposes to spend, $100,000, barring logs and timber, which could be floated, you could send every ton of freight handled on that river by rail and by steamship to the remotest port in the world and bring it back, for there is only about 2,000 tons on it.

One thing more I ought to say while I am on the upper stretch of the Tennessee River. Exaggerated as were the reports of the engineers on amounts, and liberal as they were with their ideas of Government money—one of them stating in one place that the Government could easily borrow at 2 per cent, and apparently thinking it was worth while to borrow to improve the Tennessee River—everyone who reported on these locks and dams recommended that in view of the great benefit of the immediate localities in which they were to be constructed the land overflowed by the construction of the dams should be furnished by those in the vicinity; that those especially interested in this improvement should see to it that the Government was put to no expense for flowage rights. The aggregate cost of flowage rights on several of these dams—though the report is not altogether clear to me—was $462,000. There is not a word in the bill that makes any reservation, and it looks as if the Government of the United States was not only to be committed to the construction of these dams, but also that this recommendation of every one of the engineers should be disregarded, and even violated, and that in the ultimate completion of the project $462,000 should be expended for flowage rights—that amount being a mere estimate, with the probability that the aggregate will be much more.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] called attention to some newspaper items this morning. I think the morning hour for newspaper clippings is past, so I want to supplement what he presented by an interview in the Washington Post this morning with a citizen of Texas, which I ask to have read, with reference to another proposition in the State of Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe that clipping relates to the Trinity River?

Mr. KENYON. The Trinity River.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, before it is read, that I propose to discuss that famous project at some considerable length when I have an opportunity; but I think it would be illuminating to have put in the RECORD this statement from a distinguished citizen of Texas.

Mr. KENYON. Inasmuch as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] boldly proclaimed that there was not a single item in this bill but that was meritorious, I thought possibly it would be well to have the evidence of a citizen of Texas on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it very proper that it should go in the RECORD.

Mr. BURTON. I yield for the reading of this paragraph. I am a little afraid that when my remarks are read they will seem to lack consecutiveness and logical order, but I have no objection.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to interrupt the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BURTON. I shall be glad to have it read. I really think it is an interesting item, and a valuable commentary as well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

POKES FUN AT TRINITY RIVER.

"I sat in the Senate gallery Friday while the rivers and harbors bill was being discussed, and after listening to the passage at arms between Senators KENYON and SMITH of Michigan, I wondered if they really were in earnest when they said there was no 'pork barrel' legislation in connection with this bill, which annually carries an appropriation so large that it is useless to put it down in figures."

This was the observation of M. J. Wirth, of Fort Worth, Tex., who has lived there for 25 years and is conversant with river navigation in Texas, at the Raleigh.

"I was led to my remarks," continued Mr. Wirth, "by the thought that there are numerous appropriations made by Congress for the Trinity River at and near Dallas, in my State. I believe more than $1,000,000 has been appropriated for this river, which, according to the Army maps, is considered navigable. If any Senator in Washington can find this particular river at this time he can do more than we can. The Trinity neither runs, creeps, nor crawls through Dallas; in fact, it does not even hesitate. Two years ago a new Oklahoma Representative who was asking for an appropriation for the Arkansas, one of the real streams of the Southwest, remarked that the Arkansas was wider in the dry season than the Trinity was long. Recently an electric railroad company endeavored to lease the bed of the river for an interurban line. The Trinity River is the joke of Texas, and to-day it is as dry as a bone. But we never fail to get an appropriation," concluded Mr. Wirth.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. SHEPPARD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield and to whom?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to my colleague first.

Mr. POMERENE. Would it not be well to send the discoverer of the River of Doubt down there to find the Trinity River? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to say that I enjoy the empty jokes in the Senate about the Trinity as much as anybody. They are without any foundation in fact whatever, and are unworthy of any attention unless we admit that they are in a jocular vein.

It is my impression that this Texan did not intend his statement to be taken seriously. I hope at the proper time to show both the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Iowa that they are making absolutely unjustifiable attacks not only on the Trinity, but on the Red and the Brazos and the other Texas rivers they have selected as targets for their attacks.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, from the well-known propensity of the Senator from Texas for water I am sure if there is any water there he will point it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will be able to do that, I think.

Mr. BURTON. I anticipate with much pleasure listening to the Senator from Texas, as we always enjoy hearing him, but I have this query in my mind: What will be the distinctive feature of his remarks when he comes to defend the Trinity? Will they not be jocular? Will they not be humorous? I take it in the final discussion of this bill we should dwell upon facts. It is said that in attacking this particular project and some others the discussion has partaken of a humorous nature. I shall wait with interest to know whether the remarks of the Senator from Texas when he comes to defend them will not also have a very decided coloring of humor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I do not altogether sympathize with what is said in this article about Trinity River. It is of course exaggerated; but I hope those who are defending the river will abstain from like exaggeration. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I shall be entirely willing to leave it to him to say whether my remarks should be characterized as humorous. I believe the word "humorous" is derived from a certain word that suggests water, the Latin word humor, meaning anything liquid, such as water, blood, and so forth.

Mr. BURTON. Perhaps so. I hope there will not be the same degree of exaggeration in the defense of the river which appears in this attack upon it.

I think I may say that, whatever the facts may be in regard to that interview, it represents a very large body of public opinion in the State of Texas in regard to the Trinity River and several other streams or projects in Texas that are included in this bill.

When I was talking on Thursday I dwelt upon the absence of statistics, and called attention to the superiority of the French in this regard. With their wonderful gift for classification and detail, they have prepared statistics in regard to inland waterway traffic which are the best in the world. It is true that in some respects they are no better than our own. They have not essayed to give the value of the traffic as we have. Their opinion in regard to this has been that statistics giving an estimate of freight carried on a river would necessarily be more or less incomplete and inaccurate. So they confine their attention to very minute and thoroughly subdivided figures in regard to tonnage and the distance it is carried. They also give a class of figures in addition to those which I stated the other day which are useful, the freight carried up a river from mouth to source, and that carried down from source to mouth, or in that direction. We have a few of these statistics of up-and-down-stream traffic in our reports. In the tables given on the wall, to which I shall make elaborate reference in future, the figures are given for the Mississippi River from St. Louis to New Orleans, and an effort is made there to give the up-and-down traffic separately and to give also the place at which freight is received and that at which it is discharged. This table, published in the report on the 14-foot waterway in 1908 or 1909, gives these figures for 1907, and is among the most valuable of the statistics now available.

The up-and-down traffic in the Ohio is also given in the engineer's reports. It shows a very remarkable fact, that the overwhelming preponderance is down freight. That is due to several reasons, the chief of which is that the town of Pittsburgh and adjacent rivers and areas at the head of the Ohio River are great contributors of coal and heavy material. It is also due in part to the very steep descent of the river in certain places, which makes the carrying of upright freight very difficult. This will be largely done away with if the system for the construction of locks and dams is completed.

In my remarks I called attention to the two classes of figures which are most important—the tonnage or traffic on rivers from year to year and the average distance of the haul. The French statistics give the whole amount on all rivers and on all canals in the aggregate each year. That aggregate had reached about 32,000,000 in 1904 and in the year 1912, 40,000,000 tons. An increase of traffic from year to year tends to show that the improvements are valuable; that the projects have conferred a substantial benefit upon the public.

There is, however, another class of statistics in connection with the total of traffic which is almost equally essential, and that is the average haul. When the average haul increases or holds its own it is a wholesome symptom. When it diminishes, as it has on most of our rivers, it is a very unfavorable indication.

I read a few of the figures from the French reports for several years taken at random.

The average haul in 1904 on French rivers and canals was 152 kilos. In 1905 this fell off to 149 kilos.

Passing by four years to 1910 the average was 150 kilos. In the year 1911 it was 151 kilos. In the year 1912 it was 143 kilos.

This decline, especially in the year 1912, is not altogether favorable, and gives basis for a conjecture that the traffic on the rivers and canals has well-nigh reached its maximum. No one can foretell with absolute certainty what conditions will be in the future.

Another class of figures that is decidedly essential are the receipts and shipments at the respective cities or points of receipt and distribution upon a river. These are for the most part lacking. The tables given in the charts on the wall are the best that are furnished in any report, and those are only for one year and for one river.

For instance, in the upper stretch of the Tennessee River from Knoxville to Chattanooga it would be of the utmost value if we could ascertain what is the traffic at Knoxville, what it is at Chattanooga, what it is at Kingston, what portion of this traffic is marble hauled 10 or 15 miles and from where, and what proportion is iron ore hauled perhaps 10 to 15 miles, and between what points.

This gives us not only an idea of the relative importance of each point on the river but of the degree in which our improvements contribute to the general good. Are they merely local, or are they interstate or national in their scope? In taking up that river at a later time I shall be able to show that a very large share of this traffic in the upper stretch is purely local and can not assume interstate prominence. For instance, in the year 1912 the total traffic on this river was 474,953 tons, a somewhat larger amount, I believe, than in the preceding year. Now, let us analyze this. Of the 474,953 tons the aggregate of 119,000 tons was sand and gravel hauled an average of 4 miles; 151,490 tons iron ore, not brought from Lake Superior, not brought from out of the State, but carried 16 miles, about where this proposed lock is to be, from the mine to the furnace. Thirty-nine thousand tons were logs rafted, 7,000 tons logs towed in barges, another 7,000 tons lumber towed in barges, and 20,000 tons of railroad ties.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRADY. As this is a very important matter that the Senator from Ohio is discussing, and I observe that there are only six Members on the Democratic side and I think we should all hear his statement, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Goff	Page	Swanson
Brady	Gronna	Perkins	Thomas
Brandegee	Hughes	Poindexter	Thompson
Bryan	Johnson	Ransdell	Thornton
Burton	Jones	Reed	Tillman
Camden	Lane	Shafroth	Vardaman
Catron	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Walsh
Chamberlain	McCumber	Shields	White
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Clark, Wyo.	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Gallinger	Overman	Sterling

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably detained from the city. I ask that this announcement may stand for subsequent roll calls to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia and Mr. SMITH of Maryland answered to their names when called.

Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. SAULSBURY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, another item appearing in this traffic is marble to the amount of 79,000 tons, hauled an average of 12 miles. None of the items which I have mentioned, which make up practically all of the total traffic of 474,000 tons, except about 40,000 tons of general merchandise, miscellaneous freight, and farm products, are hauled more than 36 miles; yet there is an estimate for building in that stretch 11 dams, at a cost of over $11,000,000, not recommended as worthy to be accepted now, but looking to the ultimate improvement of the river. It is time now to call attention to that fact, because if the Senate does not halt this program that is what is coming—an expense of $34,000,000 in the whole of the Tennessee River to accommodate a traffic which has been diminishing. To this must be added a large cost for annual maintenance. What is its present condition? What are we going to gain by this improvement?

The following is a quotation from a report on the river:

> It may, therefore, be assumed that navigation is suspended on account of low water in the section between Chattanooga and Knoxville about 90 days per year, and for about 100 days per year in the middle section.

I admit that navigation is uncertain. As it is said in this report, if they could have assured navigation for two-thirds of the year, or 240 days, it would be better than the present conditions. I concede a certain disadvantage, but take it year by year, that stream is now navigable for 260 days of the year. As against that, the locks in the St. Marys River, connecting Lake Superior and Lake Huron, in a recent year were available for traffic only 7 months and 23 days. So, on the upper stretch of this Tennessee River, for which there is a proposition for an improvement to cost over $3,000,000, and an ultimate improvement of I do not know how much, but at least there will be 11 locks and dams, at a cost of more than $11,000,000, they have to-day, according to this report, a larger number of days for low-water navigation than they have on the Great Lakes with their enormous traffic.

Mr. President, we are asked to approve plans of this kind, and whenever anyone raises his voice against them it is immediately said the engineers have recommended them. Well, if such is the case, is it not well to inquire whether or not some of the deductions and facts of the engineers are wrong. We do not need anyone to rise from the dead to tell us obvious facts; it does not require anyone of special wisdom or training to teach us that on a river which shares with practically all the other rivers of the country a decadent traffic, such an enormous expenditure is not desirable merely for the purpose of securing navigation throughout the entire year. Indeed, if we had had these figures through a series of years; if we knew what were the shipments to the various points, and could recognize, as these statistics show us in part, that the greatest item of the traffic on this river, comprising nearly a third of it, is 151,000 tons of iron ore, carried from the mines of a corporation there to its furnace, a distance of 16 miles only; that next to that the largest item is sand and gravel, carried only 4 miles; does anyone believe that in the years that have passed we would have permitted that improvement at the cost at which it has been prosecuted?

I am merely calling attention to this as one instance, Mr. President. I shall take up the rest of the Tennessee at a later time. The facts in regard to the middle section, from Chattanooga to Riverton, 238 miles in length, are considerably worse than this 188 miles from Knoxville to Chattanooga. It has cost more, the traffic is smaller, and the results have been less promising. There is a section of this river about 206 miles in length, from Riverton to the mouth, at its junction with the Ohio, which, while I belonged to the other House and had a part in this class of legislation, I always believed in, because it could be improved at comparatively small cost. To improve this lower portion was in the line of logical construction, which dictates that, first, you must develop a river from its mouth into the interior; but here are these three sections, practically without a single ton passing from one to the other, independent of each other, which the Government is taking up and improving independently of each other, so that when the middle section is improved to its lower end you will not be sure that the lower section is improved; and when the upper section is improved to its lower end, you will have no assurance that the middle section is improved.

Thus, the whole plan has been illogical, extravagant, and wasteful. "Oh, but," they come in and say, "if this waterway were raised to a high state of efficiency, we would have traffic." I have been listening to that argument, Mr. President, for, lo, these 20 years, and I want to put against it the facts shown by history of water transportation. When there is a stream that will jusify improvement and a certain depth is secured on it—I do not care if it is only 2 feet—you will find traffic. Take the Oder River, in Germany. The low-water depth of a very important section of that river is only 2 feet, and yet they haul on it between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 tons. Take the Elbe, with its magnificent traffic. A portion of that river is only 3 feet deep, and yet on that section much more than a million tons is hauled. There is always the assured promise of development before a high stage of efficiency is reached. The Great Lakes had a splendid traffic before they were improved on a large scale, and yet we so often hear it said if you improve our rivers, they will be just like the Great Lakes. What an absurdity! It is not necessary to present any argument in reply, because everyone knows that the channels of the Great Lakes have a depth of 20 feet and a clear fairway for boats to move in. And, again, there is an even greater difference, because the Great Lakes are in the center of one of the most productive regions in the world, and great quantities of freight must pass and repass upon them. And while I am speaking of the Great Lakes it is well to call the attention of the Senate to a fact which is not generally understood, namely, that the great bulk of the traffic there does not consist of high-grade merchandise or of material of large value; it is composed, for the most part, of coarse material. Beneficial as the improvements have been in the connecting waterways and harbors of the Great Lakes, the great expenditures which the United States Government has incurred there would never have been profitable for the conveying merely of high-grade freight.

Let me read from the figures, gathered at intervals of more than 20 years, to show the average value of that traffic. In 1890 the number of tons carried through the Soo Canal between Lake Superior and Lake Huron, was 9,041,213, with a value, in round numbers, of $102,000,000. I will ask that the detailed figures be printed in the RECORD, as I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to read them all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The figures referred to are as follows:

Average value of freight through Soo Canal.

	Tons.	Value.	Average value per ton.
1890	9,041,213	$102,214,948	$11.30
1900	25,643,073	267,041,959	10.41
1910	62,363,218	654,010,844	10.48

Mr. BURTON. In 1900, in a lapse of 10 years, the tonnage had increased from 9,000,000 to 25,000,000, and the value had increased from $102,000,000 to $267,000,000. In 10 years, from 1900 to 1910, the tonnage had increased from 25,000,000 tons to 62,000,000. In 1912, two years later, the increase was from 62,000,000 tons to 72,000,000 tons. The value in the 10 years, from 1900 to 1910, had increased from $267,000,000 to $654,000,000, and from 1910 to 1912 from $654,000,000 to $791,000,000.

Now, let us see what was the average value of that freight going through there. Was it made up of luxuries? The average value per ton in 1890 was $11.30. On certain grades of freight that would not pay the railway rate from Duluth to Buffalo or from Duluth to Cleveland. In 1900 the average value was $10.41, a drop of 89 cents; in 1910 it was $10.48; in 1912 it had risen to $10.91 cents. By far the largest share of this traffic is iron ore. Next to that comes coal, and now grain, which is of considerable value, and then lumber; but if it were not for the grain and the copper shipped through this connecting waterway, the average value of freight carried through there would be very much less than it is.

What does that prove? It demonstrates that the day of the inland waterway for transporting expensive freight is passed, because even on the Great Lakes waterway, which has the most favorable conditions in the world, not only in the channels and in the variety of industries tributary to them, but also in the equipment for loading and unloading and warehousing, the great bulk of the freight is of coarse material, and the average value of all of it has ranged between $10.41 and $11.30 per ton.

I remember some years ago, when enthusiastic about traffic on the Lakes, I asked the manager of a wire mill located about 2 miles from the wharves at Cleveland, "Why do you not send your wire nails up the Lakes to Duluth by boat? The great majority of the tonnage of lake boats is down; they are seeking uplake freight and are carrying coal at 40 cents a ton; and it will certainly be profitable for you to carry your wire nails by boat." He answered. "The expense of hauling our nails 2 miles to the wharf and then delivering them from the wharf at the other end at Duluth, together with the inconvenience of handling, would be such as to absolutely destroy any differential between railroad rates and boat rates." Here was a city with paved streets between the mill and the wharf at one end, and another city with paved streets between the wharf and the warehouses at the other. As against that, what do you have on the rivers? Roads of an inferior nature leading to them. Most of the population on the Mississippi River is back of the levees at some considerable distance away from the river's brink. There is not sufficient traffic to warrant modern landing facilities; the methods of hauling and handling are as primitive as they were in the days of Noah; and, added to all that, a variation in the height of the river of from 30 to 70 feet on different portions of the river. These are the problems which confront transportation. Those are the facts that have been entirely ignored in this connection.

I confess, when I first took up this subject I had a large degree of enthusiasm on behalf of this class of transportation, and I do not give it up entirely now. There are certain classes of rivers where the improvements are profitable; but I am weary of rainbow chasing; I am weary of a policy which is based on an utter failure to recognize the most fundamental facts and tendencies.

Resuming my argument, Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that branch of the subject, I will ask him if he has discussed the question of traffic and commerce on the Tennessee River?

Mr. BURTON. Only on the upper stretch of the river.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator placed in the RECORD the amounts that have been expended on the Tennessee River?

Mr. BURTON. I have not done so at this time.

Mr. KENYON. I suppose the Senator intends these remarks to be merely preliminary, and that when he reaches the discussion of these matters at length he will discuss that question?

Mr. BURTON. I will say to the Senator that in order that I may not omit any subject of which I say, as I have said frequently, that I will return to at a later time, I am having my secretary make a note of these statements, so that I will not forget any of them.

It goes without saying that charges per ton per mile for different classes of freight are extremely important. Our reports are just beginning to give these figures.

Mr. President, it will be almost startling to observe the high rates charged on traffic on some of these rivers. I want to take up this very river that I have mentioned—the upper Tennessee. I do that simply because the figures are before me.

The average rate per ton-mile on merchandise on the Tennessee River is 11.9 cents. That, it is true, is a high grade of freight. But how does it compare with the average rate per ton-mile for the carriage of freight on the railroads of the country? That rate has varied somewhat in the last few years. I do not recall precisely what it was in the latest year, but it is approximately 7.5 mills, or three-fourths of a cent. The rate for carrying merchandise on the upper Tennessee River is approximately sixteen times as great as the average rate for carrying freight on our railroads, though, of course, it must be remembered that the average for the railroads is much below the rate for high-grade freight.

Mr. KENYON. Is the upper Tennessee River the part above Riverton?

Mr. BURTON. No; the upper Tennessee extends from Knoxville to Chattanooga. The part from Chattanooga to Riverton—238 miles—is the middle section. That is the mountain section. There are maps right here. Let me point it out to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. It will be helpful to the large number here if the Senator will do so.

Mr. BURTON. The river begins by the junction of the French Broad and the Holston, about 4½ miles above Knoxville. That [indicating on the map] is the French Broad and this is called the Holston. They form the Tennessee River there [indicating on the map] 4½ miles above Knoxville. The river flows down here in a southwesterly direction through the State of Tennessee to Chattanooga, a distance of 188 miles.

Mr. KENYON. That is the upper Tennessee?

Mr. BURTON. That is the upper Tennessee. I may say that during the time I was a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House no one contemplated improving that upper section in any way except by open-channel work. To repeat what I have already said, we have now an estimate—although, in justice, it should be remarked that it has not been approved—for 11 locks and dams in those 188 miles, and already expense has been incurred to begin the building of a lock and dam which would cost $1,600,000 just about midway in the 188 miles below Chattanooga.

Mr. KENYON. What will the 11 locks and dams cost?

Mr. BURTON. A little over $11,000,000, as I recall the figures. They average a little more than $1,000,000 apiece.

Next, there is the middle section, 238 miles in length, flowing down here, just missing Georgia, into Alabama. The most of that section is in Alabama. It flows down here and touches one county, Tishomingo, of Mississippi—that is, on the southwest of it—and then goes on to Riverton, Ala. That is the termination of the middle section. That is 238 miles long, most of it in Alabama. That is called the mountain section. Within that space there are two portions or sections improved by locks and dams—one the Muscle Shoals, which for construction and maintenance has cost approximately $4,550,000, and the other, just above Riverton, in what is called the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals. That has cost $2,313,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if it does not disturb the Senator, what has the Government spent on the entire Tennessee River?

Mr. BURTON. A little less than $10,000,000 on the whole river.

Mr. KENYON. With projects of some $10,000,000 more unapproved?

Mr. BURTON. Well, the reports are different. I think the outgoing Chief of Engineers does not recommend quite so much as that. The singular feature of it is that he is apparently more liberal in the upper section than in the lower section. While I am on the subject I want to say another word, as the attention of Senators is called to that river, and I should like to have especial attention given to that, as I shall have to repeat it if it is not noticed.

What is the prospect to be secured from a new lock and dam in the upper portion of the Tennessee to cost $1,600,000, when on two series of locks and dams down here, one costing four and a half million dollars and the other two million three hundred thousand dollars, we have such a showing of traffic? Here is the one that naturally would increase traffic more than any other, because from Riverton down to Paducah at the mouth, 206 miles, it is an open river; but the other, the Muscle Shoals Canal, has been in operation for some years. I think it really opened in 1890. The traffic through those locks and dams for the last year for which we have statistics was 5,520 tons.

Mr. KENYON. What is the cost of maintenance?

Mr. BURTON. I have forgotten. It is a good deal a ton. I will give those figures in a minute. Through the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals Canal, however, the traffic was, I believe, 33,000 tons, of which all but a thousand tons was made up of timber. With such an object lesson as that—5,520 tons in a series of locks and dams costing four and a half million dollars, and only 1,000 besides timber in another costing $2,313,000—this Congress is asked to appropriate $1,600,000 to build a dam up there in the midst of a stretch where the river will be from 2 to 3 feet lower on both sides than it is in the 22-mile pool created by the dam.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if it does not disturb the Senator, the Senate increases the House appropriation by some $400,000, I believe; does it not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. KENYON. So that in this bill it runs up to about $1,000,000?

Mr. BURTON. I think so. It is so scattered over different projects that it will require a great deal of analysis to make clear just what is intended.

I will give the figures of the Muscle Shoals Canal. I think I can turn to those in a minute. The cost of operating the Muscle Shoals Canal for the year ending June 30, 1913, was $48,292.09. There were 5,520 tons of traffic. A computation is made here from which, if you figure interest at 4 per cent on the investment, the cost of the freight carried through the canal was $41.76 per ton. That is not the worst one either. There are one or two others worse than that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator tell us what was the character of that traffic? What was its nature?

Mr. BURTON. I think I can give that exactly. That going through the Muscle Shoals Canal was of rather a high grade.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to exclude timber, of course. That can come through without locks.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I can give it in a moment. It is given on page 2510 of the Engineers' Reports for 1913. As I said, I think this statement carries out the assertion that this is a fairly good class of tonnage:

	Tons.
Coal	36
Cotton	821
Cotton seed	833
Fertilizer	2,196
Flour	124
General merchandise	797
Grain and hay	51
Logs	45
Lumber	242
Machinery and implements	173
Miscellaneous	188
Other farm products	12
Other timber products	2

That poverty-stricken showing is made for that enormous expenditure.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose that means the quantity that passed through these locks?

Mr. BURTON. Through the locks. The Senator from Nebraska must realize that at certain seasons of the year the water is high enough in the river so that they can go by without passing through this lateral canal. The obstacle, however, at the Muscle Shoals is the worst in the river, and naturally the freight which they desire to handle carefully goes through this canal and these locks.

Mr. NORRIS. The information I want to get from the Senator, as leading up to a proposition I am interested in, is what proportion of the products that went through the locks would have traversed the river if the locks had not been there?

Mr. BURTON. There are no statistics available to aid in answering that question.

Mr. NORRIS. The locks certainly would not assist in the logging operations.

Mr. BURTON. No.

Mr. NORRIS. In fact, they would be an obstacle, would they not?

Mr. BURTON. They would. It seems that a few logs did go through, however—45 tons of logs and 242 tons of lumber.

Mr. NORRIS. The people that have the logs could not help but take them through. They could not help it if they wanted to get them down.

Mr. BURTON. If the locks were not there, naturally they could take them through the open river, and that would be the proper place for them.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to find out whether it would not be cheaper for the Government in some of these instances, instead of paying the necessary operating expenses, to buy out and out the material that is taken through them and donate it to the people who are using it.

Mr. BURTON. On that subject the figures here show that the total value of all the traffic that was carried through in that year was $449,857. The interest on the cost and the cost of operating would be $230,000 and a little more; so that it appears that the actual cost there to the Government is about half the total value of all the traffic that went through the canal.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator includes in his figures a great deal of material that would have gone through without the locks.

Mr. BURTON. That would have gone down the river, of course, but under rather unfavorable circumstances.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the case as to some of them, I should think. For instance, the Senator includes in that statement 45 tons of logs and 242 tons of lumber.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. That, however, is only a comparatively small traffic.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but those logs were only obstructed by having a lock there, rather than the traffic being facilitated. In other words, would we not be under some obligation, in case we built locks all along this stream, to pay damages to the men who are engaged in the log business, because it interferes with their traffic?

Mr. BURTON. I hardly think so, although some claims quite as irrational as that have been made in connection with river improvements. In places where enormous expenditures were made in the neighborhood and the greatest benefits conferred the most unreasonable demands have been made for the payment of alleged damages.

While I have the page before me and we are on this canal I want to show the decrease in this traffic through Muscle Shoals Canal.

Mr. KENYON. Which canal are we on now?

Mr. BURTON. The Muscle Shoals Canal. I think I called attention to this matter in a report in 1910. The years for which statistics were available then made a much better showing than now. In the last 10 years the traffic here reached its maximum in tonnage in the year 1906, when 26,878 tons, of a value of $1,074,000, were carried through these locks. In 1907 it fell to 21,100 tons; in 1908 it was 12,537 tons; in 1909 it increased a little to 17,353 tons; in 1910 it fell off to 8,782 tons; in 1911 it increased to 8,962 tons; in 1912 it fell to 5,520 tons. Now, there is an illustration of the progress of river traffic and the probable benefit of building these locks and dams. The series of locks and dams that carried the 26,000 tons in 1906 has shown an almost steady decline, and carried only 5,520 tons in 1912.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator any statistics as to the tonnage prior to the construction of these locks?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think the figures are available. I do not think there are any before 1890. Of course there was a certain amount of open-river navigation. This canal was commenced by the State of Alabama years and years ago, and is at the most trying spot in the river.

Now, coming to the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals Canal, which is down there at the end of this middle section, that cost $2,313,000, as I recall the figures. I am not sure but that there is some further expense to be incurred upon that. In order that I may be entirely accurate I will turn to it so that I may have it before me.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that the Colbert Shoals Canal?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals Canal in the Tennessee River. I think it is indexed here under the head of the Tennessee.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will find something about that on the very next page to the one from which he has been reading.

Mr. BURTON. That is a very interesting lesson, which I think should be brought home to those who are affected by this craze for building locks and dams. It practically extends the open-river section, the best navigable section of the Tennessee River, upstream at least 8 miles and gives better access to two rather prominent manufacturing towns, Florence and Sheffield. Now, what went through that canal? Thirty-one thousand nine hundred and forty-three tons. Let us see what it consists of: Cotton, 81 tons; cotton seed, 29 tons; grain, 160 tons; live stock, large, 1 ton. The probability is that that was some beast of burden, probably a mule, carried up and down. It was put down here as if there were no humor about it. On this canal that cost $2,313,000 one animal, presumably a mule, passed both ways in the course of a year.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator ought not to jump at that conclusion, because it was probably some animal which was crippled and could not walk, and they had to haul it.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire if that animal was going both ways at the same time?

Mr. BURTON. I think that is the most natural conjecture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

FRANCES OWEN LURTON.

Mr. SHIELDS. Out of order, I offer a concurrent resolution and ask that it be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the concurrent resolution.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 29), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17824) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to insert under the head "Department of Justice, miscellaneous objects," the following item: "To pay to Frances Owen Lurton, widow of Horace Harmon Lurton, late a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, $14,500."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. The resolution was just offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was just offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. SMOOT. Is it a Senate resolution or a joint resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a concurrent resolution. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is before the Senate by unanimous consent. The question is on the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17824) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. GALLINGER conferees on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the unfinished business been laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. I object.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the unfinished business the bill for the establishment of a trade commission?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Senator from North Carolina what particular purpose there is in asking to lay it aside?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] stated this morning that he would not proceed with it to-day.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina, and I do it in perfect good faith, why it is necessary to lay this bill aside? I did not understand what the Senator said.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to lay it aside in order that we may go on with the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BORAH. Are we not ready to go ahead with the trade commission bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] made a statement to the Senate this morning in which he said that he would not be ready to proceed with the consideration of the trade commission bill to-day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not in favor of the trade commission bill in its present form, and I do not propose to vote for it, and I am not going to object to-day if the Senator from Nevada made that statement; but for one I shall have to insist after to-day that the trade commission bill be kept before the Senate until it is disposed of. The mere fact that I am opposed to the bill is no reason why I should not be in favor of having it disposed of. I think it is of supreme importance that it should be disposed of. In the absence of the Senator from Nevada this is all I shall say, but to-morrow I shall object to the bill being laid aside.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be permitted, if I may be indulged by the Senator from North Carolina, to say that I am on the subcommittee having much to do with the physical and mechanical arrangement of the bill. I myself feel the same solicitude and anxiety to have the bill proceeded with and concluded, but as I was not in the Chamber this morning, owing to illness the last few days, since the Senator from Nevada, the chairman, has asserted the desire not to go on with the bill and must have some reason for that, I do not believe I have a right to put my views in contrast with his own nor in conflict with his knowledge. For that reason, therefore, I do not urge that the bill be proceeded with to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Nevada, as I remember, stated that the Interstate Commerce Committee at a meeting this morning desired that he should not press the bill to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from North Carolina will yield to me for a moment, I should like to ask unanimous consent that the so-called trade commission bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, Mr. President, I insist upon the request I made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Iowa objects. What does the Senator from North Carolina propose?

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. KENYON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). This morning I made a transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST]. I wish that transfer to remain for the day, unless the junior Senator from Georgia should come in. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CATRON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "yea" reluctantly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] are paired on this question.

Mr. POINDEXTER entered the Chamber and voted "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the affirmative). I transferred my pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I will now transfer it to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 10, not voting 44, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Bankhead	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Brandegee	Lane	Poindexter	Thompson
Bryan	Lewis	Ransdell	Thornton
Camden	Lippitt	Shafroth	Tillman
Catron	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Townsend

Culberson	La Follette	Robinson	Walsh
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Root	Warren
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	West
du Pont	Lodge	Sherman	Williams

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THORNTON in the chair). The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, before the morning hour had closed I was seeking, in response to some inquiries from the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], to analyze the traffic of the Colbert Shoals Canal, Alabama, first opened about November, 1911, constructed at a cost of $2,313,000 and conducted for the first fiscal year of its operation at a cost of $34,500. I had reached the item of live stock, large, 1 ton. It is open to conjecture what that live stock was. Other farm products, 115 tons; fertilizer, 209 tons; flour, 142 tons; logs, 250 tons; lumber, 40 tons; ties, 30,518 tons; other timber products, 4 tons; general merchandise, 329 tons; machinery, 10 tons; miscellaneous, 55 tons.

If you take out those ties, which certainly might be floated in the main river, and which do not need any elaborate canal and locks, about 1,000 tons of freight are carried through this $2,000,000 canal with its lock and dam.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURTON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have made a computation here, and I will give it to the Senator if he wants it.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. It is the exact amount, taking out the ties and logs. There is no reason why ties and logs should need a $2,000,000 lock to go down the river. That will leave $93,592, the value of the traffic, taking out those two items.

Mr. BURTON. No; about a thousand tons.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; 1,175 tons. Without counting any interest on the investment, but simply the maintenance, it makes the cost to the Government between $29 and $30 a ton.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I want to ask the Senator what was the cost of the plant?

Mr. BURTON. Two million three hundred and thirteen thousand dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, to be accurate, there ought to be interest computed on the investment.

Mr. BURTON. Four per cent is the natural rate, which would be $92,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course that would very greatly increase the amount.

Mr. BURTON. In computations made by statisticians and publicists in France in the consideration of this and similar questions 4 per cent is the rate adopted. By general consent among those who have discussed the subject it does not seem fair to make the rate per cent quite as low as the rate of interest paid on Government bonds.

Notwithstanding the showing made, preliminary steps have been taken to build two more locks and dams in that river, one above Chattanooga, at a cost of $1,600,000, and the other between Chattanooga and this improvement, at an expense of a little more than $1,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I can not understand how this Congress has allowed these projects to pass unnoticed. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I was going to say to the Senator from Nebraska, who has estimated the cost of freight carried on that part of the river, that according to the minority report the cost of freight carried through the Muscle Shoals Canal was $41.76 per ton.

Mr. BURTON. That is, all kinds of freight.

Mr. KENYON. That is a very high price to pay.

Mr. BURTON. As I said a few minutes ago, it could be shipped by rail to the seacoast and to the remotest part of the globe and brought back again for that. I do not want to go searching for every coast, but the general statement is not at all exaggerated—that you can ship it to the remotest commercial port in the world and back for that cost.

Mr. NORRIS. I have made here a hurried calculation since the Senator has given me the figures. I did not take the entire cost. I lumped it off into millions, and I find that, excluding railroad ties and logs, it has cost the Government between $98 and $100 for every ton of freight taken through those locks.

Mr. BURTON. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, counting 4 per cent interest on the investment.

Mr. BURTON. That is, interest and cost of maintenance, about $126,000, and about 1,175 tons, exclusive of ties and logs, were carried.

Mr. NORRIS. In round numbers, it makes it $100 a ton that the Government has paid during the last year to carry that freight.

Mr. BURTON. Still, there is more to follow.

Mr. GALLINGER. To carry a ton of logs?

Mr. NORRIS. No; leaving out logs and ties. It costs $100 a ton to carry one animal named here.

Mr. KENYON. Was that animal worth $100? Is there anything to show the value of the ton? In other words, the point made by the Senator from Nebraska is that it costs more than the property is worth?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it does. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I will give the value.

Mr. KENYON. Of this one animal?

Mr. NORRIS. The value of that one ton of animal was $135, and the value of the entire traffic, excluding logs and railroad ties, is $93,592.

Mr. BURTON. And the cost, with interest and operation, is about $30,000 more.

Mr. NORRIS. Something over $114,000. So the Government could have purchased all this material that was carried through there and donated it to the people and still would have been $10,000 or $15,000 to the good.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that does not include the original cost of the investment.

Mr. NORRIS. That includes interest on the original cost.

Mr. GALLINGER. But not the cost of the improvement.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it does not include the cost of the improvement.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would amount to a million or more dollars.

Mr. BURTON. Such a showing as that is simply startling. Take out the material carried through the canal which could have been carried through with the utmost ease and perhaps with a greater degree of convenience without the construction of this canal and lock, and the interest on the cost and the expense of maintenance are more than the total value of all that was carried through by some tens of thousands of dollars.

There are some minutes from which I thought to quote on the cost per ton.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit one question before he leaves that subject? I think it ought to appear in connection with the figures that I have, with the Senator's permission, placed in the RECORD about the Government paying more for the operation of this lock than the traffic and the freight that goes through it is worth. How long has that lock been in operation?

Mr. BURTON. Only a year.

Mr. NORRIS. Is this the first year of its operation?

Mr. BURTON. Since about the beginning of 1912. I have sought, by correspondence and otherwise, to see if I could not get the statistics for the year 1913, but I have been unable to obtain them. Those given are for the first year of its operation. But you would suppose, if there was really an active and vigorous disposition to prosecute that traffic, that freight would be waiting until it was first opened. It may be that figures will be presented here showing a very material increase over those I have presented. I have given the Senate the latest figures available, and the only figures available.

Mr. NORRIS. The figures, however, on the other lock of this same river show that there has been a continual decrease from the opening down to the present time.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, where it has been in operation for several years, the decrease has continued right along from the opening of the lock to the present time.

Mr. BURTON. At least for the last 10 years. Also there has been a decrease in the traffic.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 9, 10, 12, 22, 27, 28, 29, 34, 37, 38, 39, 52, 54, 64, 69, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 79, 81, 83, 87, 88, 90, 93, 95, 101, 102, 115, 116, 117, 118, 120, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 128, 130, 133, 134, 136, 143, 144, 147, 156, 158, 160, 161, and 162.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 31, 41, 42, 43, 48, 50, 51, 53, 56, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 66, 68, 70, 78, 82, 84, 85, 86, 94, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 105, 106, 108, 111, 112, 113, 114, 119, 121, 127, 131, 132, 135, 139, 140, 148, 150, 151, 153, 154, 155, and 159, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Jellico, Tenn., post office: For commencement, $40,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Norton, Va., post office: For site and commencement, $50,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Prescott, Ariz., post office: For site, $7,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sylacauga, Ala., post office: For site, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out, in lines 6 and 7 of said amendment, the following words: "without regard to civil-service laws, rules, or regulations"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 7 of the bill, after line 20, the following:

"Fairbanks, Alaska: For the purchase, at a price not in excess of $15,000, of that portion of the block whereon the United States courthouse and jail now stand, in the city of Fairbanks, Alaska, not now owned by the United States, $15,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 1 of the bill, after line 15, the following:

"Albertville, Ala., post office: For site, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 2 of the bill, after line 11, the following:

"Attalla, Ala., post office: For site, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 2 of the bill, after line 24, the following:

"Beaufort, S. C., post office and customhouse: For site, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 6 of the bill, after line 18, the following:

"Decatur, Ala., post office: For site, $6,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 9 of the bill, after line 4, the following:

"Glenwood, Iowa, post office: For site, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 11 of the bill, after line 3, the following:

"Lancaster, Pa., post office: For site, $138,278.78."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 11 of the bill, after line 5, the following:

"Lenoir, N. C., post office: For site, $7,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert, on page 16 of the bill, after line 8, the following:

"Rossville, Ga., post office: For site, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$445,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,650,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$850,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; and authority is hereby given to contract for the construction of said revenue cutters within the limit of cost heretofore fixed for each of them"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$175,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$679,858"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$502,606"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,942,964"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$88,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,900"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,266.67"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$85,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$340,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,305,520"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$485,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 107, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Except the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the salaries of judges retired under section 714 of the Revised Statutes, and the judges, officials, and employees of all courts whose sessions are held in the District of Columbia, whose salaries shall be paid through the disbursing officer of the Department of Justice as hitherto provided"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$350,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"All acts and parts of acts authorizing the clerks of the United States district courts in and for the States of Oregon, Montana, and Washington, respectively, to charge and collect double the fees provided in section 828 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all acts authorizing United States marshals in and for said States, respectively, to receive and collect double the fees provided by section 829 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed, to take effect from and after January 1, 1915: Provided, That no clerk of the United States district courts in and for said States shall be allowed by the Attorney General to retain of the fees and emoluments of his office, for his personal compensation, over and above his necessary office expenses, including the necessary clerk hire, to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $3,500 per year, to take effect from and after January 1, 1915: Provided further, That nothing herein shall operate to reduce the fees that the clerks of the United States district courts and United States marshals in any State other than those mentioned herein have heretofore been authorized to charge and collect."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$204,420"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Alaska fishery service, vessels and boats: For construction or purchase of vessels and boats in connection with the enforcement of the laws and regulations for the protection of the fisheries and fur-bearing animals of Alaska, $50,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment omit the following: "to be available until expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment omit the following: "to be available until expended"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"MACDONOUGH MEMORIAL.

"For the erection of memorials at or near Plattsburg, N. Y., in commemoration of the victory of Commodore Thomas Macdonough on Lake Champlain in September, 1814, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Secretary of War and commissions to be appointed by the States of Vermont and New York, respectively, to be expended by the Secretary of War, $15,000 toward the memorial of the State of Vermont and $125,000 toward the memorial of the State of New York; in all $140,000: Provided, That no part of the said appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until after the State of New York shall have appropriated a sum not less than $125,000 for its said memorial and celebration."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 9, 10, and 11 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: " : Provided, That the work herein authorized shall be completed on or before January 1, 1915"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 163; and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 44, 45, 91, 92, 138, 145, and 146.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
FREDK. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me for a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Virginia kindly give the Senate an intimation as to the numbers of the amendments which have not been agreed to, and to what they relate?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The items in disagreement, I think, are only six. One is in respect to establishing two new customs districts, one in Florida and one at Kansas City, Mo.; another is the item relative to the drainage system for the Hot Springs Reservation; another is the appropriation for the Glacier National Park; another is the provision relative to the Utah fish station; another is the item for the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and providing for a building to house the Government exhibit; another is in reference to permitting the Red Cross to exhibit articles in connection with the Government departments and bureaus at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Those are the only items which remain in disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. SMOOT. I presume the Red Cross item to which the Senator refers is the one appropriating $8,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Not at all. I do not think it carried any appropriation. I may say that, in my opinion, there is no serious difficulty about that amendment, and I think the matter will be worked out all right.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation is not direct; but, in offering the amendment, I understood that the Auditor of the Treasury Department held that no money which had been appropriated could be expended for the exhibit to be made by the Red Cross.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. A ruling was handed down that the Red Cross was not a department of the Government and could not participate in the exposition as one of the Government departments. The amendment referred to simply admits the Red Cross on the same plane as the Government departments.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that was the idea I had in offering the amendment. I trust the amendment will be retained in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like very much to have the report go over until to-morrow and be printed. I have no idea what has been done by the conferees.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I presume the Senator may insist on that course, though I hope he will not do so. It is very important to get the appropriation bills behind us. If there is any item about which the Senator desires information, I think I am able to furnish it to him.

Mr. JONES. Can the Senator from Virginia tell me what has been done with reference to the item for ocean surveys along the Pacific coast under the Coast and Geodetic Survey? It is amendment No. 122, increasing from $165,000 to $225,000 the appropriation for the ocean surveys and resurveys under the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that we found it impossible to have that amendment retained in the bill. The House conferees were very positive about the matter, and, finding it impossible to have it retained, the Senate conferees receded.

Mr. JONES. I think I shall have to ask to have the report go over until to-morrow. The amendment to which I refer is a very important matter. There are also other amendments in which I am interested and concerning which I desire to secure information.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. What good will be accomplished by having the report go over? The Senator from Washington can deal with the matter now as easily as he can do so to-morrow.

Mr. JONES. I hope to convince the Senate that we ought not to yield on so important a matter, and there are other important amendments that should be retained.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Washington can hardly think that we ought to delay the disposition of an appropriation bill that carries $112,000,000 for a matter of that sort when we have exhausted every effort that we could possibly put forth to have the amendment retained in the bill, but without success. We can not legislate through one branch of Congress alone; it takes both united to do that.

Mr. JONES. That is true; I recognize that; yet this is a matter of very great importance, touching both life and property. There are other matters also in the bill which I wish to examine. I think I shall have to ask that the report go over until to-morrow. The report has not yet been printed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let us call for a quorum and dispose of this report. Why take it over until to-morrow? These appropriations are needed, and the session is far in advance of the time when these matters should have been disposed of.

Mr. JONES. I know that; but we have passed a joint resolution extending the appropriations until the 1st of August, so that we have until that time to take care of this matter, as I understand. There are several other amendments in which I am interested, and I have not had a chance to see whether they have been agreed to or rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can advise the Senator as to the status of any amendment in which he is interested. I can assure him that we have made as earnest an effort as possible to have the amendment retained, but we could not compel the other House to do that which it was unwilling to do.

Mr. JONES. I do not question that the Senator and his colleagues on the committee have done their duty in this matter; neither do I question that if the Senate should be dissatisfied with the conference report and should insist on a further conference that the Senator from Virginia would do his best in the matter. I do not think the Senator ought to insist upon the disposition of the conference report merely upon its reading and presentation to the Senate, without any Senator having an opportunity to see what is in the report. A great many of the amendments have been agreed to with an amendment about which the Senate knows nothing.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The House appropriated $165,000 for this purpose. The Senate amendment, which, I think, was offered by the Senator from Washington, only increased that sum to $225,000. So $165,000 is still left available for this purpose.

Mr. JONES. That is true as to this particular matter; yet this is a proposition which was strenuously urged by the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was urged just as strenuously by the conferees on the part of the Senate. The Senator from Washington can not possibly gain anything by delaying action on the conference report. Of course, if the Senator objects, the report will have to go over until to-morrow, but I can assure him he will not gain anything by it. It is impossible for him, I think, ever to convince the Senate that when the House has given $165,000 for this purpose the simple refusal of the other House to increase that sum to $225,000 should tie up this bill.

Mr. JONES. That may be true, Mr. President, but I feel——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course, the Senator from Washington has the power to delay the adoption of the report if he chooses to exercise it, and the matter may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. JONES. I feel I ought to ask that the report go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Washington will not gain any benefit by the course he has taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Virginia to withdraw his motion to have the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; I will withdraw the motion, and let the report go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will go over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia subsequently said: Mr. President, I feel very unwilling to antagonize the wishes of the Senator from Washington, but upon full consideration of the matter I think it is my duty to move that the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill be adopted. We can dispose of it at this time as easily as we can do so to-morrow.

Mr. JONES. I am not familiar enough with the rules to know whether or not an objection would take the conference report over; but I was just thinking when the Senator from Virginia arose that when I have had an opportunity to look over these items I might consent, later in the afternoon, to the report being taken up. I wish the Senator from Virginia, at any rate, would withhold his motion until a little later in the afternoon, until I have an opportunity to look over some of the amendments in which I am interested. I am not going to antagonize the conference report unless I feel that I should do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator, then, merely wishes a little time to look over the report?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Then I will not press the motion for its consideration now, but after a brief interval I will renew the motion for its consideration.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, there are excellent reasons for a very careful consideration of the relative cost of transportation by rail and by inland rivers. Such a comparison has been made in Germany and in France, and some progress has been made upon it, but it is exceedingly difficult to put the one against the other, because the factors which enter into the complex subject of transportation are so different in the two cases. In the case of the railway, as compared with transportation by water, there is presumably a more perfect collection from the producer and a better delivery to the consumer, because the railway can run its switches and branches to the warehouses of its customers. Then, again there is a very considerable amount of difference in the degree of insurance given. The railway is an insurer; the waterway is not. For this reason I am especially anxious that the figures given here year by year should show the rate per ton per mile.

While I have been discussing this subject my eyes have chanced on the figures for the upper stretch of the Tennessee River. The average rate per ton-mile there is 3½ cents for a great variety of freight, some of it quite coarse. That is found on page 2493 of the Engineers' Report. That is more than four times as great as the average rate on railway freight, that rate being about three-fourths of a cent. Of course the distances in this instance are comparatively short—only 19 miles; so that no conclusive inference can be derived from these figures; but so far as they do have significance they tend to show that transportation by river in many cases, without counting in the cost of its improvement or maintenance, is quite as expensive as it is by rail.

Another point in the furnishing of statistics which is altogether desirable is that they should be given in a distinctive place, either in a separate book or in an appendix to the reports. As it now is, one searching for information must find first the project, and then he must turn over some pages to that portion of the report which pertains to traffic statistics. There is no opportunity to place them side by side and compare them, and, save in a few instances, there are no figures given for consecutive years. The general tonnage or general aggregate for each project is given in the first volume, and in the second volume statistics are given for particular commodities. All this restricts the study of the subject by those who are willing to take a great deal of time to learn the system; indeed, it makes it almost useless to try to utilize the statistics that are afforded here, on account of the amount of labor required to analyze them. In giving consideration to this subject, as I have in the last six weeks, I have found that the greatest difficulty was to get together the figures and frame any generalizations from them.

The French system, as I showed by the book which I produced here the other day, is better. Under that system the figures are all included in one book. They attach such importance to them that a separate publication is devoted to them. I should say, in justice to our system and to our engineers, that in some respects the figures contained in our reports are better than those embodied in the reports of foreign countries. There is an advantage, in the first instance, in the financial statements in our reports. There is no Government which so clearly sets forth the original cost of each project and the cost of maintenance year by year as does our own. The total amount expended for every river and harbor annually is given not only in the aggregate in the first volume but usually by years in the later volume, although in recent years it has been the custom to adopt a statement published by the War Department in 1902 and 1903 for appropriations down to and including the year 1902. In that year, by direction of Congress, an official document was printed which gives for every river and harbor the total amount included in river and harbor and other bills for each project from the very beginning. It is now the custom in the reports to include in one aggregate sum the amount appropriated down to and including 1902, and then to give the appropriation by years since that time.

There is also in our reports—and this is an element of excellence—a detailed statement of successive plans for the improvement of each project, and this is given annually; that is, if the first depth intended in a river or harbor was 10 feet, that date when that dimension was determined upon is given, and if at a later time an increased depth, say, 12 or 15 feet was decided upon by Congress that is also given, and the successive projects are set forth one after another. At times this is confusing. It is made especially confusing when the only statement of expense given is not for the whole improvement, but for the respective projects, and it is necessary to add together two, three, or even more in order to reach the sum total. Nevertheless, to give the separate projects in detail is a decided advantage which our reports have over those of other countries.

In the United States the characteristic feature of all the reports, and the river and harbor acts as well, is the separate attention given to each improvement. One reason for this is the care with which separate appropriations are made for different projects, amounting to three or four hundred, or even more, in each bill, including nearly 200 appropriations for maintenance alone. Mr. President, I think there is room for reform in this regard. I will read briefly from the pending river and harbor bill to illustrate this. On page 2, as the bill came from the House, lines 11 and 12 read:

Improving harbor at Burlington, Vt.: For maintenance and repair of breakwater, $2,000.

In lines 13 and 14 the following item is found:

Improving Narrows of Lake Champlain, N. Y. and Vt.: For maintenance, $5,000.

From the top of page 3, I read this item:

Improving harbor at Salem, Mass.: For maintenance, $7,500.

Also:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: For maintenance, $200,000.

And on the following page, page 4, lines 21 and 22, I find the following:

Improving harbor at Fall River, Mass.: For maintenance, $12,000.

I read from page 5, lines 16 and 17, the following:

Improving harbor at Stonington, Conn.: For maintenance, $6,000.

Several classes of improvements are included in our river and harbor bills. These are represented by different phraseology in the language making the appropriations. If it is a finished improvement the mere words "for maintenance" are inserted; if it is an unfinished improvement, and Congress decides to prosecute that improvement further as well as to maintain it, the words "continuing improvement and for maintenance" are used. If it is a new project entirely, the words "improving harbor," or whatever it may be, "in accordance with the report submitted in House document numbered" so-and-so are used.

In cases in which there is no appropriation except for maintenance, in almost every instance the appropriation is the exact amount recommended by the Engineer Corps. What is the use of encumbering this bill by about 400 items for maintenance in sums ranging from a thousand dollars up to $400,000 or more when, in all except perhaps two or three cases, Congress follows absolutely the recommendation of the Engineer Corps? In the bill passed in 1909 there was an illustration of what might be done in this regard.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it requires 49 Senators to make a quorum. I believe there are about 5 or 6 Senators in the Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Bankhead	Jones	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Lane	Poindexter	Thomas
Burton	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Tillman
Camden	Lewis	Sheppard	Townsend
Chamberlain	McCumber	Simmons	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.	White
Hughes	Nelson	Smoot
Johnson	Page	Sterling

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Less than a quorum having answered to their names, the Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I inquire what number have responded to their names?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-four Senators have answered to their names.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. RANSDELL and Mr. THORNTON answered to their names.

Mr. ASHURST entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press that motion. I am anxious to have the appropriation bills advanced. If the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Senators, there are enough in committee rooms to make a quorum, and we can at least make progress with the appropriation bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if there is any hope of getting a quorum in a reasonable time, I shall not insist upon the motion; but it is a reproach that at this hour we should on the first roll call develop the presence of only 34 Senators. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. REED, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. CHILTON, and Mr. WALSH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it is in order—I am not certain that it is—I should like to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The statement is in order, but no vote can be taken at this time.

Mr. REED. The reason the last four or five Senators who answered to their names were not here before was that they were busy on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will take notice of the order and execute it accordingly.

Mr. BRADY, Mr. MYERS, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. SAULSBURY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the order directing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators be rescinded.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, before the report of the conferees is adopted I desire to say a word or two.

I have no doubt but that the Senator from Virginia and the other conferees did the very best they possibly could on these amendments. I regret, however, that they found it necessary to recede from quite a number of the amendments; for instance, one of $50,000 with reference to medical relief for Alaska, which the Senate put on. The Commissioner of Education sent a letter, I think, to different Senators—I know one came to me—showing the very great importance and necessity of an appropriation of that kind. I know we have had that matter up before the Senate several times, and the Senate has placed an appropriation on the bill for medical relief.

I think the treatment we are according to the natives of Alaska is really a shame and a disgrace to our people. As I understand from the report of the Commissioner of Education he has had to use some thirty or forty thousand dollars out of the regular appropriation made for educational purposes for medical relief and hospital service for the natives, and he was very anxious to have that appropriation increased, because the work that is imperatively needed there can not be done within the appropriation of $200,000 that was made in the House.

As I say, I have not any doubt but that the Senator from Virginia and the other conferees on the part of the Senate did all they could with reference to that matter; and I simply want to express my regret that the Congress apparently will not appropriate the amount of money we ought to appropriate to take care of those poor people in Alaska. I recognize the importance of economy. I think I am as strongly in favor of economy as any Senator; but I do not believe it is economy to mistreat and neglect the people in that country who are dependent upon us. We could really use much stronger language with reference to the matter than merely saying that we are neglecting them. We are neglecting them; we are treating them shamefully. We are allowing them to die of disease that we ought to assist them in getting rid of. They are practically helpless. They are dependent upon the Government, and yet we are absolutely neglecting them in the interest of economy. It is worse than neglect; it is almost a crime.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will let me interrupt him just for a word or two, I hope he will note that the bill carries $200,000 for the relief of the natives in Alaska.

Mr. JONES. For educational purposes; yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Including the employment of physicians. It is really broad enough to include medical supplies. They can do almost anything for the relief of the native people in Alaska with that $200,000. While I thought this additional $50,000 should be appropriated for medical purposes, and made as earnest an effort as I possibly could make to retain it in the bill, I think the Senator himself, and all Senators, should take notice of the fact that we have not neglected the 35,000 natives, approximately, in Alaska when we give $200,000 for this purpose. It is true the caption says it is for educational purposes, but it is broader than education. It specifically mentions the employment of physicians.

Mr. JONES. I know that; but when we take the money for that purpose we take it away from education. They have had to close some of the schools up there in the past year because they did not have the money with which to operate them, and had to take some of the money for medical purposes; so that we are neglecting one or the other. We are neglecting their health or we are neglecting their education when we appropriate only this amount of money.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I agree with the Senator that I should like to have seen it larger, but others did not take the same view.

Mr. JONES. To be sure. I am not criticizing the Senator. I have tried to make that plain.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply want to say that their condition is not so bad as it might appear to be when we remember that $200,000 has been given for purposes including medical relief.

Mr. JONES. I had the $200,000 in mind when I made the suggestion that I did. The $200,000 is absolutely necessary, but it is not enough. It is not enough for educational purposes, let alone for medical purposes, the erection of small hospitals, and so forth. As a matter of fact, the schools there have to perform the functions of medical relief and of hospitals. The Senator is not to blame, but Congress is to blame if it does not make adequate appropriations for the people up there and to care for conditions there. Of course the Senator, as a conferee, had to do the best he could, and I have not any doubt but that he did it, and I am not reflecting on him at all, and I hope he will understand that I know he has been faithful to his trust, as he always is. I am simply urging this because of its importance and because of the duty of Congress. Congress ought to see that we do appropriate a sufficient amount of money for those purposes.

Then I note that the conferees of the Senate had to recede from the provision for a survey for a road in the Rainier National Park. Of course that can not be urged upon the ground of necessity or for the same reasons as this other amendment, and I have no doubt but that the Senator did the very best he could. I regret very much, however, that that item could not have been retained. It is of great importance to the development of the Mount Rainier Park. Our people are most anxious for it, and I regret exceedingly that we can not have it now.

Referring to amendment numbered 122, which I referred to a while ago, increasing the appropriation of $165,000 to $225,000 for ocean surveys on the Pacific coast, I regret very much that that was not allowed. The same thing is true with reference to amendment numbered 125, for two new vessels for the Pacific coast, and some of these other items. As to amendment numbered 136, the clerk of the committee tells me that $50,000 of that amount was included in the urgent deficiency bill, and that left only $10,000; so I think the committee did not do anything especially wrong in receding on that under those circumstances.

Then the $50,000 for fishing vessels in Alaska—that, of course, is much better than nothing.

I want to say, with reference to those matters, that this $60,000 additional for the ocean surveys, and $175,000 for new vessels, and $100,000 for ships for the fishing service, were very urgently and very pressingly presented by the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary went out to the coast personally and investigated these matters, and I placed in the RECORD a long letter that he sent to me urging the importance and the necessity of these appropriations. In fact, instead of the two vessels that the Senate provided for, he wanted six vessels, at a cost of $525,000, and the showing that he presents is very strong. It shows that they are absolutely necessary, and that when we cut out these things for the purpose of economy, for the purpose of holding down appropriations, we are really neglecting the necessities of the service and the necessities of the Government; and instead of economizing, in the end it is going to result in wastefulness. A record for economy may be sought, but if secured at the expense of efficiency and by neglecting the needs of the Government the people will not approve our action. The people want economy, but they want efficient service first. We are refusing the urgent requests of those at the head of the various governmental services for money which they say is absolutely necessary for good service. They know, if anyone does, and our refusal to grant what they say is necessary will result in waste and inefficiency. The record will not be one of which we will be proud, even if appropriations are held down.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Speaking of the $100,000 for the Alaska fishery service, I do not suppose the Senator has overlooked the fact that in addition to the $50,000 contained in this bill there is $50,000 in the deficiency bill, which makes the $100,000 which the bill originally contained.

Mr. JONES. No; the $50,000 that was in the urgent deficiency bill was with reference to the Pribiloff Island necessities, the fur-seal necessities. It was not the ordinary fishing necessities for which they wanted $100,000 for vessels, motor ships, and so on. That is what the $50,000 in the urgent deficiency bill was for. It was for the Pribiloff Islands in Alaska, and the $100,000 for ships was in addition to that.

Now, with reference to this increase for ocean surveys, I suppose the $165,000 could be used by the Coast and Geodetic Survey to do what we wanted done out of a good part of the increase of $60,000; but the $165,000, as I understand from the department, is already apportioned for absolutely necessary work of the department, and unless they abandon some work that they have planned to do and that they consider absolutely necessary they can use nothing of the $165,000 for the purpose which my colleague and I had in mind in getting this appropriation.

I will state what that purpose was. Through some of the channels in Alaska there are what they call pinnacle rocks; in other words, rocks like pyramids sticking up from the bottom. Ordinary soundings are not likely to strike those rocks, because they come up to very sharp points, and the sounding lead might fall and probably would fall between them and show a great depth. About the only way in which these pinnacle rocks can be discovered is to use what is called a drag. I suppose it is something like we use in dragging cornstalks. They drag it along the bottom of the channel, or at a certain depth, and in that way they can, of course, discover these pinnacles.

Just two or three years ago the steamship California struck one of these pinnacle rocks and sank, and 32 lives were lost. This would have been prevented if this channel had been dragged as it is now proposed to do. It was intended to use at least $30,000 of this increase for an additional drag party in those waters of Alaska, on which the number of ships is rapidly increasing. So the department urged this in the interest of saving life as well as for the protection of commerce, and it does seem to me that Congress ought to make ample provision with reference to matters of that kind. That was what at least $30,000 of this increase was desired for, and it does seem that Congress ought to economize on some other things, at any rate, before they neglect matters of this sort. Thirty thousand dollars spent for this purpose now may save many lives and prevent the loss of much property. Failure to appropriate may result in the loss of scores of lives and hundreds of thousands of dollars of property before we pass another bill.

The committee placed an amendment of $50,000 on the bill for an exhibit on the part of Alaska at the exposition. Of course, that is not a matter that is absolutely necessary like these others, so I can not complain so much of that being receded from, and yet it does seem to me that we could appropriate money no more advantageously and no more beneficially than for a matter of that kind. The resources of Alaska are great, but comparatively unknown. We are going to have a great exposition at San Francisco, but we will have but little money for Alaska, and her resources will be illy shown. The Government is going to build a railroad there. If it were a private agency, every opportunity to exploit its resources would be resorted to, and it is parsimonious and most unbusinesslike for Congress to neglect this opportunity to take a step so necesary for the success of this enterprise.

I want to ask the chairman of the committee what was done with Senate amendment 149, with reference to the Macdonough memorial?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was reduced to $140,000.

Mr. JONES. So we gave $140,000 for that purpose?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We did.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it seems to me that simply illustrates how this Congress is saving at the expense of efficiency and at the expense of protection to life and property and appropriates for matters that could be put off for a while. I was in favor of that appropriation, so far as that is concerned, and yet no lives would be endangered or lost, no commerce would be injured, no Government function would be destroyed or affected in any way, shape, or form by the omission of that appropriation. Nevertheless, we have appropriated $140,000 to put up a monument celebrating this victory, which, to be sure, is meritorious in itself. We allow the poor natives of Alaska to go without medical relief; we allow the channels of Alaska to remain dangerous to navigation and dangerous to life; we make no provision for advertising and showing the resources of Alaska, where we are going to build a railroad, on the plea of economy; and yet we provide $140,000 for this memorial! Such action can not be defended.

When I say these things I do not reflect at all upon the conference committee; but I simply call this matter to the attention of Congress, because whatever we do in this regard is going to be the action of Congress. I do think Congress could show itself much more economical and act much more wisely if it would cut out some propositions of this character, or at least put them off for a while, and take up these things that really will be beneficial and a protection to our commerce and to our people. I especially think the needs of the Territory of Alaska and its natives should not be neglected in this way.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what was done with amendment No. 83, covering experimental demonstrations for the purpose of utilizing the by-products of the forests of the West?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that with much regret we receded on that amendment. We urged it as earnestly as we could possibly urge it, and among other things we especially urged the small sum that was asked for by the Senator's State. The House conferees, however, insisted that it was the beginning of a service that would grow into large proportions. While I did not see that such need be the case at all, we found it impossible to move them from their determination to exclude that item, and it was surrendered by the Senate conferees.

Mr. BRADY. I regret that exceedingly. It seems to me that the conferees on the part of the House should give more consideration to a matter of as much importance as this when there was such a small amount asked. While I in no way blame the conference committee on the part of the Senate, and I know that they did the best they could, yet, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] says, it is going to be the act of Congress and not of the conference committee; and the time is coming when the men of the East will necessarily have to give more attention to the wants and real needs of the people of the West.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator is mistaken if he thinks there is any indisposition to do full justice to the western section of our country. I think if he will look through the legislation in all of its phases he will find that the Congress has dealt very liberally with the western part of our country, and it is certainly in accordance with my own ideas. The western part of our country is growing in importance. It is great now, and it is getting greater every year, and I certainly feel every desire to strengthen it and uphold it; and I believe the Congress feels the same way. We are doing to-day a great deal in the arid regions in the Reclamation Service and in the Forestry Service. Indeed, every service that can promote the welfare and happiness of the western people, I think, is receiving a generous response from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BRADY. I am not, as I said before, finding any fault at all with the distinguished Senator from Virginia; but I can not agree with him that the records of Congress will show that they have at all times dealt fairly with the people and the resources of the West. This appropriation was a small appropriation of $15,000; and the State of Idaho itself—a young and growing State, with one-third of its territory tied up in forest reserves, and $383,000 turned into the Treasury for revenues from the forests in 1913—was refused the paltry sum of $15,000 for the purpose of demonstrating what can be done with the by-products of its timber, while at the same time Congress appropriated not only hundreds of thousands but millions of dollars, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] so ably demonstrated to us to-day, for expenditure on rivers where the Nation at large can not possibly be materially benefited by the appropriations.

Therefore I must insist that what I believe we need more than anything else is for the men of the East to come in closer contact with the people of the West, their wants, their hopes, their ambitions, and the resources of the West. I feel and know that while the chairman of the committee at all times has demonstrated that he feels, as he has stated here, that he wants to help the West, on the other hand, not one-fourth of the Members of the Senate and House, in my judgment, have been west of the Rocky Mountains. Under those conditions they can not understand what we really need in that country. My desire in making these remarks is to impress upon the Senators that it is their duty to study the resources of the West. I hope during the next few days to present some statistics showing what the eight mountain States have produced for this Nation, the amount of appropriations they have received, and then compare them with eight of your eastern States that I shall name; and I shall then let you judge for yourselves whether or not you think the distribution of the appropriations has been entirely equitable.

The University of Idaho has done much to demonstrate that the by-products of the stumps and logs of the forests can be made to pay a large part if not all the cost of clearing the land. Dean Shattuck and his able assistants are struggling against great odds in the work they are doing along these lines, and they deserve better treatment at the hands of our Government than they have received; and I serve notice on the Senate now that I am not going to stop until their efforts are recognized and a decent appropriation made to enable them to demonstrate what can be done in a commercial way with the by-products of the forests of the United States.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, there was a provision in the House bill which would cut out the surveys made by the Geological Survey in which the respective States contributed half of the amount, and the provision was so worded as to restrict the operations of that bureau to the public lands. The Senate amended that provision. I should like to know whether that amendment was retained?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The House receded upon that amendment, and the Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. One other amendment: There was an addition of $50,000 for another branch of work by the Geological Survey. That was added by the Senate, and the aggregate amount restored to what it was, I believe, in 1907. Was that additional amount of $50,000 retained?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator will have to give me some reference to it, so that I may locate it.

Mr. BURTON. I am not sure that I can turn to it immediately. I had supposed it would be recognized by the description I gave. It was an addition of $50,000 for the Geological Survey in one of its branches of activity. What is the page on which the Geological Survey appears?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think it is page 107.

Mr. BURTON. If I may ask another question, was any addition made by the Senate for the Bureau of Mines retained?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I remember no addition for the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. BURTON. I will find it in a moment.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator will find the amendment on page 108 of the bill. I think it is amendment numbered 88.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. What was done with that?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senate amendments were lost. The bill was left as it came from the House.

Mr. BURTON. The Senate conferees receded entirely?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I was interrupted and I did not hear the response the Senator from Virginia made in reply to the question of the Senator from Ohio about the amendments on page 108; for instance, amendment numbered 88, where the House provision was $150,000 and the Senate amended it by making it $300,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senate conferees receded and the appropriation is $150,000.

Mr. NORRIS. And the proviso regarding artesian wells for irrigation was stricken out?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was stricken out.

Mr. NORRIS. Now let me ask the Senator about amendment 87. Was that stricken out?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was stricken out. The language of the House bill, it seemed to us, was sufficient if they had the necessary money to embrace the purpose specified in the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, it was the opinion of the Senate conferees that without the words "boring artesian wells for investigation" they still have the power to do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not see how they could investigate underground currents except by artesian wells. I think a direction to investigate the interior of the earth authorizes the boring into the interior of the earth to discover currents of water found there.

Mr. NORRIS. As a matter of fact, with the $150,000 as the bill passed the House it is conceded, I think, that the amount would not be sufficient to do the other work named in that paragraph, such as gauging streams, and leave anything of any considerable amount, at least for the purpose of boring artesian wells.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The amount seemed to us to be too small. The conference committee fixed the amount as it came from the House, at $150,000. The committee put it at $200,000, and on the floor of the Senate it was increased to $300,000, but we were unable to convince the House conferees that more than $150,000 should be appropriated at this time.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the sum as it passed the House originally?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. While I agree with the Senator that they could use this money, or such portion as they saw fit, for the purpose named, and that includes artesian wells, I think it is conceded from the reports from the Geological Survey that they will need that much for gauging streams alone. So, as a matter of fact, while there might be authority there for the work on artesian wells, there is really no money provided for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I agree with the Senator; but the amount was fixed in the appropriation act last year at $150,000, and the argument was made, and very naturally made, by the House conferees that the department had gotten along with $150,000 and did very good service, and the House conferees were unwilling to increase it. The Senator knows that in all this kind of legislation there is no way to fix mathematically the exact sum that ought to be appropriated, nor is there any power to arbitrarily fix it. There must be concessions in such matters in order to get legislative results.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say that I was as anxious as the Senator from Nebraska could be——

Mr. NORRIS. I feel very much disappointed that the amendment was lost, particularly the proviso providing for $100,000, because it was in the Agriculture appropriation bill and was passed by the Senate, and I was informed then that the conferees of the House most strenuously objected because they thought the money ought to be expended under the supervision of the Geological Survey. Therefore I offered the amendment to this bill which provided that it should be expended by the Geological Survey.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. In connection with this matter, if the Senator will excuse me, I understood the chairman of the committee to say that the conferees agreed that under the language of the House bill the $150,000, or so much of it as the department might deem advisable, could be used in sinking artesian wells. Is that correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was the expression of opinion in the committee of conference, and an opinion in which I very positively concurred.

Mr. JONES. Did the House conferees concur in that view?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was the general talk around the board. I would not like to say that they did, for, as the Senator knows, there is nothing in conversations of that sort that is binding on the subject.

Mr. JONES. I know that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was contended by some that that was the proper construction of the present law, and, for my part, I take it that was correct. The only trouble was a lack of money. If a sufficient amount of money had been given, I do not think there would have been any difficulty in using it for the boring of artesian wells.

Mr. JONES. The trouble is, I understand, the department construes that language as not permitting them to sink artesian wells.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. JONES. They have always made that construction. They have always refused to sink artesian wells. The investigations of artesian water, as they understand this language to cover, means such geologic investigations as they can make without actually sinking artesian wells.

That is the reason why I was very anxious to see that language in the bill. While I think a broad construction of it would give them the power and authority to sink artesian wells, I understand the department construes it as not giving them that authority.

Mr. NORRIS. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Virginia, that the language would give them that authority. It has always been my understanding that the reason they never used it for that purpose was because the guaging of streams, of course, was a very large undertaking and a very necessary and important one, and they have not had money enough really to go into that business as extensively as they would like to do. I presume they considered that to be the most important work, and they always used the money for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. I think that is true, although I went to the department a while ago to urge upon them the importance of sinking artesian wells in certain localities under this appropriation, and they said they did not understand the language of the act as giving them that authority, and they could not sink artesian wells. I agree with the Senator and with the chairman of the committee. I think the language is broad enough to do that, but, nevertheless, they have the last say about the construction of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the language. It is for "the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells." That is the language of the bill. So this $150,000 is appropriated for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but they do not think that authorizes them to sink artesian wells.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not see how they can investigate them until they sink them.

Mr. JONES. They have a way of making a geological investigation that does not require the sinking of wells. At any rate, that is as I understand it, and I think I got it straight from the department. They construed it that way, and that is the reason why I wanted language in the bill so that they could not take it as an excuse that they did not have authority to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. What the Senator from Washington says is very interesting to me. I should like to ask him whether it was formally put up to them for construction and they did make such a construction?

Mr. JONES. I did not put it up formally, in the way of a written communication, to get a written answer. I did not put it that way.

Mr. NORRIS. It has occurred to me that, while they did not use it for that purpose, the real reason was that they did not have money enough to do all that they desired to do in gauging streams.

Mr. JONES. I think that would have been the real, substantial reason for them to give; but they put it on both grounds.

Mr. NORRIS. They will undoubtedly do the same with this appropriation.

Mr. JONES. Certainly. They will not sink artesian wells under it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that they wanted $200,000 for the purpose of gauging streams, and I presume they would have been able to use that amount without any question. So the idea of the two amendments was, first, one specifically stating that it was to bore artesian wells for investigation, amendment numbered 87; and amendment numbered 88, to increase the appropriation to $300,000 and make a specific provision that $100,000 should be used for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. I am very glad to get an apparently unanimous opinion, upon the part of the Senate at least, that under this language they have the right to sink artesian wells; but this idea was expressed by the Senate in the Agriculture appropriation bill, and now we shall try and see if we can not get it in some other way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia about two or three small items. I will ask the Senator as to amendment numbered 50, on page 48 of the bill, referring to small parks in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was agreed to, I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now I will ask the Senator about amendment numbered 68, "toward the construction of necessary retaining walls in Meridian Hill Park, $25,000."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now there is just one other. I will ask the Senator about amendment numbered 149, the Macdonough memorial.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was reduced to $140,000, and agreed to at that sum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want in just a word to say that I think every Senator who has had service with the Senator from Virginia upon the Committee on Appropriations knows that he does not yield anything that the Senate after consideration puts in these bills if he can possibly retain the items, but it is a give-and-take operation in a conference committee. I feel sure that the Senator from Virginia has exerted himself to the utmost to retain all the items that the Senate put in; but, Mr. President, of course that is an impossibility.

I say this because of the fact that I know the Senator so well and know how diligent he is in serving this body in that responsible and arduous position and how extremely kindly disposed he is toward every Senator who is interested in an item in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I want to say just one word. First, I thank the Senator from New Hampshire; but I want to say to the Senate that I always in matters of this sort feel myself to be the agent of the Senate and I contend as earnestly for one amendment put on by the Senate as for another. They are all right with me when the Senate puts them on a bill, and it is my duty to retain them just as long as I can do so reasonably and fairly and justly. I have done that in all instances, and I will continue to do it as long as I am at the head of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement and ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. PERKINS conferees on the part of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the river and harbor bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the situation this afternoon shows the futility of attempting to give careful attention to important legislation here in the Senate at this time. In response to a call about half an hour was spent in obtaining a quorum, and then a conference report was presented upon a bill which is perhaps the most important of all our appropriation bills. It includes provision for a larger number of activities of the Government than any other measure coming before us. It covers a very wide field, and is of interest to every State in the Union. Yet, in spite of that call for a quorum, only 16 Members of the Senate were present to consider that report, though after a little time the number had increased to perhaps 20.

All this goes to show that when we are here for a month later than the time when the courts have adjourned and other work of a similar nature is abandoned for the summer season we are compelled to labor under very great disadvantages, and it is to be feared that whatever is done will not be well done, and, indeed, that it can not be well done. This is especially true when we take into account the fact that the Senate was in session practically all of last year and has been in session all this year until this 20th day of July, during much very oppressive weather. I fear very much that however earnest we may be or however much we may desire to enact legislation which will be of a wise and salutary character we shall not succeed. There is difficulty in maintaining a quorum. The measure of inattention is not the fault of the Members; it is due to the extreme weariness incident to the season and the long service of the past year and a half.

We had an illustration here a few days ago, when an appropriation bill was brought before the Senate at the end of a conference which had been progressing for months. In the very provision in regard to which there had been the most earnest controversy and which had caused the longest delay there was a serious mistake. Something was included that nobody wanted and that nobody intended. We have been led to understand that there are three bills of the utmost importance yet to be passed. Query, Shall we enact wise measures?

In view of the pressure for these measures, it is hard to understand why the reports upon these two other bills are not brought before us. The Senate adjourned over two days week before last and we were led to understand that these measures would be here a week ago, but they have not yet been presented to the Senate. We have a promise that one of them will be presented to-morrow and the other very promptly thereafter, or perhaps at the same time. We shall watch with interest to know whether they come here or not.

For my own part I am not discouraged in view of the nature of the bill which I am discussing by the fact that figures are not attractive to the general hearer. I have every occasion to be grateful to the Senate for the attention the Members have given me. We are considering a bill now in regard to which I should be falling short of my duty if I did not seek to expose what I regard as vital defects. The fact that at times there is a scanty attendance in the Senate may necessitate some repetition. Some of the points are of such extreme importance that I feel Members should be familiar with them, and if Senators are not present when I set them forth the first time I may be compelled to bring them again to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, at the time I was interrupted I was speaking of the custom of including in our river and harbor bills a very large number of items, reaching close to 200, that are merely for maintenance. It is a pleasing compliment to Members of the House and the Senate to have towns in their districts or States enumerated in this river and harbor bill, but I think these acts could be very materially improved by grouping the sums in one aggregate, and that because in almost every instance, in probably ninety-nine out of every hundred, the amounts included in the bill are the same as those recommended by the Chief of Engineers. It is thus useless to encumber the bill with many pages of items merely setting forth those recommendations.

We have a precedent for thus grouping them in one sum in two preceding bills. In the year 1900 for the first time a provision was made for an appropriation for what is called emergency purposes. The sum of $250,000 was appropriated for so-called emergencies and for the expense of making certain surveys described in the bill. Of this amount of $250,000 about $25,000 was expended upon the surveys and $225,000 allotted for emergencies. This provision for emergencies has been carried in practically every river and harbor bill since that year, and its distinctive feature is that there is no appropriation for different projects, but one aggregate sum. Indeed, there could be no appropriation for different projects because the sum is expended as the occasion arises. It is contained in the first section of that act, found on page 912 of House Documents, volume 103. Beginning at the bottom of page 911 it reads:

> That the sum of $250,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, for the following purposes, to wit:
> (1) To provide for the restoration of channels, or river and harbor improvements, heretofore established or made by the Government where, by reason of emergency occurring since the passage of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, the usual depth of such channels, or customary use of such improvement, can not be maintained, and there is no sufficient fund available for such restoration. The amount herein provided, or so much thereof as is not required for the surveys hereinafter mentioned, shall be allotted by the Secretary of War: Provided, That in no case shall such allotment be made unless recommended by the local engineer having such channel or improvement in charge and the Chief of Engineers, respectively: Provided further, That for no single channel or improvement shall a sum greater than $10,000 be allotted, and in expending any such allotment advertisement for bids may be dispensed with on the recommendation of the local engineer.
> (2) For the necessary cost of the surveys herein directed to be made: Provided, That the necessary expenses for such examinations and surveys on rivers, or at harbors where work is being carried on by the United States, may be paid from available funds where the unexpended balances of former appropriations for such works are sufficient for such purpose.

This appropriation rested, first, on the discretion of the local engineer, the Chief of Engineers, and the Secretary of War in making the allotment; second, the amounts were to be expended only in the case of channels, rivers, or harbors the improvement of which had been undertaken by Congress in some previous bill; third, the emergency must have arisen since the passage of the next prior river and harbor bill—that of March 3, 1899. That rule rested upon the idea that if the emergency existed before March 3, 1899, Congress had deliberately omitted to provide for it and that it was only in case some condition had arisen since the passage of that act that the money could be expended.

The next provision contains a limitation:

That for no single channel or improvement shall a sum greater than $10,000 be allotted.

If that maximum sum had been provided in every case provision would have been made for 25 projects or, rather, for 22, because $25,000 was expended for surveys. A list is given on pages 925 and 926 in which the allotments are set forth. They range from $576.27 to $10,000. Indeed one or two are smaller than the figure I have given. There is one allotment for Duck Island Harbor, Conn., of only $202 and another of only $500, and another still, the important harbor of Newport, R. I., of only $341.67.

This provision was found to be so helpful and the discretion of the engineers was so carefully exercised that we have since then adopted the principle of leaving full discretion to the War Department in providing for emergencies. Action is taken on the initiative first of the local engineer. His action must be confirmed by the Chief of Engineers, and then the allotment is made by the Secretary of War.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I observe that in the discussion of this important measure, appropriating some $53,000,000, there are only three Senators on the other side present. In order that the Senator from Ohio may not have to repeat what he is saying when there are more present I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Lee, Md.	Poindexter	Thomas
Burton	Lewis	Ransdell	Thornton
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Tillman
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	West
Kenyon	Myers	Smith, Ariz.	White
Lane	Perkins	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twenty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. PAGE, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. STERLING, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. WORKS responded to their names.

Mr. REED, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. CATRON, Mr. CHILTON, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. CAMDEN having entered the Chamber, responded to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request absent Senators to attend the sessions of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate to request absent Senators to attend its session.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. STONE, and Mr. SMITH of Michigan having entered the Chamber, responded to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the order, which was adopted on my motion a few minutes ago, instructing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators, be vacated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the plan of an aggregate appropriation was tried and found successful on a much larger scale in the act of 1909. In 1907 a river and harbor bill carrying the largest amount in combined cash and authorization was passed. For many projects provision was made for four years. It was found in 1909 that some of the river and harbor improvements needed attention, and a request was addressed to the Chief of Engineers to furnish a list of the requirements for the maintenance and for continuing certain operations for a year following. In pursuance of that report this provision was adopted:

That for the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, heretofore appropriated for by Congress, and for continuing in operation such dredging and other plants or equipment of any kind owned by the United States Government, and constructed or acquired for use on river and harbor improvements, there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, the sum of $8,185,750; Provided, That allotments from the amount herein named shall be made by the Secretary of War, and the same shall be recommended by the local engineer having such channel, improvement, or other public work in charge and the Chief of Engineers, respectively.

It will be noticed that the method of allotment was based upon this emergency provision of the act of 1900. The act further provides:

Provided further, That the amount allotted to any specific channel or improvement shall not be greater than the estimated amount required for preservation and maintenance as transmitted by the Chief of Engineers in a communication dated February 17, 1909, which said letter was filed with the House of Representatives on the 18th day of February, 1909, and designated as House Document No. 1462, Sixtieth Congress, second session.

It will be observed that the amount of money to be expended was carefully restricted to the necessities of maintenance and preservation, and also for another purpose, namely:

For continuing in operation such dredging and other plants or equipment of any kind owned by the United States Government and constructed or acquired for use on river and harbor improvements.

At that time a considerable number of dredges had been acquired by the Government for the prosecution of work independent of contractors. Other equipment in divers forms was also in operation, and it was thought undesirable that this equipment, made up of dredges and similar equipment for construction, should remain idle. I do not think any criticism has ever been passed upon that method. Maintenance and operation were carefully provided for; and if we take that as our guide, we may feel certain that for all the various works where maintenance only is required it is not necessary in the bill to specify the respective amounts. The Chief of Engineers might, either in his annual report or in a special document, such as that mentioned in the law from which I have quoted, set forth his estimates for the purpose of maintenance for the following year. Then those amounts might be disbursed under the control of the Chief of Engineers, on the application of the local engineer, with the provision that allotments be made by the Secretary of War.

It seems to me that it would relieve this measure of much of its bulk and that it would prevent any unseemly scramble for obtaining amounts for maintenance and operation beyond what is required. It might be that the provision could go a little further than the act of 1909, namely, provision might be made for expending an amount somewhat in excess of the estimate under careful restriction. For example, it might be provided that more than the estimate might be expended in case the added sum be approved by the local engineer, by the Chief of Engineers, and by the Secretary of War.

This matter of consolidation is by no means new. Beginning in about the year 1905 certain projects located near to each other were combined, and one aggregate sum appropriated for them all. This custom has been continued in river and harbor bills until this day. I quote from the bottom of page 19 of the pending bill:

Improving harbors at Rockhall, Queenstown, Claiborne, and Cambridge, and Chester, Choptank, Warwick, Wicomico, Pocomoke, La Trappe, and Manokin Rivers, and Tyaskin Creek, Md.: For maintenance, $30,500.

Prior to the custom of combining these 12 improvements a separate appropriation was made for each one. They are located not far from each other on the Chesapeake Bay, in the State of Maryland. The amounts allotted to each by the respective river and harbor bills were very small, and it was thought desirable to combine them all in one item. Advantages in the way of economy might be obtained; a contract might be entered into by the War Department for dredging in more than one harbor. For instance, under the old plan of appropriating for each small project not more than an average of from three to five thousand dollars it was generally regarded as necessary to make a separate contract for each one. Under this combination system a contract might more readily be made which would include a half dozen, or even more, harbors; and if this plan for combination of maintenance appropriations, all in one aggregate sum, could be adopted, the same advantage in economy could be secured. So, it is not the mere matter of simplicity, not the mere avoidance of logrolling, which furnish argument for the combination of all maintenance items in one. At a later time it is my intention to introduce an amendment to this effect.

It is extremely difficult to so divide the items in this bill as to ascertain the exact amount required for maintenance, because in the case of many projects the phraseology is "continuing improvement and for maintenance." In these cases it is expected that the sum appropriated will not only provide for maintenance but for some addition to the present project. It would not, however, be difficult under instructions to the Chief of Engineers to segregate the amounts required for maintenance and aggregate them all in one sum. Such a plan would very much diminish the length of this bill, and it would enable the engineers more readily to combine different harbors and rivers in one contract if economy could be secured in that way.

I have spoken of the form of the reports transmitted to us by the Chief of Engineers and stated that in many particulars they are the best provided in any country. The objection to be made to them is that they are voluminous and that very few persons have the time to examine the different reports in detail. I wish to make a suggestion for the purpose of simplicity, with a view of making it easier for every Senator or Representative who desires to obtain the salient facts to secure them without reading a large mass of matter. This suggestion is based in some degree on the custom of newspapers in giving at the commencement of a long article a brief summary of what is contained in it. I would suggest that in the first volume with each project there be given the important facts, possibly in larger type; at least in a separate statement. For example, I will turn at random to one of these projects reported on by the Chief of Engineers. I seem to have opened the report at the item concerning Cheesequake Creek, on page 295. It says:

(g) Cheesequake Creek: This is a small stream in the eastern part of New Jersey, running in a northeasterly direction and emptying into Raritan Bay, about 2 miles east of South Amboy. Before improvement by the United States the available navigable depth in the creek was 1½ feet at mean low water over the shoals, the distance from the entrance to the upper limit of navigation being 3½ miles. Mean range of tides, 5 feet.

The original and existing project was adopted June 14, 1880, and provided for a new outlet, 5 feet deep, from the creek into Raritan Bay, at right angles to the shore line, through a beach which put across the mouth of the creek from the right bank and which had forced the outlet nearly one-half mile to the westward. This was to be obtained by dredging and constructing parallel jetties of stone, 200 feet apart, on each side of the dredged channel; the old outlet was to be closed by a pile dike, and a channel, 4 feet deep at mean low water and from 50 to 100 feet wide, was to be dredged from the mouth to the head of navigation, 3½ miles up the creek. In this distance two dikes were to be built, and a new channel to be made through the marsh was to cut off a bend in the creek. Stump Creek, a tributary stream emptying into the creek near its mouth, was to be improved by dredging a channel 50 feet wide and 3 feet deep.

The cost was estimated at $75,279, which was revised in 1885 to $90,000.

The amount expended on the present project up to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, was $53,812.45, of which $40,000 was used in carrying out the project and $13,812.45 in maintenance. The sum of $1.25 was derived from the sale of maps. About four-ninths of the work contemplated under this project has been completed, and the work accomplished consists of the construction of the two parallel stone jetties at the mouth, the dredging of a 5-foot channel between them about one-third mile in length, connecting the creek with the 5-foot curve in Raritan Bay, and the construction of the pile dike closing the old outlet.

No work was done during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913. Examinations of the dredged channel during the year showed that no maintenance work was necessary. The expenditures were for traveling expenses in connection with sounding the channel.

The improvement has not advanced sufficiently to affect freight rates. It is proposed to expend the available balances from the allotments from consolidated appropriations in maintenance of the improvement. No allotment for maintenance will be required next year.

The maximum draft at mean low water that could be carried through the mouth of the creek on June 30, 1913, was about 5 feet.

The commerce of the creek is principally in fertilizer, sand, brick, clay, and farm produce, and amounted in 1886 to about 50,000 tons; in 1905 to 45,500 tons, valued at $146,050; in 1906 to 83,648 tons, valued at $625,000; in 1907 to 89,500 tons, valued at $263,100; in 1908 to 79,520 tons, valued at $209,550; in 1909 to 61,880 tons, valued at $178,900; in 1911 to 36,500 tons, valued at $277,500; and in 1912 to 44,130 tons, valued at $292,500. Tonnage reported since 1907 in net tons; previous reports in gross tons.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator will excuse me, I will yield in a few moments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Anyone reading this report will see that no fault can be found with the adequacy of the information that is contained there. The only thing that is left out is the reference to Stump Creek. We are left somewhat in mystery about that. It was said that it was a tributary stream, and it was to be improved by dredging a channel 50 feet wide and 3 feet deep. It seems to have gone off the map, and no further attention has been paid to it; but much of the information contained in this little more than a page of descriptive matter could be summarized so that a person examining these reports might find out what he desired almost at a glance.

I shall now be pleased to yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator what amount has been expended on the great waterway he has been discussing, including Stump Creek?

Mr. BURTON. The cost of completion was estimated at $75,279, which was revised in 1885 to $90,000. The amount expended on the present project up to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, was $53,812, of which $40,000 was used in carrying out the project, and $13,812 in maintenance. The sum of $1.25 was derived from the sale of maps. About four-ninths of the work contemplated under this project has been completed.

I want to say that that is another illustration of dribbling. That project was adopted in 1880. My recollection was that it was adopted in 1882, but it seems, according to this, to have been adopted in 1880; and now, after 34 years, only four-ninths of the project has been completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture to ask the Senator from Ohio if he does not think that in a great many of these cases it would be cheaper for the Government to put on a line of automobile trucks between those points and carry the small amount of freight that is conveyed?

Mr. BURTON. You could not very well do that here, because the project extends out some little distance into Raritan Bay.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes. In that event we might, I think, put on an addition to the truck. They are going to put one on the flying machine that is designed to cross the Atlantic, so that when it strikes the water it will float; and I think we might equip these trucks in the same way. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON. While it is a fact that in the campaign of 1882 the word "Cheesequake" was something of a byword against the river and harbor bill, it is not by any means the worst project in the list. There are others a great deal worse than this. I can call attention to some of them, and probably shall in the course of the debate.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I did not understand where Stump Creek was. Did the Senator say it was in New Jersey?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; it must be.

Mr. KENYON. And near Cheese Creek?

Mr. BURTON. This is Cheesequake Creek, which empties into Raritan Bay about 2 miles east of South Amboy. It is near to Raritan Bay.

Mr. KENYON. But all projects on this creek are now abandoned, as I understand.

Mr. BURTON. This report says that no maintenance is required.

Mr. KENYON. I am sure the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] knows where Stump Creek is.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The mention of South Amboy interested me somewhat.

Mr. BURTON. Here is something to be noticed about that. I had not seen the latter part of it. There is an available balance there of $8,035. It is in the power of the Senator from New Jersey, or was on July 1, 1913, to bring the attention of his constituents to the fact that this beneficent Government has made appropriations for Cheesequake Creek, and that there is, or was, $8,035.90 available in the Treasury for its improvement.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is very gratifying. I wish it were $18,035.

Mr. BURTON. I think $8,035, though, is sufficient to do all the work contemplated there. Indeed, I think possibly they will find it somewhat difficult to dispose of that.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Can the Senator inform me what the present bill carries?

Mr. BURTON. I believe the present bill has nothing for Cheesequake Creek.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I understand the bill carries no appropriation for either Cheesequake Creek or Stump Creek. The Senator from Ohio has been endeavoring to elucidate some matters connected with Stump Creek, but he has gotten lost, I think, in the investigation.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very likely.

Mr. BURTON. Can the Senator tell me about Stump Creek? Is it navigable?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not inform the Senator as to that. My knowledge of navigation is not up, particularly at that point, but I can say that the effort to belittle Cheesequake Creek and the Kill Van Kull and Woodbridge Creek and some of those other things is utterly at naught. An immense commerce passes through that creek. As to Stump Creek, to which my friend from Ohio refers, I can not say.

Mr. BURTON. I would not put the Kill Van Kull in the same class with Cheesequake Creek. I may say to the Senator from New Jersey that the Kill Van Kull has always been a favorite of mine.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That shows the Senator's wisdom and intelligence.

Mr. BURTON. Years ago I went over the stream and recommended a very considerable appropriation for it and the Arthur Kill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe the Senate will be interested in this most illuminating discussion. I see about three Senators present on the other side of the Chamber, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gronna	Perkins	Sterling
Burton	Jones	Ransdell	Swanson
Camden	Lane	Sheppard	Thomas
Catron	Lewis	Simmons	Thornton
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	West
Clapp	Nelson	Smith, Mich.	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twenty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. THOMAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and the roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I voted inadvertently. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CATRON. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted without announcing the fact that I was paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GRONNA (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). This morning I transferred my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST]. The junior Senator from Georgia is in the Chamber now, so I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—9.

Catron	Gronna	Page	Smoot
Clapp	Jones	Smith, Mich.	Townsend
Gallinger

NAYS—27.

Ashurst	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Thornton
Bankhead	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman
Bryan	Perkins	Smith, Ga.	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Ransdell	Smith, Md.	West
Lane	Poindexter	Stone	White
Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Swanson	Williams
Lewis	Sheppard	Thomas	Works

NOT VOTING—60.

Borah	Chilton	Dillingham	Hollis
Brady	Clark, Wyo.	du Pont	Hughes
Brandegee	Clarke, Ark.	Fall	James
Bristow	Colt	Fletcher	Johnson
Burleigh	Crawford	Goff	Kenyon
Burton	Culberson	Gore	Kern
Camden	Cummins	Hitchcock	La Follette
Lea, Tenn.	Norris	Reed	Stephenson
Lippitt	O'Gorman	Robinson	Sterling
Lodge	Oliver	Root	Sutherland
McCumber	Overman	Saulsbury	Thompson
McLean	Owen	Sherman	Walsh
Martine, N. J.	Penrose	Shields	Warren
Myers	Pittman	Shively	Weeks
Newlands	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.	Williams

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. ASHURST, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. STONE, Mr. TILLMAN, and Mr. WHITE answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, is this a new call of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a new call.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reference to that motion, I desire to make a single observation. It is a repetition of what I have said before. The country must be looking upon us with a good deal of surprise, if the country is paying any attention at all to what is going on in Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. Is debate in order in the absence of a quorum?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is afraid he must sustain the point of order. In the absence of a quorum nothing can be done except to adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have said about all I wanted to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. LEE of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. THOMAS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to rule that no business has intervened since the last——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Suppose we did not get a quorum, and no business had intervened—must we always remain here? I submit that the roll has been called since the motion was made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was not aware that the roll had been called. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate adjourn, and upon that motion the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair as on the previous vote and vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 8, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—8.

Brandegee	Clapp	Gallinger	Myers
Catron	Cummins	Gronna	Smith, Mich.

NAYS—33.

Ashurst	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Thomas
Bankhead	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Thornton
Bryan	Newlands	Sheppard	Vardaman
Camden	Overman	Shields	Walsh
Chamberlain	Perkins	Simmons	West
Chilton	Poindexter	Smith, Ariz.	White
Jones	Pomerene	Smith, Md.
Lane	Ransdell	Stone
Lee, Md.	Reed	Swanson

NOT VOTING—55.

Borah	Goff	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Gore	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smoot
Burleigh	Hollis	Norris	Stephenson
Burton	Hughes	O'Gorman	Sterling
Clark, Wyo.	James	Oliver	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson	Owen	Thompson
Colt	Kenyon	Page	Tillman
Crawford	Kern	Penrose	Townsend
Culberson	La Follette	Pittman	Warren
Dillingham	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Weeks
du Pont	Lewis	Root	Williams
Fall	Lippitt	Sherman	Works
Fletcher	Lodge	Shively

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided the question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 21, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 20, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast made us after Thine own image and hast given us dominion over the works of Thy hands and thus crowned us with glory and honor, if we will, help us to subdue our passions, and put under our feet all selfish and ignoble desires, that we may rise day by day to the dignity thus conferred upon us and prove ourselves worthy of such preferment, in the name of Him who taught us how to be men. And Thine be the glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 18, 1914, was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an announcement to the House. I desire to announce that on Thursday next I will call up a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary touching the conduct of Representative MCDERMOTT, provided the general dam bill shall have been disposed of by that time. In case the dam bill has not been finally disposed of at that time, I give notice that immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of that bill I will call up this priviliged report.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a rule which I have been instructed by the Committee on Rules to report to the House, and the understanding was with the Speaker and some other Members of the House that it should be done as soon as the dam bill was completed——

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I do not object to that.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say to the gentleman that will not consume a great length of time, in my judgment.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I do not object to that.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman did not state which rule this was.

Mr. FOSTER. The rule is in reference to the appointment of managers of the soldiers' home.

Mr. MURDOCK. Not in regard to the Moon bill.

Mr. FOSTER. They have no quorum, and the matter ought to be disposed of. I understand the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided it is questionable whether they can draw any money without a quorum.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has the rule been reported out in reference to the Moon bill?

Mr. FOSTER. It has been reported, but it has not been adopted by the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. But it has been reported?

Mr. MANN. It has been authorized.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been authorized by the committee; not reported.

EVENING SESSION TUESDAY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House have a session on Tuesday evening to complete the call of the calendar by unanimous consent. I have the order here.

The SPEAKER. Send it up to be reported by the Clerk and then the Chair will propound the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on Tuesday night, July 21, the House stand in recess from 5 p. m. until 8 p. m.; that a session be held from 8 p. m. to 11 p. m. for the consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole of bills on the Private Calendar which are not objected to, commencing with No. 318 on said calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood it was the desire to finish at least general debate on the dam bill to-morrow, and as this might interfere with that I object.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman be willing to put it Wednesday evening?

Mr. MANN. Well, Wednesday is Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. A recess can not be taken on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. POU. Then, I will ask Thursday evening.

Mr. MANN. I do not know now what is going to come up Thursday under the present situation. We may have up the dam bill on Thursday under the five-minute rule, and I am sure the gentleman will not wish to interfere with that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to state to the gentleman from North Carolina that my sympathies are entirely with him in his efforts to have these private claims disposed of, but if the gentleman would put his request off for a day or two we may get closer to a point where we can possibly reach an agreement which will be more satisfactory.

Mr. POU. I would like to say to the House, by unanimous consent, that the Committee on Claims during this entire Congress has had about two hours to pass bills which are contested. Of course I have no personal interest in this matter. I am trying to get this request for the accommodation of Members here who are interested in these claims. There has not been a single bill of the Committee on Claims that has been put through this session in any other way than by unanimous consent. Now, the session goes on, and we are told every time there will be opportunity later on. I merely want to warn the House that the chances are, if we continue to put off the consideration of the Private Calendar, that the session will end and nothing will be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter which I have received presenting certain information with reference to the effect of the imposition of penalities under the income-tax law, and which I desire to have the House consider——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting a letter about penalties in reference to the income-tax law. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. And I desire to ask its consideration in connection with the Smith resolution for a waiver of such penalties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, my attention was distracted for a moment, and I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, it is simply a letter presenting some information as to the effect of the imposition of penalties under the income-tax law, this letter reciting facts as to the situation in Oklahoma somewhat as I have already presented them to the House in reference to Michigan.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say I have no objection to the gentleman printing this letter, but I think the gentleman should know, and everyone else should know, that the collection of these penalties from any corporation not making a return under the income tax is entirely discretionary with the executive branch of the Government.

The law provides that the penalty shall not exceed $10.000, which means that a penalty can be affixed from $1 up to $10.000, and it is not a question about which the House can further legislate or should further legislate. It is purely a question of executive discretion.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say, Mr. Speaker, if I may, that I have no controversy with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] on that point. I agree with him as to the discretion of the Treasury Department. The view of the Treasury Department seems to be to the contrary, or, at least, they refuse to exercise the discretion which they have, and hence the only course to secure relief would be through action by the Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I do not see where action by Congress could relieve the situation, because it ultimately would go to the discretion of the department. They could not pass a bill relieving the penalties, because some of these people are undoubtedly in default and should be penalized. I agree with the gentleman that a great many of them are not at fault.

Mr. CRAMTON. And in a great many cases the department could reasonably exercise its discretion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am not in a position to pass judgment for the department. So far as I am personally concerned, I am free to say that in these cases of small corporations that have been brought in because the limit of $5,000 has been knocked out, which covers most of the cases, I would be exceedingly liberal with them this year. That would be my position.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CARTER. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that the fine could be anything from $1 up. But I received a letter from the department the other day saying that they would not consider anything less than $50.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was a department ruling. That is not the law.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is what I thought. I received a letter of that kind.

Mr. CARTER. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan what it was he desired to do? Did he desire to print something?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. I may state that some time ago I presented the facts as to a number of cases in Michigan. This letter is a letter from a gentleman in Hugo, Okla., presenting the situation as affecting a great many corporations in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. What situation is it presenting, may I ask?

Mr. CRAMTON. That a great many corporations which are not organized for profit and a great many which may be organized for profit, but, as a matter of fact, have no profit and perhaps no income, owing to a failure on their part to understand that they were liable or required to make returns under the law, failed to make their returns on the date of the limit, and because of that failure, even though they did present their returns at once on its being called to their attention, they are being fined at least $50.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is speaking of the income tax?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. From whom does the letter come, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Claude Spriggs is my recollection of the name, of Hugo, Okla.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Michigan aware that within the last week or two the Treasury Department has established a new minimum, that it has reduced the previous minimum of $50 to $20, so as to cover in part at least some of these deserving cases?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Massachusetts that my information is to the contrary. In a number of cases of which I have knowledge they first accepted a penalty of $25, but recently they have increased it in other cases to $50.

Mr. ROGERS. Well, if the gentleman will pardon me, I have a case in my own district where a very small corporation, on which the original penalty levied was $50; and in view of the representations which were made in that case and other very deserving cases, the Treasury Department has within a week stated to me in a letter that it will establish a new minimum in certain deserving cases of $20.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am glad of that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a résumé of the proceedings which led to the acquisition of the Panama Republic by the United States, compiled by Hannis Taylor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing documents concerning the Colombian treaty. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

"WHY THE PENDING TREATY WITH COLOMBIA SHOULD BE RATIFIED—A SUMMARY OF THE INCONTESTABLE HISTORICAL FACTS.

[By Hannis Taylor.]

"In its issue of June 29, 1914, the Washington Post, despite its many hostile expressions to the contrary, said: 'The people would like to know why the United States must pay $25,000,000 to Colombia and $3,000,000 to Nicaragua. They may approve of both treaties if they know all the details, but they will never approve of either if this information is withheld.' As it is eminently just and proper that the people of the United States should 'know all the details,' the purpose of this paper is so to restate them that he who runs may read, so far as the controversy with Colombia is concerned.

"The dominating fact, which throws more light than all others upon the real nature of the transaction, was thus stated by Col. Roosevelt himself in a notable speech made at the University of California on March 23, 1911: 'I am interested in the Panama Canal because I started it. If I had followed traditional conservative methods, I should have submitted a dignified state paper of probably 200 pages to the Congress, and the debate would have been going on yet. But I took the Canal Zone, and let Congress debate, and while the debate goes on the canal does also.'

"The Taft administration, knowing that President Roosevelt 'took the Canal Zone,' made an earnest effort to settle the damages thus occasioned upon a just and honorable basis. On March 1, 1913, President Taft, as one of his very last official acts, sent to Congress a message indorsing a communication from the then Secretary of State, Mr. Knox, which concludes as follows:

"'The very latest telegram from Mr. Du Bois shows that in a subsequent interview he took it upon himself informally to ask whether if the United States should, without requesting options or privileges of any kind, offer Colombia $25,000,000, its good offices with Panama, the arbitration of the question of reversionary rights in the Panama Railway, and preferential rights of the canal, the Government would accept; to which he was answered in the negative.

"'Included in this most recent telegraphic correspondence is a statement of the impression of the legation at Bogota that the Colombian Government cherishes the expectation that the incoming administration will arbitrate the entire Panama question, or will directly compensate Colombia for the value of the territory of Panama, the Panama Railway, the railroad annuities, and the contract with the French Canal Co.'

"SENATOR BACON'S SPEECH UPHOLDING COLOMBIA'S RIGHT TO ARBITRATION.

"After the present administration had accepted the legacy thus bequeathed, coupled with the declaration that 'the Colombian Government cherishes the expectation that the incoming administration will arbitrate the entire Panama question,' the Colombian Government did, in solemn form, present its case to the Government of the United States, coupled with an earnest appeal for arbitration. At that moment the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations was the late and lamented Senator Augustus O. Bacon, of Georgia, who on January 29, 1904, had made a famous speech in the Senate in which he advocated the making 'of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia submitting to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, or to some other tribunal to be agreed upon, for impartial arbitrament and peaceful determination all questions between the United States and the Republic of Colombia growing out of the matters herein recited.' After an exhaustive review of every question of fact and law involved in the taking of Panama, Senator Bacon made this declaration:

"'I am content with anything which shall commit the Government of the United States in the face of the world to the proposition that, whatever there may be of difference between the United States and Colombia, the United States, as a great overshadowing power which can not be compelled by this feeble power to do anything, will voluntarily endeavor to agree with it in the settlement of existing differences; and that if it can not come to an agreement by peaceful negotiations it will not assert its great and resistless power, but that it will endeavor to have a determination of such differences and the claims growing out thereof by some impartial tribunal.'

"In the light of these antecedents the present administration determined to strive to 'come to an agreement by peaceful negotiations,' rather than yield to Colombia's demand for arbitration. The outcome is embodied in the pending treaty, whose merits depend largely upon the following facts:

"THE 'TREATY OF PEACE, AMITY, NAVIGATION, AND COMMERCE,' NEGOTIATED IN 1846.

"When the time arrived to develop our priceless yet remote territory on the Pacific coast it became necessary for us to appeal to Colombia, then called New Granada, for a free passage through her limits to California, which otherwise could only be reached by a nine months' voyage around the Horn, or by the even more dangerous wagon trail across the Rocky Mountains and the Western Desert. The all-important advantage of a shorter route we secured through 'a treaty of peace, amity, navigation, and commerce,' negotiated in 1846, in which it was stipulated as follows:

"'The Government of New Granada guarantees to the Government of the United States that the right of way or transit across the Isthmus of Panama upon any modes of transportation which now exist, or that may be hereafter constructed, shall be open and free to the Government and citizens of the United States, and for the transportation of any articles of lawful commerce belonging to the citizens of the United States.

"'As compensation for that privilege (priceless at that time) the United States promised "as an especial compensation for the said advantages and for the favors they have acquired by the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of this treaty (articles which secure to the United States reciprocal privileges of importation and tonnage dues and equal customs duties) the United States guarantee, positively and efficaciously, to New Granada, by the present stipulation, the perfect neutrality of the before-mentioned Isthmus, with the view that the free transit from the one to the other sea may not be interrupted or embarrassed in any future time while this treaty exists; and, in consequence, the United States also guarantee in the same manner the rights of sovereignty and property which New Granada has and possesses over the said territory."'

"In the message in which President Polk submitted the treaty in question to the Senate he said, in regard to the right of transit thus won: 'The importance of this concession to the commercial and political interest of the United States can not be overrated;' and in a special message of February 10, 1847, only two months after the initiation of the treaty, he said:

"'There does not appear any other effectual means of securing to all nations the advantages of this important passage, but the guaranty of great commercial powers that the Isthmus shall be neutral territory. * * *

"'The guaranty of the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus is a natural consequence of this neutrality. * * * New Granada would not yield this Province that it might become a neutral State; and if she should, it is not sufficiently populous or wealthy to establish or maintain an independent sovereignty.'

"Thus by the most solemn guaranty known to the family of nations the United States pledged itself, by express contract, to respect and uphold the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus of Panama, a plain duty already due to New Granada under the general principles of international law.

"In emergencies other than the disturbance of interoceanic transit or peril to the persons and possessions of American citizens, there might be no intervention in the affairs of New Granada, reestablished as the United States of Colombia in 1863. By the terms of the treaty, and by the principles of international law Colombia, as the successor of New Granada, was the sovereign peer of the United States, which, save for the purpose of protecting free transit, might no more land forces on Colombian soil or even threaten such landing than she might land such forces on the shores of France or England. After a careful examination of the subject a competent expert has said that during the 40 years that intervened between the establishment of Colombia in 1863 and the Panama imbroglio of 1903 United States forces were employed in only seven instances, and for a period of 164 days, and in each instance with Colombia's approval. In no case was there fighting, the mere precautionary measures being sufficient.

"THE SPOONER ACT OF 1902 AND HAY-HERRAN CONVENTION OF 1903.

"In 1902 was passed the Spooner Act, providing for the construction of an Isthmian canal and arming the President with power to obtain from Colombia perpetual control (not cession) for canal purposes of a strip of land from ocean to ocean. Then followed the Hay-Herran convention of 1903, in which it was expressly stipulated that 'the convention, when agreed to by the contracting parties, shall be ratified in conformity with the laws of the respective countries,' and further, 'the Government of Colombia authorizes the New Panama Canal Co. to sell and transfer to the United States its rights, privileges, properties, and concessions, as well as the Panama Railroad and all the shares or parts of the shares of that company.' The first grave indignity offered to Colombia was embodied in a series of threats, which warned her that her Senate would not, as an independent legislature, be permitted to discuss all necessary amendments to the treaty in question. Col. Roosevelt did not hesitate to declare, 'when in August, 1903, I became convinced that Colombia intended to repudiate the treaty made the preceding January, under cover of securing its rejection by the Colombian Legislature, I began carefully to consider what should be done. By my direction Secretary Hay, personally and through the minister at Bogota, repeatedly warned Colombia that grave consequences might follow her rejection of the treaty.' A cable was sent to Bogota saying, 'The treaty must not be modified or amended;' and then followed a mandate saying, 'ratify the treaty or you will regret it.' Imagine Great Britain addressing such threats to the Senate of the United States when it was about to consider a treaty signed, subject to the approval of that body, between the British ambassador at Washington and our Secretary of State. Is it strange that under the sting of such threats the Colombian Senate should have refused to ratify the treaty in question on August 12, 1903?

"On August 31, Mr. Beaupre sent to Mr. Hay the following telegram, recently published in Diplomatic History of the Panama Canal (S. Doc. No. 474, 63d Cong., 2d sess., p. 438):

"MR. BEAUPRE TO MR. HAY.

[Telegram.]

"UNITED STATES LEGATION,
"BOGOTA, August 31, 1903.
(Received September 5.)

"August 31, 1903, 2 p. m. I had an interview with Senator Obaldia to-day. He informed me that he is willing to remain so long as there is hope for the treaty, but he is convinced that there is none, and will leave, therefore, on the 6th proximo. Confirms Gen. Reyes's statement concerning presidential candidate, and says that the next Senate was made certain for the treaty; that he bears instructions to Govs. Insignares and Barrios concerning the elections which will be held next December; that in accepting governorship of Panama he told the President that in case that the department found it necessary to revolt to secure canal he would stand by Panama; but he added if the Government of the United States will wait for the next session of Congress canal can be secured without a revolution. Senator Campo, from the Cauca, is about to leave, thinking the treaty gone.

"Confidential. My opinion is that nothing satisfactory can be expected from this Congress. Caro's party has been joined by Velez and Soto and their followers, constituting a decisive majority against the treaty. Gen. Reyes seems to still entertain hopes.

"BEAUPRE.

"And here the fact should be emphasized that the constitution of Colombia expressly forbade the alienation of any part of the national domain until the Congress had first expressly authorized the same.

"In the light of the evidence now available it can not be doubted that only President Roosevelt's unreasonable haste prevented the ratification of the treaty by the Colombian Senate. He has himself quoted a high official of Colombia who, on November 6, 1903, said in a note to the American minister at Bogota that on certain conditions—

"'The Colombian Government will declare martial law and, by virtue of vested constitutional authority when public order is disturbed, will approve by decree the ratification of the canal treaty as signed; or, if the Government of the United States prefers, will call an extra session of Congress, with new and friendly members next May, to approve the treaty.'

"THE OPÉRA BOUFFE REVOLUTION OF NOVEMBER, 1903.

"The delay occasioned by the exercise of Colombia's constitutional right to deliberate upon a treaty before its ratification precipitated the opéra bouffe revolution of November, 1903. Colombia had been at that time an independent State for 93 years, and for 77 years had been so recognized by us. On November 3, 1903, the Republic of Colombia was at peace with the United States, and 'the treaty of peace, amity, navigation, and commerce' of 1846, expressly guaranteeing, in a very solemn manner, her sovereignty over the Isthmus of Panama, was in full force. But despite all those things, the time had now arrived when the pen was to be superseded by the sword. An opéra bouffe revolution was being manufactured at Panama, and a dummy republic was on the way. From his published admission it is hard to doubt that as early as August, 1903, President Roosevelt was aware that the secession of the Province of Panama was being secretly fomented; and he has openly declared that toward the end of October the attempt appeared to be an imminent probability. In order to make that result possible it was absolutely necessary so to arrange the naval forces of the United States that they could be on the spot to prevent the suppression of the so-called revolution by the military forces of Colombia. To that end was issued the famous '50-mile order' of November 2, 1903. In his message to Congress of January 4, 1904, President Roosevelt said:

"'In view of these facts I directed the Navy Department to issue instructions such as would insure our having ships within easy reach of the Isthmus, in the event of need arising. * * * On November 2 the following instructions were sent to the commanders of the Boston, Nashville, and Dixie: "Maintain free and uninterrupted transit. * * * Prevent landing of any armed force, either Government or insurgent, within 50 miles of Panama.'"

"On November 3, 1903, the following order was sent to the commander of the Nashville at Colon: 'In the interests of peace make every effort to prevent Government troops at Colon from proceeding to Panama. The transit of the Isthmus must be kept open and order maintained.' Thus, while the solemn treaty was in full force and profound peace existing, President Roosevelt issued a military order, preventing Colombia from moving her own troops over her own railway from her own Colon to her own Panama, in order to put down an opéra bouffe revolution, representing less than one-tenth of the population of the Province of Panama, which the 400 troops of Colombia landed at Colon could have instantly suppressed. Under such circumstances the final act of the comedy was concluded. On November 3, at 6 o'clock, the émeute, chiefly promoted by 'the fire department,' took place, the total death roll being one Chinaman killed by one of the three shots fired from the Bogota on the night of the 'secession.' The report of the success of the revolution was received at Washington at 9.50 p. m. of November 3, and at 11:18 word was returned directing the commander of the Nashville to 'make every effort to prevent Government troops at Colon from proceeding to Panama.' On November 4 a telegram was received from the Panama consul, saying a proclamation of independence had been issued by the insurgents and three deputized to draw up a constitution. On November 6 this Government sent the following message to our Panama consul:

"'The people of Panama have by an apparently unanimous movement dissolved their connection with the Republic of Colombia and resumed their independence. When you are satisfied that a de facto government, republican in form and without substantial opposition from its own people, has been established in the State of Panama, you will enter into relations with it as the responsible government of the territory.'

"Thus a mere consul was endowed with the august function of recognizing the new Republic when satisfied that a de facto government, republican in form and without substantial opposition from its own people, had been established in the State of Panama. A little later in the day the President of the United States recognized the new nation, the Republic of Panama. And on the same fateful day was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary from the Republic of Panama Buneau Varilla, a nonresident alien, whose only interest was the valorization of the shares of a speculative company. On November 13 he was officially received by the President, the earliest date at which his letters could arrive by steamer from the Isthmus, and five days later the canal treaty was signed. It is hard for one at all familiar with the rules of international law to record the details of this strange transaction with a straight face. It is hard not to gasp at this unprecedented process of nation making, a process whereby 'the President of the guaranteeing nation, itself unavoidably included in the treaty's provisions, forcibly disabled Colombia from taking the slightest precautionary measures against secession; continued and expanded his hostility, and, then, in 1 day, 17 hours, and 41 minutes from the issuance in the one city of Panama of an insurgent proclamation of independence, recognized a new sovereignty.'

"A VITAL PRINCIPLE OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

"During the Civil War the United States became the special champion of that rule of international law which declares that a premature or unjustifiable recognition either of belligerency or independence of a community in rebellion against the parent state is really an act of intervention which the parent state may meet by a declaration of war. In a note on that subject, written to Mr. Adams in 1861, Mr. Seward said:

"'On the other hand, we insist that a nation that recognizes a revolutionary state, with a view to aid its effecting its sovereignty and independence, commits a great wrong against the nation whose integrity is thus invaded and makes itself responsible for a just and ample redress.'

"In the history of the law of nations no near approximation can be found to the process through which the military and naval power of the United States prevented the military forces of Colombia from suppressing a revolution upon her own soil. And the political power of the United States then, within less than two days, recognized the outcome of such a revolution as an independent member of the family of nations. Such conduct upon the part of the United States rendered it 'responsible for a just and ample redress,' first, because it was a conspicuous violation of the rule of international law, recognized by all States; second, because it was a conspicuous violation of the treaty of 1846, in which that rule was embodied as one of the leading stipulations in an express contract. The double liability resting upon the United States for 'just and ample redress' is beyond all controversy, so far as international law is concerned. There never has been but one open question in the case. After President Roosevelt's admission 'I took the Canal Zone' nothing remained for his successors but the ascertainment of the extent of 'a just and ample redress.' Under such circumstances could any high-thoughted or chivalrous American desire that an expression of regret should be withheld? The noble sensibilities of Senator Bacon responded to the situation when he spoke of 'the United States, as a great overshadowing power which can not be compelled by this feeble power to do anything.' Ex-Minister Du Bois, in a recent statement, has beautifully expressed the idea in the following form:

"'While negotiating for a treaty I made the Colombian authorities understand that under no circumstances would the United States apologize to any nation for a political act—that was our unwritten law that never had been and never would be broken. In purely informal conversations, and in my unofficial memorandum, I suggested that a chivalrous expression of regret that our friendship had in any way been marred, such as any real gentleman would freely grant to another, might later be embodied in the treaty as a balm for the wounded feelings of a once friendly nation, which had been humiliated before the world, whose credit had been destroyed in foreign countries, whose borrowing ability had been annihilated, and whose persistent appeals for arbitration had been ignored. The United States in negotiating the treaty and Colombia in ratifying it distinctly understood that no apology was embodied in article 1 and nowhere else in the agreement. The opposition to this feature, on the ground that it is an apology, is not just, and is not in the true interest of the United States.'

"OPINIONS OF SENATORS HOAR AND CULLOM.

"It may be said, but not justly, that my position as counsel for Colombia has so biased my mind in her favor as to render me incapable of forming an unprejudiced judgment even upon the questions of international law involved. For that reason I shall appeal to the judgment of two jurists and statesmen who were at the time the most able and venerable supporters in the Senate of the United States of President Roosevelt's administration, and his cordial personal and political friends. I refer to Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, and Senator Cullom, of Illinois, leaders of the Republican Party, whose experience in matters of international law and diplomacy had extended over an unusually long period. A short time before his death Senator Cullom published a solemn and deliberate statement of Senator Hoar's views upon the subject in such a way as to leave no reasonable doubt that they were also his own. In his 'Fifty Years of Public Service,' pages 212–213, Senator Cullom says:

"'Senator Hoar was disposed to be against the recognition of the Republic of Panama, and it has been intimated that he was of the opinion that the Roosevelt administration had something to do with the bloodless revolution that resulted in the uniting with the United States of that part of Colombia which now forms the Canal Zone. * * * The President wanted the Senator to read a message which he had already prepared, in reference to Colombia's action in rejecting the treaty and the canal in general, which message showed very clearly that the President had never contemplated the secession of Panama, and was considering different methods in order to obtain the right of way across the Isthmus from Colombia, fully expecting to deal only with the Colombian Government on the subject. The President was sitting on the table, first at one side of Senator Hoar and then on the other, talking in his usual vigorous fashion, trying to get the Senator's attention to the message. Senator Hoar seemed adverse to reading it, but finally sat down, and without seeming to pay any particular attention to what he was perusing, he remained for a minute or two, then arose and said: "I hope I may never live to see the day when the interests of my country are placed above its honor." He at once retired from the room without uttering another word, proceeding to the Capitol. Later in the morning he came to me with a typewritten paper containing the conversation between the President and himself, and asked me to certify to its correctness. I took the paper and read it over, and, as it seemed to be correct, as I remembered the conversation, I wrote my name on the bottom of it. I have never seen nor heard of the paper since.'

"And here, by the side of Senator Hoar's outcry, should be reproduced the statement recently made by ex-Minister Du Bois:

"'If any person believes it is pleasant for me to oppose a great leader, whose fortunes I devotedly followed for 10 years, and for whom I have profound esteem, he is radically mistaken. I am a Republican and have been all my life, and I have been urged not to make this statement public, because a successful issue of the treaty will help the Wilson administration.

"'I do not care to live to greet that day where my love of party smothers my love of justice and halts my courage in doing what I believe is right for the true interests of my country.'

"Who can wonder that when such devoted friends of President Roosevelt as President Taft and Secretary of State Knox succeeded to power they should have felt under a deep moral obligation to repair the wrong which Colombia had suffered. That thought was never absent from them. President Taft's last important word to Congress was upon this subject.

"COLOMBIA'S FRUITLESS APPEAL FOR ARBITRATION.

"In his communication to President Taft, heretofore quoted, Mr. Knox said: 'Included in this most recent telegraphic correspondence is a statement of the impression of the legation at Bogota that the Colombian Government cherishes the expectation that the incoming administration will arbitrate the entire Panama question.' That is all that Colombia has ever asked of the United States—a fair hearing before an impartial international tribunal, either The Hague court or a tribunal specially constituted. No more conclusive argument was ever made than that in which Senator Bacon—at the time of his death the able chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations—demonstrated Colombia's right to arbitration under the law of nations. Colombia's claim for the value of the territory of Panama, the Panama Railway, the railroad annuities, the contract with the French Canal Co., and other advantages exceeded twofold the pecuniary sum agreed upon in the pending treaty. Not until after her right to have the amount of the damages due her ascertained by an arbitral court had been denied her was the settlement embodied in the pending treaty entered into.

"An attempt has been made to create prejudice against the treaty by the false statement that Colombia has agreed to pay me a contingent fee of $1,000,000 upon its ratification. I am her only counsel and our contract is in writing and subject to inspection by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations whenever that body may see fit to call for it. It simply provides that I am to receive just and reasonable compensation for my services when they are concluded; and, in the event of a difference between us as to the amount, such difference shall be adjusted by arbitration. And here, in conclusion, I feel it my duty to say that my zeal in this matter as counsel for Colombia has been increased by the fact that after an exhaustive study of all the antecedents I have been as profoundly impressed as I could ever be of anything of the justice of her cause, not only in morals but under the principles of international law. Therefore, as an American citizen, I feel that a great good has been accomplished for my country in this grave matter by the making of a settlement which will reestablish the ancient and cordial friendship with a neighboring State, in which the commerce and industry of the United States will find a region most favorable for its development."

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent for one hour's time in which to review the charges made by President Ripley, of the Santa Fe Railroad.

The SPEAKER. When does the gentleman want the hour?

Mr. KINDEL. At any time it will suit the Chair or the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to make a more definite request.

Mr. FERRIS. Ask for to-morrow.

Mr. KINDEL. I ask, then, for to-morrow, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] asks unanimous consent to address the House for an hour to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal. On what subject does the gentleman wish to address the House?

Mr. KINDEL. On the question of the parcel-post and freight rates, on which the Democratic Party is charged with doing wrong.

The SPEAKER. On the subject of the parcel post, in answer to Mr. Ripley.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to prevent the gentleman from Colorado from having an opportunity to address the House, but there is a very important matter that will come up to-morrow, the amendment to the general dam act, and we are anxious to get general debate closed. Therefore I could not consent at this time to yield the hour to-morrow. I would be perfectly willing to yield it at a later date.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. KINDEL. I then ask unanimous consent for leave to print. I have been trying for a year and a half to get this before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to print his remarks in reply to President Ripley. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] objects.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD as to the effect of the tariff on the business of the country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the tariff. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

RELIEF OF LANDOWNERS IN MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13581) for the relief of the landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and in the parish of West Feliciana, State of Louisiana.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be stricken from the Calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

PUBLIC-BUILDING SITE AT THOMASVILLE, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15110) to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional land for the post office in the city of Thomasville, Ga.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the portion of land between the post-office site and Madison Street, same width as post-office site and running back 56 feet, to enlarge the site for the post-office building at Thomasville, Ga., at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, before the discussion I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk may be read for information.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1 to H. R. 15110: "That the said enlarged post-office site, except where buildings, further additions, and purchases are or may hereafter be located, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be used as a public park, to be known as Roddenbery Park, to be maintained by the city of Thomasville under regulations to be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to object.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, on a former occasion, when the bill was under consideration——

The SPEAKER. This bill is not under consideration now. The question is, Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I am willing that the gentleman shall make a statement.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but as the gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to object, it is his time to talk.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman to tell me how large a place Thomasville is?

Mr. PARK. It has between 4,000 and 5,000 people.

Mr. MADDEN. How much of a public building have they there now?

Mr. PARK. There is none yet.

Mr. MADDEN. This is to purchase a site?

Mr. PARK. Yes; $70,000 to purchase a site and put up the building.

Mr. MADDEN. What are the post-office receipts of the town?

Mr. PARK. About $20,000.

Mr. MADDEN. How much would be invested in the public building and grounds when allowed?

Mr. PARK. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. The interest on that at 4 per cent would be $3,000 a year; at 3 per cent it would be $2,250 a year.

Mr. PARK. Congress has authorized it.

Mr. MADDEN. I know; but I call attention to the fact that they could probably rent a suitable place for a thousand dollars that would be as good as this building if erected. What has been done in connection with the purchase of the site and the erection of the building?

Mr. PARK. They have paid $9,000, I think, on the site—the present site. Now they want an addition of 56 feet by 140 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. Why do they want more ground?

Mr. PARK. To make a park there.

Mr. MADDEN. Why should they make a park around the public building? Why should they do that?

Mr. PARK. There is a good reason for it—to commemorate the services of my predecessor.

Mr. MADDEN. All right; I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman wanted to make an explanation of it. As I understand it, the amendment that the gentleman has had read for information is to be attached to this bill that is now pending?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I would not be willing to consent to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PARK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection until I can make a little discussion of it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, on a former occasion when the bill was under consideration the great Illinoisan, Mr. MANN, objected on the ground, as I understood it, that we could not afford to appropriate money to dedicate a monument or a park to each Member of the House as he passes on his way.

The idea uppermost in his mind, I deem, was apprehension lest a precedent be set that might in years to come unwarrantably drain the Treasury.

If passage of this bill with an appropriation to acquire further space to create a little memorial park will set a precedent then I agree with him.

I have much admiration and respect for the well-considered opinions and judgment of this great statesman.

As a slight tribute of my esteem I say that I have sat under the wand of the magician, entranced by the witchery of his wit and the charm of his logic—and I may add that his superb eloquence has more than once lifted himself and his party, and members of other parties, to a state of feeling exalted beyond partisan standards, reaching true statesmanship—and, knowing his keen perception and broad patriotism, I can not but feel that through my inefficiency on the last occasion when this bill was presented an understanding was not reached of the exact purpose and reasons therefor in my mind. I am constrained to further explain the causes and conditions upon which I base this request, and by reason of which I contend no precedent can be established by the passage of this bill.

Precedents are made from causes and conditions, and unless succeeding causes and conditions are similar there is no precedent for them.

No person born and reared or who has lived outside of influences which exist below the old Mason and Dixon's line since the Civil War can know or appreciate the feelings and emotions that throb in the breasts of southern men.

Mr. Speaker, go with me a half century and more in the past, to the period preceding and during my predecessor's life, and consider the atmosphere into which he was born and breathed and fed upon until his advent to this Hall.

He was familiar with the history of conditions that preceded his birth, when slavery and secession were creating discord and threatening to disrupt the Union.

Men of great intellect and of stern convictions on both sides of the question were drawing apart and preparing for what appeared a coming great conflict. A United States Senator, afterwards President of the Confederacy, withdrew from the Senate with a speech memorable and immortal on his lips. Such men as Robert Toombs, of Georgia, William L. Yancey, of Alabama, and others took the same view, their views being combated by men of equal intellect and convictions on the opposite side. In civil and military life a division was rapidly drawn. Robert E. Lee, then in the service of the Union, withdrew his blade from that service and tendered it to Virginia, his mother State, as did many other West Pointers; and as the Union ranks were depleted by these withdrawals they were augmented by others of the same faith and equal determination, who closed their ranks and gathered around the Stars and Stripes to battle for the Union. And when the first gun was fired at Fort Sumter there was unfurled the banner of the Stars and Bars that floated and rippled from the Atlantic all the way to the Rio Grande and far up to the Missouri; beneath its folds there rallied a devoted throng of planters and plainsmen, men from field, city, shop, and profession, all with a common impulse and prayer on their lips, swearing, as they came, that where that flag led they would dare to follow and to die.

Alongside the South Carolinians and their "rattlesnake flag," with defiant motto, "Don't tread on me," ranged Texans and their azure banner with single central star, and war memories of Goliad and San Jacinto tenderly but firmly tuning their heartstrings to battle.

And so the conflict came. The army of Northern Virginia clashed with the army of the Potomac, and the flash and roar and roll of battle scourged the land during four eventful years. At its close was the usual wreckage—the armless sleeve, the wooden leg, the shattered constitution—and his vivid imagination beheld "the warrior's banner take its flight to greet the warrior's soul." The South fought and lost all save honor and a few defeated but unconquered heroes. Nothing was left but the land and a mourning people, amidst whom ranged at will, loosed with a pen stroke, 4,000,000 of half-savage people, made unruly by men unworthy of the great East and North whence they came, and who whispered words of delusive hope into their willing ears.

For more than a decade in wretchedness the people of the South suffered, struggled, and prayed for deliverance, and none but the Anglo-Saxon of pure blood could have stood the strain.

Born during the decade succeeding the war, consider my predecessor as he opened his eyes upon the light and grew from boyhood into manhood's estate, and heard the eloquent story of those he honored, the story of the terrible conflict, believing they were right. And as Memorial Day succeeded Memorial Day he learned to feel keenly in his sensitive nature the sufferings of the people he most loved. He saw daily around him women who had been delicately nurtured, clad in faded, patched, and worn calico, turning their hands to the most menial tasks. He saw gray-bearded men in faded, patched gray bending to the plow, fighting a sterner battle alone and unfriended than they or their companions fought from Manassas all the way through Spotsylvania and the Wilderness to sad but hallowed Appomattox. As he grew older his convictions grew stronger, and when pension legislation was enacted and there was added to the overburdened Southland in her wreck and ruin greater burdens than they could bear, he felt that the vanquished were driven by the law of the sword to contribute of their poverty to pension the victors, and there was "no pity, no relenting ruth"; and his honest, earnest spirit indignant rose at the real or fancied wrong, and when he came here he came with full belief that there was great injustice done his people, and with great determination to right the wrong, with his slight body and great spirit, he felt he would overcome in part and rally others to him, and would finally overcome what he considered cruel injustice. So believing, he entered the lists and struck the shield of the doughtiest of his opponents with lance point, and attacked boldly pension legislation wherever he found a vulnerable point in the armor. He thought about it, pondered over it, argued for it, and came to the floor and fought, and sometimes won in single instances, and sometimes won in more than single instances, and by his determined stand believed he would accomplish a mission. At length his frail body, in which the spirit was bigger than the frame that held it, rose and expanded in his mighty efforts to the bursting point, and the finger of Almighty God lightly touched the tricuspid valve of his heart and there was a purpling of the lips, a bluing of the finger nails, a paling of the face—those infallible tokens of regurgitation of the blood into the chambers whence nature had forced it into the life-giving circuit.

Circulation became slow, the brain and body grew weaker and weaker. His spirit was still strong to fight, but he knew on the instant that the dusky wing of the death angel was hovering him under. Although he struggled on, shortly he retired to his home at Thomasville, with full knowledge that his task was ended though unfinished, and there he met the fate which awaited him, and awaits all, with the cool, naked courage with which he met obstacles here and elsewhere.

Believing as I do and feeling as I do, that he received the injury which caused his death while battling here; for that reason, I say, and for these causes and circumstances I have related, I declare there can be no precedent established when you dedicate this park to his memory.

Contemplating his last moments, Byron's immortal imagery of Kirk White shapes before me:

> Unhappy White, when life was in its spring,
> And thy young muse just waived her joyous wing,
> The Spoiler came, and all thy promise fair
> Has sought the grave to sleep forever there.

Yes; she, too, much indulged thy fond pursuit;
She sowed the seed, but Death has reaped the fruit.
So the struck eagle stretch'd upon the plain,
No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
View'd his own feather on the fatal dart
And wing'd the shaft that quiver'd in his heart.

There will not be in a century, if ever, circumstances, facts, and causes that will make another instance which can point to this act as a precedent. Feeling that here where he received the mortal blow is where the sign of remembrance should be set up, I ask again, in this brief and faulty explanation to this House, that they vote the passage of this bill with the amendment incorporated therein. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my friend from Georgia [Mr. PARK] that I would not be willing to have the Government purchase land as a post-office site for the purpose of using it as a park. If the people of Thomasville desire to present this land to the Government in connection with the post-office site, I would have no objection whatever to letting the Secretary of the Treasury permit the city of Thomasville to maintain it as a park at their expense.

Mr. PARK. Then, Mr. Speaker, considering the gentleman's objection, I offer this amendment to meet his objection.

The SPEAKER. The time has not yet arrived for that.

Mr. MANN. Let it be read for information.

Mr. PARK. I present the amendment for information, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the said post-office site, except where buildings, further addition, and approaches are now or may hereafter be located, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be used as a public park, to be known as Roddenbery Park, to be maintained by the city of Thomasville under regulations prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept conveyance of title to the land between the post-office site and Madison Street in the city of Thomasville, Ga., and the said land so acquired shall thereupon become a part of said post-office site: Provided, That the said enlarged post-office site, except where buildings, further additions, and approaches are now or may hereafter be located, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be used as a public park, to be known as Roddenbery Park, to be maintained by the city of Thomasville under regulations to be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the gentleman that if the bill is now considered, he proposes to offer that amendment?

Mr. PARK. Yes; and withdraw the other.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the amendment starts out, "That the said post-office site." It ought to read:

That the post-office site in the city of Thomasville, Ga.

Mr. PARK. I accept the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK].

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 1 of the amendment strike out the words "said post-office site" and insert in lieu thereof the words "post-office site in the city of Thomasville, Ga."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] as amended by the Mann amendment.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the title be amended in accordance with the amendment to conform to the text of the bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text of the bill.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

LANDS IN OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 49) to provide for the exchange with the State of Oregon of certain school lands and indemnity rights within the national forests of that State for an equal area of national forest land.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1818) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, or corporation shall ship or deliver for shipment, nor shall any common carrier nor the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, receive for transportation or transport from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia any live calf not accompanied by its mother unless the same is 6 weeks old or over: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make rules and regulations permitting, in cases of emergency only, the shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than 6 weeks old; and the Secretary of Agriculture may also permit, under such restrictions as he may deem proper, one shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than 6 weeks old and over 3 weeks old when the entire time consumed in such interstate shipment to final destination, including time of loading and unloading, does not exceed 12 hours.

SEC. 2. That any person, firm, or corporation, or any common carrier or the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $50 for each calf offered for shipment, shipped, or received for transportation or transported in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON], the author of the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. GARNER. In order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asks unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, of course, if the gentleman from Texas insists upon it, I am in no position to resist; but I want to ask the gentleman if it is not possible for him to suggest an amendment to the bill which will meet such objection as he may have to it?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan I will say that I feel quite confident from the correspondence I have had with gentlemen in Texas interested in the cattle industry that we will be able to come to some definite conclusion, and that there will be no objection per se to the bill the next time it comes up. But, Mr. Speaker, I want to say in this connection that this bill is not intended to affect, and does not particularly affect, the cattle industry. No gentleman can rise on the floor of this House and point to a single instance, so far as I know, where men engaged in the cattle industry for the purpose of producing beef have ever abused the privilege of selling and transporting calves or have caused the thing which is sought to be remedied by this bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman is quite right about that.

Mr. GARNER. This bill is intended entirely to reach the dairy interests of this country. I may say in this connection that the indentical remedy is within the hands of each State in the Union.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. The States simply refuse to exercise the right. The gentleman from Michigan shakes his head. I do not believe there is any State in the Union that can not, under the public-health provisions of its constitution, adequately take care of the situation. But I am not going to argue that point with the gentleman. I know there ought to be some legislation along this line in order to prevent the dairy people abusing the right which now exists, of killing young calves. Therefore I feel confident that the cattlemen of the country who desire to have the public health protected, and who also desire legislation from a humanitarian standpoint, will be willing to agree to an amendment which I am sure will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON]; but to-day I would like to have the bill go over.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, so that the matter may be fully understood by my friend from Texas and by those whom he represents, I should like to make a very brief statement. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. When the bill was under consideration before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, Judge Cowan, a distinguished citizen of Texas, came before the committee representing certain western cattle raisers' associations. He made a statement to the effect that there might be times of drought, when pasturage was short, when it might be necessary to move cattle across State boundary lines, and when it might be necessary to slaughter the mothers of the calves, because of the lack of pasturage, and when it might possibly be necessary to slaughter calves under 6 weeks old. The age limit is fixed in the bill at 6 weeks.

Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if I am correctly informed, the cattlemen of the Southwest do not kill any calves under 6 weeks old. On the contrary, they keep their calves until they are nearer 6 months old. The situation sought to be corrected, the abuse sought to be prevented by this bill, does not apply to the Southwest. After hearings before the committee, after consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, and after consultation by Judge Cowan with Dr. Melvin, head of the Bureau of Animal Industry, an amendment was incorporated in this bill to meet the very difficulty which my friend suggests, and I supposed that we had it all arranged to meet that situation. Of course, if my friend feels that the bill ought to go over, so that his people may have further opportunity for consideration, reluctant as I am to have the consideration of the bill postponed, I shall accede to the request, because I must.

Mr. GARNER. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will understand that I am in sympathy with the objects which he desires to attain. But it was a very short time to go to Texas and get the views of the cattlemen in that State, and then get back here in time to consider the bill to-day. That is the reason I ask to let it go over until the next unanimous-consent day.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman knows that there are great abuses of the kind sought to be prevented by this bill.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman state who are the men that are abusing the privilege.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I will, but I do not want to trespass on the time of the House.

Mr. COX. The gentleman can have some more time.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In the dairy countries where they have a large number of cows, say 75 or 100——

Mr. COX. Michigan is a large dairy State, is it not?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes; there are a good many dairy farms there. In the spring there are a large number of calves born. If the gentleman was brought up on a farm, he knows that it is not easy to teach a calf to drink, and the dairymen do not like to take the time to teach the calves to drink. Besides that, the dairymen want to sell the milk instead of feeding it to the calves. The calf is in the way, and if they keep him it is necessary to teach him to drink, and so there are men hanging around these dairy farms, who make it a business to buy these young calves.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for four minutes more.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman can make his speech when the bill comes up again.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has four additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Michigan proceeding four minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. A great many of these calves are shipped to Boston, and the testimony shows that in two days 790 calves arrived in Brighton, a suburb of Boston, and of these 790 calves 183 were dead. In six days 1,700 were brought in from New York, and in one week over 6,000 came in from New England points. These young calves, when they arrive alive, are slaughtered and the carcasses are used for food for poor people. Now, the experts say that the meat is unfit for human food. They say that the calves being too young their meat is water soaked and dropsical and becomes a fertile place of deposit of the germs of disease.

There is another thing that they do. They can this meat and label it "potted chicken," and when you think you are eating potted chicken you are really eating the carcasses of immature calves. It is an abuse that ought to be stopped not only because it is cruel, but because it is dangerous to human life.

Mr. COX. It is the dairymen that are guilty of this kind of misconduct.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is—that is, they sell the calves to shippers, and these shippers sell the calves to unscrupulous dealers. The dairymen are anxious and willing to get rid of the calves. I will consent to let the matter go over until my friend from Texas can hear from his constituents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEDAL-OF-HONOR HONOR ROLL—ARMY AND NAVY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12179) to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll, designated as "the Army and Navy medal-of-honor honor roll," and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand what that was. Was there objection to the consideration of the "medal-of-honor honor roll bill"?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the gentleman from Illinois objected.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am sorry that he did so.

[Mr. LANGLEY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

FIRE-ALARM SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR INSANE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 205, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to legally fix and determine the ownership and title to the fire-alarm system and appliances, apparatus, and connections heretofore placed and installed in the Government buildings of the Government Hospital for the Insane and to determine such other questions as are provided for in the following resolution.

The Clerk read the title to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will read the next bill.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 485) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be is enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. In each of the districts described in chapter 5 there shall be a court called a district court, for which there shall be appointed one judge, to be called a district judge, except that in the northern district of California, the southern district of California, the northern district of Illinois, the district of Maryland, the district of Minnesota, the district of Nebraska, the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of New York, the northern and southern districts of Ohio, the district of Oregon, the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, and the western district of Washington, there shall be an additional district judge in each, and in the southern district of New York three additional district judges: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the district of Maryland senior in commission such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district: Provided further, That there shall be one judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, one judge for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, and one judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi: Provided further, That the district judge for the middle district of Alabama shall continue as heretofore to be a district judge for the northern district thereof. Every district judge shall reside in the district or one of the districts for which he is appointed, and for offending against this provision shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Was this bill submitted to the Attorney General for an opinion?

Mr. KETTNER. It was.

Mr. MANN. What was the opinion he rendered?

Mr. KETTNER. His opinion was in the first report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina for information.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like, first, to know what was the opinion of the Attorney General. If there was an opinion it ought to have been in the report.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not recall that the Attorney General ever specifically indorsed the bill creating a new judgeship in the southern district of California. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] was chairman of the subcommittee that held the hearings on the bill. There is no objection to the bill, so far as we have heard, from the Department of Justice. There is a universal demand among the judges, district attorney, lawyers, litigants, and citizens of the southern district of California for this new district judgeship.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. The Attorney General has rendered an opinion upon this.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, it is customary, or it ought to be customary, for the committee to refer bills of this character to the Department of Justice for information and for the judgment of the department.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I am discussing the matter with the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RAKER. I wanted to call attention to the fact that the Attorney General has reported on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois said that he desired to converse with the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MANN. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEBB. My attention is directed to the fact that the Department of Justice wrote to Senator CULBERSON when this bill was being considered in the Senate, setting forth the needs for a new judge. That letter is signed by a Mr. Jesse C. Atkins, Assistant Attorney General, for the Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. It would vastly expedite the passage of bills of this character if gentlemen would include in their reports a statement from the Department of Justice.

Mr. WEBB. This is in the Senate report, and we did not think it was necessary to put it in the House report, I suppose, though I did not draft the report on this bill.

Mr. MANN. But we are supposed to get our information from the House reports. We are not supposed to read the Senate reports.

Mr. WEBB. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. What does the Attorney General report upon it?

Mr. KETTNER. He reports favorably.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that this bill, which is intended to reenact only sections of the judicial title code, includes two judges for the district of Maryland and does not include the judgeship that was recently created at Philadelphia. I was informed the other day that that situation was relieved by the death of the senior judge in that district in Philadelphia, and I have been informed that the judge who was the senior judge when this law was enacted in Maryland has since died.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; and the amendment which I desire to offer cures that defect.

Mr. MANN. That situation existed at the time the bill was reported to the House, it existed at the time it was reported to the Senate, and at the time it passed the Senate. Why was it that the two great Judiciary Committees were unable to ascertain a fact relating to Maryland, where you simply step over the line to find out if necessary, and then recommend the passage of a bill to create an additional district judge in Maryland, whom nobody wants? The committee could see to California, but not to Maryland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let us hear the amendment read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 2, line 1, the words "the district of Maryland," and strike out all after the word "provided," in line 8, page 2, down to the word "that," in line 12, on page 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know from the chairman of the Judiciary Committee just what the bill as amended would do?

Mr. WEBB. It creates simply an additional district judge for the southern district of California. That is all there is to the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is this amendment that the gentleman has offered?

Mr. WEBB. Four years ago Congress created an additional district judge for the district of Maryland, with the provision that when the senior judge died his successor should not be appointed. That law was carried forward in the judicial code, and in reenacting the judicial code that same section of the code was copied in this bill; but since that time the senior judge in Maryland has died, and unless the bill be amended in the particular which I state it would provide for an additional judge in Maryland, which is not wanted. My amendment cures that difficulty.

Mr. MURDOCK. So that this really does not eliminate a district judgeship at all?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, not at all. That judge is dead, but no successor is to be appointed under the law.

Mr. MURDOCK. The original bill which provided for an additional judge in California does not provide for an extra district?

Mr. WEBB. No. That is cared for in the judicial code, which provides for one judge in the southern district of California. This bill provides for an extra judge.

Mr. MURDOCK. That makes how many judges for California?

Mr. WEBB. Four.

Mr. MANN. An additional one in the northern district.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; the southern district has increased in population in the last few years some three or four hundred per cent.

Mr. MANN. This makes two judges in the northern district and two in the southern district.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is four.

Mr. WEBB. That is right.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman tell me if the report of the Attorney General shows, on the face of it, in figures, that there is business there which makes these four judges necessary?

Mr. WEBB. The Attorney General's report consists mainly of a letter from the clerks in the southern district, which makes out a very very strong case in favor of an additional judge. I have a telegram, received from there a day or two ago, which I will read, if the gentleman desires, which clearly shows the great necessity for this additional judge.

Mr. MURDOCK. What I am trying to arrive at is this: States of similar population to California—Arkansas, for instance, has two judges and two districts, Louisiana has two judges, Nebraska has two judges, and Kansas only has one. Why should California have four?

Mr. WEBB. There is more business there.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, during the year 1895, the first year under the present incumbent, Judge Olin Wellborn, there were 117 cases filed in the Federal court at Los Angeles, Cal. In the year 1913 there were some 745 cases filed, and in the first six months of the year 1914, 403 cases were filed. The present judge works every moment of his time. He takes no vacation.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman know whether these judges are all needed or not?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, yes; they are absolutely essential.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, let me state to the gentleman from Kansas that last unanimous-consent day I had this go over in order that I might look up this bill, and suggested to the gentleman from North Carolina in reference to the Maryland matter, which we agreed ought to go out. Since then I have had a good deal of literature and a letter from the clerk of the court out there, which convinces me beyond any question that it was necessary that they should have this additional judge to transact the business out there.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman believes that the four judges are necessary in California?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the least doubt after having examined the matter and talking with the gentleman from the Los Angeles district.

Mr. WEBB. The population there has increased in the last 15 years from about 400,000 to 1,000,000.

Mr. KETTNER. That is in this judicial district.

Mr. FOSTER. These 17 counties have increased in population since 1900 from 424,000 to 970,000, and they are now having many cases go over on account of being unable to attend to the business.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me to answer the gentleman from Kansas and other Members who desire information about this matter, I will say the purpose of this bill, S. 485, is to create a new Federal judgeship for the southern district of California. Perhaps never before have the facts and conditions so clearly warranted the making of a new Federal office and the naming of a new Federal officer.

There are 17 California counties, comprising an area equal to that of the States of Kentucky and Tennessee combined, in this one judicial district, and the growth in population and in court business since the present district judge was appointed has been very great indeed.

Judge Olin Wellborn, our district judge, was once a Member of this House from the State of Texas. He moved to California, and in 1895 was appointed to the bench by President Cleveland. His predecessor, Judge Erskine M. Ross, had been appointed district judge by Mr. Cleveland in his first term as President, and was promoted to the circuit court of appeals in his second term. Both of these gentlemen have well served the people and the Government. They have been fair and honest and industrious, and have filled their respective offices to the eminent satisfaction of the lawyers, litigants, and people generally.

When Judge Wellborn was appointed there were about 350,000 people in the district; to-day there are more than 1,200,000. Los Angeles is the largest city in the district. In 1895 it had a population of about 75,000; in 1910, 319,000; and to-day has more than 500,000 people.

San Diego is next in size. In 1895 its population was about 17,000; in 1910, 40,000; and to-day it claims eighty or ninety thousand.

Fresno follows next. In 1895 it had 11,000 people; in 1910, 25,000; to-day it is estimated to have about 35,000.

Pasadena, Long Beach, Pomona, Santa Monica, Venice, Alhambra, South Pasadena, Whittier, Monrovia, Covina, San Bernardino, Redlands, Riverside, Ventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, Bakersfield, Hanford, Coalinga, Colton, Corona, Merced, and Modesto are also cities within the district, and have populations of from 5,000 to 40,000 each.

The county of Los Angeles is the most populous, having grown from 135,000 in 1895 to 504,000 in 1910, and to over 750,000 now.

In 1895 Los Angeles County had six superior or common pleas judges; to-day it has 18—three times as many as when Judge Wellborn was appointed. Many additional judgeships have been created in the other counties of the district since 1895, but there has been no increase of judges in our United States district court.

During 1895 the total new cases brought in Judge Wellborn's court numbered 117, or an average of near 10 per month. For the year 1913, 745 new cases were brought, an average of 62 per month. For the first six months of 1914 there has been a monthly average of over 73 new cases.

The following table shows the cases, civil, criminal, and in bankruptcy, that have been instituted during each calendar year beginning with the year 1895, the year of the appointment of the present district judge, and including the first six months of the year 1914:

Year.	Civil cases.	Criminal cases.	Total civil and criminal.	Bankruptcy cases.	Total of all cases.

The condition of business in the court can best be understood by quoting the following from a letter written April 16, 1914, by William M. Van Dyke, the clerk of the court:

The actual state of the calendar and of the condition confronting the court at the present moment can best be understood and appreciated, it seems to me, if I first make a brief statement of the work that has been done by the court during the last two not unusual but very typical weeks:

On the 2d of April, with the jury out in one criminal case, Judge Wellborn impaneled a jury and proceeded at once with the trial of another criminal case, the United States v. William B. Edwards and five other defendants, indicted on a charge of conspiring to injure, oppress, etc., citizens in the exercise of civil rights, in violation of section 19, Federal Penal Code of 1910. Many witnesses for the Government and for the defendants have been sworn and examined, and as the case involves some new and important questions, the trial has been a prolonged one, and will not be concluded until to-morrow. Judge Wellborn has interrupted this trial to hear his law and motion calendars on Mondays, each calendar comprising from 30 to 40 matters, demurrers, pleas, and motions. He has also during recesses concluded the hearing of one case tried before him without a jury, and begun another. He has also received at different times during that period three reports of the United States grand jury for this district, which returned with the three reports 18 indictments. He has also imposed sentences in four cases in which defendants were convicted prior to April 2. He has received pleas of "guilty" from and sentenced four other defendants and received pleas of "not guilty" in five other cases. He has also heard and granted applications for discharge in bankruptcy in 13 bankruptcy matters, and has made orders of adjudication in bankruptcy in 18 other matters, besides hearing many other ex parte motions in court and many matters in chambers.

The calendar of cases for trial, which has accumulated during the trial of the Edwards case, and which was called this morning, in addition to the case on trial, consists of 19 criminal cases ready to be proceeded with immediately, 1 civil case, besides 1 case for the imposition of a sentence, and 4 cases for arraignments of defendants and for the entry of their pleas.

There are now set for other days during the next 10 weeks at Los Angeles 19 criminal and 31 civil cases. While a few of the 20 cases on to-day's calendar and of the 50 other cases set during the term, according to the announcement of counsel, can, perhaps, be disposed of in a day, most of the cases will take several days to try, and many will certainly require a week or more.

As I have above stated, it is also necessary that Judge Wellborn should interrupt the term at Los Angeles to hold a term of court as provided by law at Fresno, beginning on the first Monday in May. The calendar for that session is not yet made up, but I am advised that there will be tried one criminal and two civil cases, in which the Government is interested, and that there will be ready for trial six civil cases in which the Government is not interested, which the parties are anxious to have tried at said term of court. It will also be necessary to impanel a grand jury for that division of the district and receive and act upon its report. Everything considered, it appears to me that the business at Fresno for the coming session can not be disposed of in less than two weeks.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman know whether or not the holding judge is diligent?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Judge Wellborn has been doing and is now doing all that mortal man can do. He works continuously. He holds court every day, generally at Los Angeles, though twice each year he is obliged, under the law, to hold court at San Diego and Fresno. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the people of southern California are in urgent need of another Federal judge. Civil cases are more than two years behind, and many criminal cases are delayed for months beyond the time for exact justice or even fair treatment.

The following letter received a short time ago, correctly demonstrates the unwarranted inconvenience and expense to which our people are being subjected because there are not enough judges to try the cases brought:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 2, 1914.

The Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have a very important case relative to conflicting patents which is to be tried in the United States circuit court of this city under Judge Wellborn. The case is of such moment that the reporter's fees alone for taking and transcribing the testimony was over $2,500.

We completed taking the testimony in February one year ago. Ever since that time we have been anxiously endeavoring to have this case heard before Judge Wellborn. His calendar has been so full of criminal cases during that entire interval that he has been utterly unable to try our case. Worse still, about one week ago Judge Wellborn announced from the bench that, due to pressure of criminal cases, probably not a single civil case will be heard in his court this term.

We understand that there is a bill now pending for the purpose of providing this district with another Federal judge. We can assure you that it is extremely important that that bill be passed, as at present this district is virtually without a civil Federal court, and is being very greatly hampered thereby.

Realizing the extreme tardiness of court action in this district, unscrupulous companies are taking advantage of the situation and are ignoring the rights of others, depending on the profits of business so obtained to defray their legal expenses when the belated decision may be rendered against them.

We strongly urge on you the importance of passing the bill referred to.

With kindest personal regards from the writer, we are,

Yours, very truly,

WILSON & WILLARD MFG. CO.
Per E. C. WILSON, President.

The following extract from a letter written by the clerk of the court November 1, 1913, illustrates the same thing, and also shows the tremendous expense to the Government of an always overcrowded calendar:

I have had a search made, however, as to four cases which were so continued during the year 1912—

Continued because the court could not give consideration to them at that time, owing to the business before it at the moment—and I find the fees paid to the witnesses at the time the cases were continued for trial on account of the impossibility of trying them amounted to $4,450.10. This is merely the fees of witnesses in these four cases paid under the circumstances just indicated. It does not include other expenses to which the Government was put. There were, however, other cases continued for the same reason during that year, and there have been some continued for the same reason during the year 1913.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the following facts:

Since the appointment of the present district judge the population of the district has increased nearly 400 per cent, and the number of cases of all kinds brought in our Federal court has grown to more than six times as many per annum, to wit, 117 in 1895 and 745 in 1913.

Our Federal district adjoins the Republic of Mexico, and in it necessarily arises a tremendous number of cases involving the neutrality and extradition laws of the United States and Mexico, besides a large and wonderfully increasing number of international commerce, customs, and immigration cases.

This district has in it the first thousand miles of the United States seacoast on the Pacific. It has a number of harbors of commerce which, after the Panama Canal is opened, will quadruple the usual number of admiralty and customs cases.

This district has 28 Indian reservations, 7 national forest reservations, and part of 2 national parks.

The Government still owns thousands of acres of public land that have caused, and will continue to cause, innumerable suits, because of homestead, desert, reclamation, irrigation, water-power, mineral, and oil claims.

Perhaps more than others this district is populated by eastern families who still have large property—corporate and other—interests at their old homes in other States. Federal litigation naturally follows.

The rapid growth and tremendous increase of population in this district has caused many get-rich-quick schemes to use the United States mails. Constant litigation has ensued in consequence.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no objection to this bill. It is urged by all our people, and as an evidence of that fact, I will now read in turn the resolutions passed by the California State Bar Association, the Los Angeles (Cal.) Bar Association, and the Wholesalers Board of Trade of Los Angeles.

Resolutions of the California State Bar Association:

Whereas a necessity exists for the creation of an additional United States district judge for the southern district of California on account of the magnitude of the business transacted in that court and the large increase in the population within that district, and this condition has been called to the attention of the Congress of the United States and a bill creating an additional judge for that district has been transferred to the House and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and is now there pending:

Now, therefore, this association does urge upon that committee that the bill be reported favorably to the House at the earliest opportunity and requests the House to pass the bill as soon as possible thereafter in order that relief may be given to this district to which it is justly entitled.

I, the undersigned, secretary of the California Bar Association, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution passed by that association at a meeting of said association held on the 22d day of November, 1913.

T. W. ROBINSON, Secretary.

Resolutions of the Los Angeles (Cal.) Bar Association:

Resolved, That whereas it became evident to this association in the year 1908 that a necessity existed for the creation of an additional United States district judge for the southern district of California on account of the magnitude of the business transacted by the United States court in this district at that time and the congestion which then was becoming burdensome, and this association did at that time cause a committee to be appointed to investigate the subject and make a report thereon, and the committee of this association did, on the 30th day of September, 1908, report that the public interest, and particularly the interest of the litigant in the Federal courts for this district, demanded immediate relief in the way of an additional judge for the southern district, and the committee of this association did secure letters from the Hon. E. M. Ross, judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and from the Hon. Olin Wellborn, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, and others, showing the necessity for such additional judge, and caused the said information to be laid before Congress, and this association has earnestly endeavored ever since said time to secure an additional United States district judge to relieve the congestion which has been increasing since that time; and

Whereas the business of the Federal courts in this district has practically doubled since the year 1908 and the population embraced within the boundaries of that district has doubled, having increased from approximately 750,000 to 1,500,000 since the year 1908; and

Whereas the litigation has more than proportionately increased in the Federal courts since that time, owing to the international questions arising on account of the civil war in the Republic of Mexico, the boundaries of which extend along the southern boundaries of this district, and on account of the litigation arising over mineral claims, and particularly oil locations, and the position taken by the United States Government in relation thereto, and on account of the numerous enterprises which have sprung up in Los Angeles, owing to the great local growth, seeking to sell real estate and stock through incorporated companies, which companies had made use of the United States mails, and the increase of Federal business in connection with the ocean shipping and transportation which has sprung up in this district during the last five years, in addition to the increase which has arisen in all lines of business, which business is of the character had by other courts; and

Whereas this association did cause another committee to be appointed on the 21st day of March, 1913, to urge upon Congress the necessity of granting an additional United States judge for the southern district of California, and that committee has caused to be presented to Congress information showing the condition of the court and the necessity for the appointment, and all the Federal Representatives from the State of California having urged upon Congress the appointment of such additional judge; and

Whereas a bill creating an additional judge for the southern district of California was introduced in the United States Senate by the Hon. JOHN D. WORKS, Senator from the State of California, and has been passed by the United States Senate, and said bill has been transferred to the House and referred to the Committee on Judiciary and is now there pending: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association does most respectfully urge upon Congress that it do pass the bill at the earliest opportunity, in order that the relief may be given to this district to which it is justly entitled.

I, the undersigned, secretary of the Los Angeles Bar Association, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution passed by that association at a meeting of the trustees thereof, held on the 6th day of November, 1913.

A. J. COPP, Jr., Secretary.

Resolutions of the Los Angeles (Cal.) Wholesalers' Board of Trade:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill for the creation of another judgeship for the southern district of California; and

Whereas the growth of population and of business in the southern district of California has been such that it is impossible for the business to be transacted by one judge; and

Whereas the business interests of this district are suffering from delays caused by the congestion of the calendar in that court, notwithstanding the constant work of Judge Wellborn in his endeavors to dispatch business.

Resolved, That the Los Angeles Wholesalers' Board of Trade, composed of the wholesale merchants and banks of this city, urge upon Congress the immediate passage of the bill creating said judgeship.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS, Congressman from this district, and that he be requested to urge the passage of this measure.

Adopted at a regular meeting of the board of directors of the Los Angeles Wholesalers' Board of Trade, held September 18, 1913.

H. B. LANE, Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, I desire now to read a telegram received July 3 from several of the leading law firms of Los Angeles, to wit:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 3, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Congestion in Federal court is denying to citizens here their right to be even heard on matters requiring immediate relief. An additional judge is absolutely necessary.

O'MELVENY, STEVENS & MILLIKEN.
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER.
MOTT & DILLON.
HAAS & DUNNIGAN.
H. H. TROBRIDGE.
ALBERT LEE STEPHENS.
DENIS & LOWENTHAL.

Mr. Speaker, I have no personal motive in advocating this additional judgeship. I am not a lawyer, I have no case before this or any other court, I have no candidate for the place. The appointee will come from another party than my own. I am working solely for the public good. I express the hope of all southern California, regardless of politics or party, that this bill may pass the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 2, line 1, "the district of Maryland," and strike out all after the word "Provided," in line 8, page 2, down to the word "that," in line 12.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KETTNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COAL AND OIL RESOLUTIONS (H. DOC. NO. 1124).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a communication from the Hon. James S. Harlan, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, making a report in reference to certain resolutions, and also a short letter, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1914.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE AND THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIRS: I have the honor to submit the following report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, responsive to the joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, a copy of which precedes the report. The commission has heretofore submitted reports under this resolution in connection with its investigations in various fields throughout the country. The report submitted herewith has particular reference to the coal and coal roads in the State of Illinois and incidentally to roads extending into adjacent Indiana coal fields.

Respectfully submitted.

JAMES S. HARLAN, Chairman.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take the general deficiency bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the general deficiency bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York what is the status of the sundry civil bill in conference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are prepared to make a report to-day with five or six items in disagreement.

Mr. MANN. Will that probably come up to-morrow?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To-morrow, I think. The Senate must act on the report first.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 17824. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. SISSON, and Mr. GILLETT.

SALES OF LANDS, KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10848) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation," approved June 17, 1892 (27 Stat. L., pp. 52, 53).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman desire to have further information relative to this bill? I will state that I have received a map from the department and a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and from a special inspector who has recently been on the reservation recommending this bill, and they all state positively it is necessary for this money to be used for the purpose of building a trail over this country. It is 30 miles, according to the statement, from where the Indians are living, on a creek known as Mill Creek, to the nearest point where they get their supplies.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has a letter of that sort, I shall be very glad to read it. I can not do it right now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS WHITE RIVER, BARRY COUNTY, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16197) to authorize the county of Barry, State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the White River, in Barry County, Mo., at or near a point known as Goldens Ferry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, a Senate bill of like character has passed the Senate and I would like to ask unanimous consent that it be considered in lieu of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER] asks unanimous consent to consider a similar bill passed by the Senate in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if the Senate bill is in the House.

Mr. DECKER. Yes. It is No. 260 on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to know whether the Senate bill as it passed is in the House.

Mr. DECKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5462) to authorize the county of Barry, State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the White River in Barry County, Mo., at or near a point known as Goldens Ferry.

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Barry, State of Missouri, and its assigns be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the White River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Goldens Ferry, more fully described as the crossing on Golden and Cassville public road, in section 6, township 21, range 25 west, fifth principal meridian, in the county of Barry, in the State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DECKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 16197 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PATENT FOR LANDS, SUSANVILLE, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16476) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to the city of Susanville, in Lassen County, Cal., for certain lands, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to confer by proper patent to the city of Susanville (a municipal corporation of the sixth class, duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, with full power to hold and own real estate), of Lassen County, Cal., the following tract of public land, to wit: The northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28, township 30 north, range 12 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, Susanville land district, upon payment therefor to the Secretary of the Interior for the Government of the United States the full sum of $1.25 per acre, which patent shall be issued upon the express condition that the city of Susanville shall use said tract of land for city uses and purposes only: Provided, That whenever said lands cease to be used by said city for municipal purposes or are attempted to be sold or conveyed, then, and in that event, title to such lands and the whole thereof shall revert to the United States.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "confer" and insert the word "convey."

On page 2, after the word "States," in line 10, insert the following:

"Provided further, That such patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all gas, oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in such land, and the right to the use of the land for extracting the same."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] how large Susanville is?

Mr. RAKER. There are 3,500 people there. It is increasing every day. A railroad was built in last year.

Mr. MANN. Do they really need a 40-acre tract for dumping purposes?

Mr. RAKER. Well, they want to put a plant there. They believe they do, and I believe so. It lies about 2 miles from town.

Mr. MANN. How far is this from the volcano?

Mr. RAKER. About 45 miles.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be cheaper to send the waste up there and dump it.

Mr. RAKER. But you would have to climb 10,487 feet to get to the mouth of the volcano.

Mr. MANN. If the people out there are like the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], climbing would not hurt them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed was laid on the table.

MAIL CHUTES IN PUBLIC BUILDING, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4182) to authorize the installation of mail chutes in the public building at Cleveland, Ohio, and to appropriate money therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, and as it passed the Senate it appropriates the sum of $800 for the purpose of installing mail chutes in the Federal building at Cleveland, Ohio. When this bill was considered by the House committee, that committee, being of the opinion that it had no right to appropriate the money, being but an authorization committee, amended the bill so that it would simply provide for the authorization, expecting it would be reached on the calendar in time, if it was passed, to be added to the general deficiency or the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Those bills are both out of the way now. It would be impossible to have the amount appropriated at this session, and on the part of the committee I wish, therefore, to withdraw the amendment offered to the bill by the House committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has not yet given its consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we have here one of the finest examples of "pork" appropriations that exists.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is a small pig, then.

Mr. DONOVAN. A bill was passed originally in 1899 limiting the cost of this building to $2,500,000. But through the cleverness and adroitness of the people back of this bill, three or four years afterwards they got another half a million dollars, making $3,000,000. But they were not satisfied with that, and they came in here six years afterwards for $775,000 more, making in all $3,775,000 for the post office, starting out with the idea originally of only $2,500,000, and leading Congress to believe at that time that it was all they wanted. There does not seem to be any limit to the greed of the Ohio chap when the Treasury is in sight. I am going to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DONOVAN. No; I object. They have had their share. They have had their fingers in the pie wagon enough. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. I would be glad if the gentleman would withhold for a moment.

Mr. DONOVAN. No; I object.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Thank you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

REGULATION OF THE CATCHING OF SPONGES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16269) to regulate the taking or catching of sponges in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Straits of Florida outside of State jurisdiction; the landing, delivering, curing, selling, or possession of the same; providing means of enforcement of the same, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the approval of this act it shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States or person owing duty of obedience to the laws of the United States, or any boat or vessel of the United States, or person belonging to or on any such boat or vessel, to take or catch, by any means or method, in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico or the Straits of Florida outside of State territorial limits, any commercial sponges measuring when wet less than 5 inches in their maximum diameter, or to land, deliver, cure, offer for sale, or have in possession at any port or place in the United States, or on any boat or vessel of the United States, any such commercial sponges.

SEC. 2. That the presence of sponges of a diameter of less than 5 inches on any vessel or boat of the United States engaged in sponging in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico or the Straits of Florida outside of State territorial limits, or the possession of any sponges of less than the said diameter sold or delivered by such vessels, shall be prima facie evidence of a violation of this act.

SEC. 3. That every person, vessel, or boat guilty of a violation of this act shall be liable to a fine of 50 cents for each sponge of a less diameter than 5 inches found in the possession of such person, vessel, or boat, and such fine shall be a lien against the vessel or boat on which the offense is committed, and said vessel or boat shall be seized and proceeded against by process of libel in any court having jurisdiction of the offense.

SEC. 4. That any violation of this act shall be prosecuted in the district court of the United States of the district wherein the offender is found or into which he is first brought.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce to enforce the provisions of this act, and he is authorized to empower such officers and employees of the Department of Commerce as he may designate, or such officers and employees of other departments as may be detailed for the purpose, to make arrests and seize vessels and sponges, and, upon his request to the Secretary of the Treasury, may employ the vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service or the employees of the Customs Service to that end.

SEC. 6. That the act approved June 20, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate the landing, delivery, cure, and sale of sponges," and all other laws in conflict herewith, be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not see anyone here in connection with it. There is a Senate bill pending before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, is there not? There is no object in passing the House bill, is there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Senate bill is S. 5313, on the same subject.

Mr. MANN. The Senate bill is S. 6385.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is 5313.

Mr. MANN. I have a copy of the bill in my hand. I do not know how many bills there may be pending, but the bill S. 6385 is "to regulate the taking or catching of sponges in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Straits of Florida outside of State jurisdiction; the landing, delivering, curing, selling, or possession of the same; providing means of enforcement of the same, and for other purposes." It was referred. I guess that was in the last Congress?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. It was referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I had it returned to the House. I wanted to ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries from the further consideration of that bill and consider in lieu of it the House bill.

Mr. MANN. It is the same bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is the same, excepting the House bill modifies the punishment; and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] was going to offer some amendment conforming the Senate bill to the bill as reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MANN. The bill reported from the committee in the last Congress had in it a number of things which this bill does not have. Is it proposed to add those when this bill is considered?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No. It simply relates to punishment. The Senate bill provides that the punishment shall be regulated by the number of sponges found in the possession of the person, while this bill provides a specific fine.

Mr. MANN. Am I right in supposing that in this bill there is a punishment against citizens of the United States who bring prohibited sponges into the United States, but that foreigners have the right to do it without prohibition?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. MANN. I think I am right.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Judge SAUNDERS is the chairman of the subcommittee which considered this bill. I am referring to the bill H. R. 16269, the one pending on the calendar, which provides "that every person, partnership, or association guilty of a violation of this act shall be liable to a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $500."

Mr. MANN. That applies only to the people guilty of violating the act?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the provision of the act is that—

It shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States, or person owing duty of obedience to the laws of the United States, or any boat or vessel of the United States, or person belonging to or on any such boat or vessel, to take or catch, by any means or method, in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico or the Straits of Florida, outside of State territorial limits, any commercial sponges—

And so forth. That does not apply to any foreigner. That specifically permits the foreigner to come there and rob the sponge bank of the sponges, and bring them into the United States without any prohibition; but if American citizens or American vessels happen to take them they are to be punished. Now, what is the object or theory of that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] will answer.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that a copy of this bill was sent by the Secretary of Commerce to Senator FLETCHER and a copy to me, it having been prepared at the Bureau of Fisheries, as I am informed, and I suppose the reasons for leaving foreigners out of the bill was the fact that it was, and is, a delicate matter to deal with foreigners in such matters as long as they are outside of the jurisdiction of the United States. It might be entirely legal. If they should bring the sponges into the United States in violation of law, we could punish them, but I doubt if you could pass a law that would permit the arrest of foreigners on the high seas for gathering sponges outside of our territorial limits—that is, the 3-mile limit.

Mr. MANN. This does not affect the foreigner.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is my understanding. That is where the difficulty in reaching foreigners comes in.

Mr. MANN. There is no difficulty in reaching foreigners who bring, or attempt to bring, sponges into the United States. We can prohibit that. I do not know whether there is any existing law that does prohibit it or not, but I do not see what object there may be—and I do not say there may be no object—in prohibiting a citizen of the United States from going to the sponge banks and getting the sponges and bringing them into the United States if a foreigner or foreign vessel can do that without any prohibition.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have had nothing to do with the enforcement of the old law, but the gentleman will remember that in 1906 we passed a law——

Mr. MANN. I remember that——

Mr. SPARKMAN. And the department has found that it is very difficult of enforcement. That law did not deal with the catching or gathering of sponges at all. It dealt only with the bringing of sponges into the United States, or rather the selling or curing of sponges within the United States. It did not undertake to deal with the taking of them.

Now they find it is very difficult to enforce the law, and the Secretary of Commerce writes a letter——

Mr. MANN. I have it. It says:

> The measure will make it possible to correct the greatest and most destructive abuse connected with the sponge fisheries, and will supersede an act whose impossibility of enforcement tends to foster contempt for law among a considerable alien population.

I am not willing to concede that the United States can not prevent a foreigner or foreign vessel bringing sponges into the United States.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No foreign vessel can engage in our coastwise trade; that is, in fishing——

Mr. MANN. But this is outside the territorial limit. Of course they can go there.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It would be engaging in the coastwise trade.

Mr. MANN. Why, no; it would not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think any foreign vessel could come in there with sponges caught in the waters on the coast of Florida; but personally I agree with the gentleman that——

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman would better pass this over, and ascertain in regard to that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt whatever that something ought to be done in the way of legislation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is very important that some legislation be had, because the industry down there has suffered very considerably.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I remember that is what the gentleman said when we passed the bill 8 or 10 years ago, and it was true then, and it is equally true now; but it is also true that if we enact the legislation we ought to make it effective, which we did not do before.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Perhaps the gentleman can suggest some amendment that will meet the situation.

Mr. MANN. I could easily suggest an amendment, but I am not sure whether it would be desirable. Instead of saying "no citizen of the United States," I would say "no person" or "no vessel." Without examination, I would not undertake to overrule the views of the department on that subject.

Mr. SPARKMAN. As far as I am concerned——

Mr. MANN. I think it had better go over, in order to ascertain about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Unless the gentleman asks to have it passed over I shall object.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of the immigration bill now pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of the immigration bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is that for the purpose of making a speech or for the purpose of inserting a lot of material?

Mr. BRYAN. I am not intending to insert any document. I desire to insert a speech. I have some clippings that I have collected.

Mr. MANN. If anyone desired to insert all the clippings on the subject of the Immigration Service, he could make up a dozen volumes. I have no objection to the gentleman's printing a speech with incidental insertions.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] was addressing the House on the subject of the immigration bill, and I took occasion to interrogate him as to the holding up of that bill, and particularly with reference to administration opposition.

The colloquy was as follows:

> Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?
> Mr. BURNETT. Yes.
> Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman stated a moment ago something about his view of the Progressive position with reference to the distribution of immigrants. One fact is that here a short time ago every Progressive on the floor, with the possible exception of one or two, voted for the literacy test in the gentleman's bill. Now, does the gentleman assert that that bill is being held up—that is the rumor, at any rate—by President Wilson, and that the President is against it? Does the gentleman know whether that is true or not?
> Mr. BURNETT. I do not; and I do not believe the President has ever said to anyone that he was opposed to that bill. I do not know why it is being sidetracked in the Senate, if it is being sidetracked; but I do not believe that President Wilson, after the declarations he made a few years ago in a book which he wrote in criticizing the very class of people that would be kept out by the literacy test, will veto that bill or has said to anybody that he would do so.
> Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman must admit that the Progressives helped him in the enactment of that bill.
> Mr. BURNETT. Yes; every one except one of them, I think.

I take no delight in criticizing the President. I think the administration is so much better than the Republican Party could have given had President Taft been reelected that I am somewhat loath to criticize. I have voted generally for the administration measures, and am quite sure I served the best interests of the people of my State and the country in so doing.

In this matter we have an issue of the greatest importance. It is not a new or unconsidered issue.

WOODROW WILSON, THE AUTHOR.

In his History of the American People (vol. 5, p. 212), Woodrow Wilson, the author and university president, has this to say on this most important subject of immigration:

> The census of 1890 showed the population of the country increased to 62,622,250 an addition of 12,466,467 within the decade. Immigrants poured steadily in as before, but with an alteration of stock which students of affairs marked with uneasiness. Throughout the century men of the sturdy stocks of the north of Europe had made up the main strain of foreign blood which was every year added to the vital working force of the country, or else men of the Latin-Gallic stocks of France and northern Italy; but now there came multitudes of men of the lowest class from the south of Italy and men of the meaner sort out of Hungary and Poland—men out of the ranks where there was neither skill nor energy nor any initiative of quick intelligence—and they came in numbers which increased from year to year, as if the countries of the south of Europe were disburdening themselves of the more sordid and hapless elements of their population, the men whose standards of life and of work were such as American workmen had never dreamed of hitherto. The people of the Pacific coast had clamored these many years against the admission of immigrants out of China, and in May, 1892, got at last what they wanted—a Federal statute which practically excluded from the United States all Chinese who had not already acquired the right of residence; and yet the Chinese were more to be desired, as workmen, if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT HAD SPOKEN PLAINLY.

In his message to Congress, on December 3, 1901, President Roosevelt had said:

> Not only must our labor be protected by the tariff, but it should also be protected so far as possible from the presence in the country of any laborers brought over by contract, or those who, coming freely, yet represent a standard of living so depressed that they can undersell our men in the labor market and drag them to a lower level. Our present immigration laws are unsatisfactory. There should be a comprehensive law enacted with the object of working threefold improvement over our present system.

First, we should aim to exclude absolutely not only all persons who are known to be believers in anarchistic principles or members of anarchistic societies, but also all persons who are of a low tendency or of unsavory reputation. This means that we should require a more thorough system of inspection abroad and a more rigid system of examination at our immigration ports, the former being especially necessary.

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure by a careful and not merely perfunctory educational test some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens.

This would not keep out all anarchists, for many of them belong to the intelligent criminal classes. But it will do what is also in point; that is, tend to decrease the sum of ignorance, so potent in producing the envy, suspicion, malignant passion, and hatred of order, out of which anarchistic sentiment naturally springs.

Finally, all persons should be excluded who are below a certain standard of economic fitness to enter our industrial fields as competitors with American labor.

There should be proper proof of personal capacity to earn an American living and enough money to insure a decent start under American conditions. This would stop the influx of cheap labor and the resulting competition which gives rise to so much of bitterness in American industrial life, and it would dry up the spring of the pestilential social conditions in our great cities, where anarchistic organizations have their greatest possibility of growth.

Both the educational and economic test in a wise immigration law should be designed to protect and elevate the great body politic and social. A very close supervision should be exercised over the steamship companies which mainly bring over the immigrant, and they should be held to a strict accountability for any infraction of the law.

Immigration into the United States for the year ending June 30, 1902, was 648,743. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, there entered this country 1,285,349 aliens, and one and a half million aliens are expected this year.

President Roosevelt in his message of December 2, 1902, said:

I again call your attention to the need of a proper immigration law covering the points outlined in my message to you at the first of the session of the present Congress; substantially such a bill has already passed the House.

House insurgency, which resulted in the overthrow of Speaker Cannon and the "old guard," was given impetus by legislative trickery over this very subject. Republican violation of party obligation in this connection was clearly and succinctly set forth by one well able to speak on that subject and who has always been a true friend of legislation involving the literacy or educational test. Here is what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] said on January 7, 1909, here on this floor:

Mr. GARDNER. I conceive, Mr. Chairman, that if the Republican national platform declares in favor of a particular proposition, and if the President of the United States, supposing that he is a Republican, includes the matter in a message, and if, in response, the Senate passes the legislation desired, then when the bill comes over to the House I should hold it to be a party question. That is sound, is it not? I hear no remarks to the contrary. That very situation arose in the spring of 1906. Yet I saw one of the Republican members of the Committee on Rules act as teller in opposition, and I saw the Speaker of the House pass at the head of the column between the tellers in opposition to the measure of which I speak With the recollection of that scene still fresh in my memory, I refuse to be alarmed at the cry of party disloyalty, and I await with eagerness a better definition than that which I have just given you as to what a party question may be. [Loud applause.]

The Republican platform he referred to read as follows:

For the protection of the quality of American citizenship and of wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

The Democratic platform of 1908 contained a similar plank.

The annual presidential message to which Mr. GARDNER referred was from President Roosevelt, in part as follows:

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure by a careful and not merely perfunctory educational test some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens. Both the educational and economic in a wise immigration law should be designed to protect and elevate the great body politic and social.

Here is what the Philadelphia Record (June 26, 1906) had to say about the Cannon stand-pat betrayal:

HOUSE LEADERS THROTTLE VOTE ON IMMIGRATION—CANNON CRACKS WHIP SHARPLY—SPEAKER SCURRIES ABOUT AISLES, THREATENING, CAJOLING, AND IMPORTUNING MEMBERS TO SUPPORT OF MACHINE PROGRAM—BILL RIPPED AND SLASHED—EDUCATIONAL TEST KILLED OUTRIGHT AND INCREASE IN HEAD TAX KNOCKED OUT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25.

By means of the most cowardly and discreditable tactics witnessed in the House in this generation, the immigration-restriction bill was brought up, considered, amended in ways that its friends say make it a mockery, and passed without a roll call or a chance for a roll call this afternoon.

The rule under which the bill was considered prohibited roll calls on amendments or on the bill.

* * * * * * *

CANNON CRACKS WHIP VIGOROUSLY.

The most bitterly opposed feature of the bill was that fixing an educational test for immigrants.

Feeling ran high during the debate, and when the vote came Speaker Cannon, who was most emphatically opposed to the educational test, moved about on the floor urging Members to aid in knocking it out.

On the rising vote, however, despite the personal appeals of the Speaker and his lieutenants, the substitute proposition for the appointment of a commission to investigate the immigration question was defeated, and the educational-test clause stood 136 to 123. Then there was demand for tellers, and the Speaker began to "ride herd" on the Republican Members in a way that has not been witnessed on the floor within the memory of the oldest observers.

He went around to Members who were holding back and urged them in vigorous language to go up and vote to knock out the educational clause and put in the commission provision, which he had drawn himself. When all the Members had passed between the tellers it was found these extraordinary tactics of the Speaker had won by the small margin of 11.

During the discussion the galleries were generally filled with representatives of labor and their friends.

* * * * * * *

GARDNER SEES A NEW LIGHT.

Mr. GARDNER, of Massachusetts, asked if a yea-and-nay vote would be permitted on the "educational test." He was informed by the Speaker that if the rule was adopted there could be no yea-and-nay vote, as the questions in issue would be settled in Committee of the Whole. Mr. GARDNER said it was a very bad rule, which excited considerable laughter, for until Mr. De Armond showed the sweeping character of the rule he had declared he was satisfied with the restrictions. He said that he had now a very different appreciation of statements made about the Capitol and the same statements embodied in a rule.

* * * * * * *

The New York World reported (June 26, 1906) the legislative procedure as follows:

LIFE SLASHED OUT OF BILL BY SPEAKER—MR. CANNON EXCITEDLY BUTTONHOLES MEMBERS AND TURNS VICTORY FOR EDUCATIONAL TEST INTO DEFEAT—HOW MR. CANNON DID IT.

He went to the Republican cloak rooms, "shooed" the Members there out and told them to pass between the tellers and vote in favor of the Grosvenor amendment. Then he went among the Members on the floor and excitedly urged them to vote for the amendment. In almost every case he was successful, and those he could not induce to vote for the amendment he persuaded to stay away and not vote at all.

MR. GARDNER SLIGHTED.

The Speaker appointed as conferees Messrs. Bennet of New York, Howell of New Jersey, and Ruppert of New York, leaving Mr. GARDNER, who had charge of the bill, off the committee entirely. The conferees named by the Speaker are all opposed to the educational test.

* * * * * * *

The Speaker's action in leaving Mr. GARDNER off the committee of conference was commented on by Members. GARDNER is credited with having forced the Speaker to permit the immigration bill to be considered by the House by threatening him with a Republican caucus.

IMMIGRATION COMMISSION MERELY DELAYED ISSUE.

The congressional Immigration Commission which was substituted, June 25, 1906, for the illiteracy test in the Senate immigration bill, by the Cannon organization to pretend to redeem party pledges, but in truth to get rid of the issue, merely caused delay. The commission was directed to investigate and report on the whole subject and particularly the feasibility of the illiteracy test. After an extended searching investigation at home and abroad the commission made a 42-volume report, of about 500 pages per volume, finding that "many undeniably undesirable persons enter this country every year"; that existing immigration laws are "weak and ineffectual"; that "there is a dangerous and apparently growing criminal element in the country due to immigration" (House Doc. No. 1489, pp. 29–31); and reported on pages 47–48 of volume 1:

The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in the basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in the industries of the country as a whole, and therefore demands legislation which will at the present time restrict the further admission of such unskilled labor.

* * * * * * *

The following methods of restricting immigration have been suggested:

(a) The exclusion of those unable to read or write in some language.

Other recommendations are made, but by a majority (8 out of 9) vote of the commission the reading and writing test is considered "the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration."

WOODROW WILSON, PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE, STATES HIS POSITION.

On September 4, 1912, according to press reports, Woodrow Wilson, Democratic nominee for the Presidency, said to the editors of the Association of Foreign Language Newspapers in New York City:

If we can hit upon a standard which admits every voluntary immigrant and excludes those who have not come of their own motion, with their own purpose of making a home and a career here for themselves, but have been induced by steamship companies or others in order to pay the passage money, then we will have what we will all agree upon as Americans. I am speaking to you as also Americans with myself, and just as much American as myself, and if we all take the American point of view, namely, that we want American life kept to its standards, and that only the standards of American life shall be standards of restriction, then we are all upon a common ground, not of those who criticize immigration, but those who declare themselves Americans. I am not saying that I am wise enough out of hand to frame the legislation that will meet this idea. I am only saying that it is the ideal, and that is what we ought to hold ourselves to. * * * Of course, if the immigrants are allowed to come in uninstructed hosts and to stop at the ports where they enter and there to compete in an oversupplied labor market, there is going to be unhappiness; there is going to be deterioration; there is going to be everything that will be detrimental to the immigrant.

It is true enough there is no detailed expression as to his position on the illiteracy test in this speech, but that was the subject all were considering, and the President signified that if elected he would stand for restriction that would maintain American standards. Surely the ability to read and write is one of the standards which we call American. A college president would not name less, or at least the people had a right to draw that conclusion.

The American Federation of Labor has taken great interest in this proposition, as the following report of President Gompers on national legislation for 1906 will show:

Labor has for years endeavored to secure the passage by Congress of a law restricting immigration. One of the effectual means to secure this was an educational test, and this was incorporated in the bill before the Fifty-ninth Congress, the United States Senate having adopted it in a bill which passed that body. It was clear that a majority of the Members of the House of Representatives were in favor of this bill, including the educational test, but Speaker Cannon not only used the vast power and influence of his office to defeat it, but he left the exalted position of Speaker, went upon the floor of the House, and made enough Members either go to the cloakrooms or go between the official tellers of the House and vote against the proposition. As a result of his high-handed action the educational test was defeated.

And the need for the working people taking an interest is well shown by the following letter:

[Edward Horvath Labor Agency, M. Engel, manager. Licensed and bonded. Telephone, Orchard 1039.]

124 EAST THIRD STREET,
New York City, October 4, 1913.

S. E. & H. L. SHEPERD CO.,
Rockport, Me.

GENTLEMEN: Foreign laborers are now available in this city for less wages than you can secure men for in your State.

Are you in need of any? If so, we can offer for immediate shipment any number of them of any desired nationality.

Trusting to hear from you, we are,

Very truly, yours,

M. ENGEL, Manager.

President Wilson was commended because labor believed he was right on this question and would use his power if elected to "maintain American standards" in the matter of the admission of immigrants. President Taft was condemned because it was believed that he would take the opposite view on this, as he had already done.

WHAT IS THE RESULT; WHAT IS PRESIDENT WILSON'S POSITION NOW.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], in his answer to my query, said:

I do not believe that President Wilson, after the declarations he made a few years ago in a book which he wrote, in criticizing the very class of people that would be kept out by the literacy test, will veto that bill, or has said to anybody that he would do so.

I have sincere regard for the gentleman, and I know he believed what he said. I do not know whether he would still say that he did not believe President Wilson is responsible for the holding up of this proposition; I could certainly not agree with him, to say the least of it. We passed the bill here in the House by a decisive majority months and months ago, but it is still slumbering on the Senate calendar and has been since the Senate committee reported it, March 19, to that body for consideration and a vote.

"Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise" may be a good rule to apply here, for if the gentleman is ignorant as to the facts, I have serious doubts that he would be profited any by wisdom on the subject. He has passed the bill here and has done his work well—to this we will all agree—but the public generally knows that President Wilson is sitting on the lid that covers the immigration bill that contains the illiteracy test.

Let us call some witnesses. First—

SENATOR SMITH, CHAIRMAN IMMIGRATION COMMITTEE.

Press reports of the South Carolina senatorial debate at Gaffney, S. C., July 3, state that Gov. Blease, who is opposing Senator E. D. SMITH for the United States Senate, again criticized Senator SMITH, chairman of the Senate Immigration Committee, for not having pushed the 60-page Burnett immigration bill, that passed the House February 4 and was reported to the Senate March 19, through the Senate, and that Senator E. D. SMITH reiterated his position toward immigration by declaring that despite the opposition of the President and party leaders to the bill he was determined, so far as was in his power as chairman of the Senate Immigration Committee, to do all he could to nail up the bars.

Gov. Blease is said to be some campaigner, and Senator SMITH is said to have urged that something be done toward the passage of this bill.

The New York Tribune of June 8, 1914, has a press dispatch concerning the immigration bill containing the following:

TRUST BILL USED TO BURY LITERACY TEST—WILSON AND DEMOCRATIC LEADERS EAGER TO DODGE ISSUE—ALIEN-BORN CITIZENS AND LABOR CONFLICT—TRADE-COMMISSION MEASURE MAY ENABLE PARTY TO DEFER DAY OF RECKONING.

WASHINGTON, June 7.

The fact that a religious controversy has been injected into the question makes it all the more dangerous politically. Members of Congress have been flooded with petitions and memorials urging them not to vote for the bill and to do their utmost to defeat it. * * *

The immigration question is one which the administration would much rather evade than solve. If the tolls controversy has cooled the ardor of Irish-American voters who have hitherto stood their ground in defending the administration, the literacy test will certainly have a similar chilling effect upon one or another important political element in the United States.

The Mercury Banner of March 27, 1914, published in Huntsville, Ala., Mr. BURNETT'S State, contains the following:

WILSON OPPOSED TO LITERACY TEST.

WASHINGTON, March 27.

It is understood that President Wilson is opposed to the literacy test in the Burnett immigration bill to such an extent that he has hinted at veto if this test was not removed before the bill reached the White House.

W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, had a conference with Senator E. D. SMITH, of the Senate Immigration Committee, and it is declared the Senator was informed of the President's objections, and that if the Executive approval was expected that the literacy test ought to be cut out of the bill.

Senator SMITH declared to-day that the literacy test would remain in the bill, and that he considered the measure as reported to the Senate the best immigration bill prepared in years, and believed that it would pass the Senate overwhelmingly. Senator SMITH declined to express an opinion as to whether the President would veto the bill.

Representative BURNETT is in Alabama engaged in his campaign.

Was the following, published in the Washington Post on February 17, 1914, merely so much guesswork? If so, how does it happen that so many are guessing alike?

WILSON TO VETO IT—HE DOOMS THE LITERACY TEST IN AN IMMIGRATION LAW—BUT CONGRESS GOES AHEAD—CHAIRMAN SMITH PREDICTS THAT BURNETT MEASURE WILL PASS—MEANTIME AMBASSADORS CUSANI, OF ITALY, AND CHINDA, OF JAPAN, MAKE PROTESTS—LATTER CONFERS WITH CONSULS, WHILE FORMER LAYS VIEWS BEFORE BRYAN—EUROPE AGAINST UNITED STATES DOCTORS AT PORTS OF EMBARKATION—EXCLUSION DROPPED.

President Wilson will veto the Burnett immigration bill if it comes to him for signature with the so-called literacy test contained in it. This became known from an authoritative quarter last night after Chairman SMITH, of the Senate Immigration Committee, had announced that the bill, virtually as it passed the House, including the literacy test, would be favorably reported to the Senate soon. Prospects are that the bill will pass the Senate as reported from the committee, but the measure never will become law, according to close friends of the President.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S BELIEF.

The President does not consider literacy a test of character, and believes some other means should be devised to prevent undesirable aliens from entering the United States. He told callers yesterday that he had given his view to the Senate committee, and had left it to them to make it public or not as they chose.

Another "guess" is found in the Boston Transcript of February 17, 1914:

WILL VETO LITERACY TEST—PRESIDENT REGARDS IT AS NO TEST OF CHARACTER—BELIEVES SOME OTHER WAY SHOULD BE DEVISED—THE BILL, HOWEVER, PROBABLY WILL BE PASSED.

WASHINGTON, February 17.

President Wilson will veto the Burnett immigration bill if it comes to him for signature with the so-called literacy test contained in it. Prospects are that the bill will pass the Senate as reported from the committee, but the measure never will become law, according to close friends of the President. The President does not consider literacy a test of character, and believes some other means should be devised to prevent undesirable aliens from entering the United States.

Several members of the committee said that the literacy test would remain in the bill, with a possibility of a slight modification of that part of it which would exempt from its application aliens who showed to the satisfaction of the proper authorities that they emigrated from a foreign country "solely for the purpose of escaping religious persecution."

The Italian ambassador objects to the feature of the bill which provides for medical inspection of immigrants aboard ship.

It is said that Representative PALMER, of Pennsylvania, in campaigning for the second place in the senatorial race with Senator PENROSE, is having tremendous trouble with this very issue, it being claimed that Mr. PALMER is such a powerful friend of the President that if he would try he could get him to forego his opposition. Gifford Pinchot, Progressive, for first place, is having no trouble whatever with the issue.

"The proof of the pudding" is said to be "the eating thereof," so we have only to observe that somebody is holding this bill up. If it is not the Senate committee, then who is it? If the President is for the bill, does anyone suppose he would continue silent so long while the bill is being done to death? If he did, would any friend of the bill justify his silence?

PROGRESSIVES FOR THE BILL.

The Progressives on this floor are still for the bill, as Chairman BURNETT stated that they were for it when the bill passed. I know of no better way to maintain American standards in the matter of immigration than to adopt the rule that adults who can not read or write in their own language can not be admitted to lower the standards of labor and citizenship.

FUR-SEAL SPECIMENS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 270, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to have taken specimens of the Pribilof Islands fur seal as specimens for the collections of the National Museum.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I should like to have the joint resolution read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to have taken for the collections of the United States National Museum a series of specimens of the Pribilof Islands fur seal, to properly illustrate the range of variation in both sexes at all ages, said collection not to exceed 30 specimens in number.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, at whose expense is this to be done, and why can it not now be done as the law stands?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It will be done at the expense of the Government. The Secretary of Commerce does not think he has the power to permit this to be done under existing law. Of course, there is a closed season in the Pribilof Islands—I believe for five years—during which only a certain number of seals may be killed, and for certain purposes named in the act. A bill has already passed the Senate—S. 150—in the same terms as the House joint resolution. The House joint resolution came to me from the Department of Commerce. I introduced it and had it referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and reported it back with a letter of the Secretary recommending its passage. He does not think he has the power under existing law to permit these seals to be caught.

Mr. MANN. How many fur-seal specimens are there now in the National Museum?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know. All the information I have is contained in the letter from Dr. Charles D. Walcott, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, who says:

I find that the Pribilof Islands fur seal is very poorly represented in the collections of the United States National Museum. The specimens are practically all defective, and it is highly desirable that this important mammal should be properly represented in the national collections.

In view of this, I am writing to ask if you think there will be an opportunity the coming summer to secure a series of skins and skulls prepared with the special needs of the museum in view. About 30 complete specimens selected to illustrate the range of variation in both sexes at all ages would form a series adequate for the scientific study of the species.

The National Museum now has one of the largest mammal collections in the world, and it is strange that there is not a good representation of one that is so valuable and of such importance to the American people as the fur seal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, I am curious to know how these specimens will be obtained after the authority to obtain them is given. Does this mean an expedition of some kind?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, no; they have the employees in the islands. These seals are being killed from time to time for food and under the provisions of the existing law; but no one is authorized to kill them and furnish skins to the Smithsonian Institution for this purpose. The Secretary of Commerce wants to have the authority from Congress to do it.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman does not think there will be any expense attached to this?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, no; I do not think so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington objects. The joint resolution will be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

PUBLIC LANDS CLAIMED BY DESERTED WIVES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16296) to provide for issuing of patents for public lands claimed under the homestead laws by deserted wives.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be reported, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any case in which persons have regularly initiated claims to public lands as settlers thereon under the provisions of the homestead laws and the wife of such homestead settler or entryman, while residing upon the homestead claim and prior to submission of final proof of residence, cultivation, and improvement as prescribed by law, has been abandoned and deserted by her husband for a period of more than one year, the deserted wife shall, upon establishing the fact of such abandonment or desertion to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, be entitled to submit proof upon such claim and obtain patent therefor in her name in the form, manner, and subject to the conditions prescribed in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof: Provided, That in such cases the wife shall be required to show residence upon, cultivation, and improvement of the homestead by herself for such time as when, added to the time during which her husband prior to desertion had complied with the law, would aggregate the full amount of residence, improvement, and cultivation required by law: And provided further, That the published and posted notices of intention to submit final proof in such cases shall recite the fact that the proof is to be offered and patent sought by applicant as a deserted wife, and a copy of the said notice shall be mailed to the last-known address of the husband of applicant.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 17, 18, and 19, strike out the words "and a copy of the said notice shall be mailed to the last-known address of the husband of applicant," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and, prior to its submission, notice thereof shall be served upon the husband of the applicant in such a manner and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe."

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] tell us how many of these cases he proposes to cover by this bill, and what is the particular need of it.

Mr. RAKER. The need for the bill has been suggested by the registrar and receiver of the Sacramento land office, and also from the Susanville land office, which is in northern California, and in the correspondence which came following the suggestion from the registrar and receiver of the land office at Sacramento, on the ground that when a homesteader's wife is abandoned she practically has no rights in the land. If she proves up under the rule, the patent goes to the husband, who may live in a nearby community, and who can take the land and sell it and deprive the wife of the whole of it.

Mr. MADDEN. He could not sell it without her consent, could he?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely; that has been done in a number of cases.

Mr. MADDEN. How could he do it? Does not she have to join in the deed?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

FUR-SEAL SPECIMENS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 194, relating to the specimens of Pribilof Island fur seals, in order that I may change my objection and ask unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 194. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is not there a Senate resolution on this same subject?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is.

Mr. MANN. Is it on the calendar?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is on the calendar, but not on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. It can be placed there.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Washington is going to ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN COCONINO COUNTY, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15907) authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 5316, identical with this, on the Speaker's table, be substituted for this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to substitute for this bill the bill S. 5316. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let the Senate bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill S. 5316, as follows:

An act (S. 5316) authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause each occupied and improved legal subdivision in sections 17, 19, 20, 21, 28, 29, and 30 in township No. 41 north, of range 2 west, Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, to be surveyed and platted into town lots and necessary public reserves, and into agricultural tracts of not exceeding 20 acres, and into dam and reservoir sites where used for such purposes, following the lines of occupation in each case where occupied as near as may be, and delineating on the plat all irrigating ditches and canals.

SEC. 2. That the town lots shall be appraised without considering the value of any improvements thereon, and any person, or his successors in interest, who prior to January 1, 1914, were in the actual occupation of one or more of such lots in good faith for town-site purposes, with substantial and permanent improvements upon each lot and have maintained such occupation and improvements to date of application, upon the filing of an application therefor within six months from the date of the approval of the appraisement herein provided for, shall be entitled to a patent for the same upon paying the appraised price therefor. All such lots not covered by valid applications at the expiration of said six months shall thereafter be offered at public sale to the highest bidder, and the lots not so disposed of shall thereupon be subject to private entry; but no lot shall be sold at public sale or private entry at less than the appraised price.

SEC. 3. That any person, or his successors in interest, who prior to January 1, 1914, were in the actual occupancy of and improving one or more of said tracts for agricultural purposes, not exceeding in all 20 acres, and have maintained the same in good faith for said purposes, upon the filing of an application to enter the same within six months from the filing of the plat of said survey in the local land office, shall be entitled to a patent for such tract or tracts upon paying the sum of $1.25 per acre therefor. All such tracts not covered by valid applications at the expiration of said six months shall thereafter be subject to cash entry upon payment of $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 4. That the dam and reservoir tracts are hereby reserved for the use of said community for the purpose of irrigation and water supply, and patent therefor shall issue to the municipality when organized upon payment of $1.25 per acre therefor. Patents to the public reserves in the town site may be issued to the municipality when organized. Any easements maintained by authority and for use of the United States are hereby reserved, and said survey shall show all such easements, and the patents to all lands affected thereby shall contain a reservation of the easement to the United States.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to survey, plat, and patent such lots, agricultural tracts, and townsite reservations, which may be situated upon the west half of the southwest quarter of section 16, in township No. 41 north, of range 2 west, Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, upon the same terms and conditions as prescribed in sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 hereof should the title to said west half of the southwest quarter be found vested in the United States or revert thereto.

SEC. 6. That the expenses incident to the survey, appraisement, and sale, herein required to be made, shall be paid out of any fund appropriated for the survey of the public lands at the time available. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue proper regulations for the administration of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, this bill seems to be intended to cure a curious and unusual situation. I notice the report does not enlighten us very much in regard to it. I should like to have the gentleman from Arizona inform us as to the conditions which make this legislation necessary. In the first place, have the lands been surveyed? They are described as sections and parts of sections.

Mr. HAYDEN. The township has been surveyed, but not each of the tracts of land.

Mr. MONDELL. The ordinary rectangular surveys have been extended over the area?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; in July and August, 1911.

Mr. MONDELL. And the lands are occupied, and have been for a considerable length of time, by various people and under what sort of a claim of right?

Mr. HAYDEN. It was unsurveyed public domain when the settlement was made 30 years ago. The land is on the north side of the Grand Canyon in a very inaccessible part of my State.

Mr. MONDELL. The lands, part of the time at least, have been subject to entry, except for the fact that they were not surveyed?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore the right of a homestead settler attached. Does the gentleman understand that there are no settlers on the tract who will insist on their full right as homestead settlers?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is the desire of each one to acquire title to the small tract of land he has heretofore occupied—something like 15 or 20 acres. If permitted to enter under the homestead law, one settler could locate a whole quarter section. If he did so, his entry would cover areas now occupied by his neighbors. No one wishes to do that.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands that if any people living on the land should elect to assert their rights as homestead settlers, having a homestead right, that they can claim their full rights, notwithstanding the passage of this act. Are there any persons who are likely to do that?

Mr. HAYDEN. I anticipate no trouble about this matter whatever.

Mr. MONDELL. How did it happen in this particular locality that people went on the land as homestead settlers and only occupied such small areas?

Mr. HAYDEN. A small colony settled there, and when the colonists located on these lands each one took but a small area. It is in an isolated place, way out of the world, on the north side of the Grand Canyon.

Mr. MONDELL. The people came there practically altogether as a colony and divided the land up among themselves, built their own reservoir and their ditches, and made their land allotments?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. So the gentleman understands that there will be no one who will claim or demand full rights under the law of homestead settlement.

Mr. HAYDEN. I anticipate no such difficulty.

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what about the surplus land provided for in this bill? As I read it, the bill discloses that a certain part of the tract is to be surveyed and sold. As I understand, that is not now occupied?

Mr. HAYDEN. This land is on a small creek. A part of it is irrigable and a part of it is not. The agricultural lands now occupied lie along the creek bottom. If somebody wanted to buy a piece of the rough land near his entry after it was surveyed, he should have an opportunity to pay the Government for it.

Mr. MURDOCK. How extensive will this survey be?

Mr. HAYDEN. The whole area mentioned in the bill covers portions of eight sections of land.

Mr. MURDOCK. How much of that is now occupied?

Mr. HAYDEN. I doubt if much more than a thousand acres out of the whole area are under cultivation.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain to the House why this settlement took place as early as it did?

Mr. HAYDEN. This little valley was discovered in northern Arizona, and people settled there, as they did in other parts of the State, long before any public-land survey was ever made. To get from my home in Arizona to this place one has to go through California, Nevada, and Utah. This part of Arizona has been very much neglected by the Government in the past.

Mr. MURDOCK. The average holding the gentleman says is something like 15 or 20 acres?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; and the maximum holding under this bill is 20 acres.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving again the right to object for a moment, I intended to ask the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] in regard to the small tract, the west half of the southwest quarter of section 16, referred to in section 5 of the bill. Is that a tract to which there is at this time asserted some sort of a private claim?

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand there is some dispute as to whether it is in an Indian reservation or not. I am not positive about this, however.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the objection to some one of these people taking title to this land and reconveying it to the other people in the same community under the law we have now in force?

Mr. HAYDEN. The land has been occupied for the past 30 years, and a man naturally would prefer to get title from the United States Government to the tract on which he is residing.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to make this suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE]. I think the plan he suggests might be accomplished, providing everybody was agreeable. There are two difficulties in the way, however. One is that if these people have divided up their lands and each has occupied a small area and anyone protests against one individual securing title to the entire tract he could be made serious trouble because of a provision of law under which land notoriously occupied at the time claim is asserted can not be taken as a homestead. If these are colonists who came in there with the intent of taking small areas, they probably would do just what the gentleman suggests on their own motion if no other provision were made, but this occurs to me to be the very best plan of procedure. The Government itself makes the division among these people that have already settled there and gives them the title, and that obviates the necessity for a division among themselves, and then there is no question but that each settler will get the land which he claims and has occupied and has helped to improve.

Mr. MURDOCK. Have the settlers previously made any attempt along this line?

Mr. HAYDEN. They have been continuously asking for a survey, and for an opportunity to get title. Not long ago an inspector was sent out by the Department of the Interior who went on the ground and examined the situation. This bill was prepared in the department and sent to us with a favorable recommendation by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has there been a similar bill in previous Congresses?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; this is the first attempt to pass legislation for the benefit of these settlers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House bill (H. R. 15907) authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

PUBLIC LANDS CLAIMED BY DESERTED WIVES.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 16296) to provide for issuing of patents for public lands claimed under the homestead laws by deserted wives. The gentleman who objected a moment ago has gone into the report and, I understand, has no objection to the bill being considered now.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I hope that there will be no objection to that request. The bill is full of merit and helps out a whole lot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to the bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, H. R. 16296, Calendar No. 195. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the request that the bill be reinstated on the calendar and that it keep its place; but after a bill has been objected to in the House I do not think that later in the day we ought to return to it and pass the bill, because some gentlemen who are interested in it may have gone out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, he does not object.

Mr. MANN. I will object, without wasting any time, unless the gentleman consents to that modification.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from California always hopes for something that ought not to be done.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman modify his request?

Mr. RAKER. I will modify my request to that extent.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 16296 be restored to the calendar and be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. JOHN RIVER AT FORT KENT, ME.

The business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16579) to authorize the construction of a bridge across St. John River at Fort Kent, Me.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the construction, maintenance, and operation by the State of Maine and the Dominion of Canada jointly of a highway bridge across the St. John River between Fort Kent village, corporation in Fort Kent, Me., in the county of Aroostook and State of Maine, and the parish of St. Francis, in the county of Madawaska and Province of New Brunswick. Said bridge shall be constructed in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced until the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada for the erection and construction of the structure shall have been obtained.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "highway"; page 1, line 6, after the word "river," insert the words "at a point sutiable to the interests of navigation"; page 1, line 9, strike out the words "St. Francis, in the" and insert the word "Clair, also commonly known as the parish of St. Francis, in the."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SABINE RIVER, IN THE STATES OF LOUISIANA AND TEXAS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16350) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River, in the States of Louisiana and Texas, about 2 miles west of Hunter, La.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Frost-Johnson Lumber Co., a corporation, with domicile at Shreveport, La., be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge of a temporary nature across the Sabine River, between Louisiana and Texas, at a point about 2 miles west of Hunter, La., suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "a corporation, with domicile at Shreveport, La.," and insert "when authorized by the State of Louisiana."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a Senate bill identical in terms, and I ask that it be considered in lieu of the House bill if there is no objection to such consideration.

The SPEAKER. What is the number?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is Calendar 261, Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I ask that the House bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 5957 be considered in lieu of the bill just read by the Clerk. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice an innovation in the report of the House bill which, frankly speaking, does not appeal to me.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think that is in the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not in the Senate bill; but as it is in several other House bills, I desire to get some information now. I suppose that some time or other it happened in the absence of a portion of the Members, and somebody was not feeling good that they inserted the language "when authorized by the State of Louisiana."

Mr. ADAMSON. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the matter has been the subject of conversation between the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and myself, and that the committee has had this idea in view, that we ought not to fritter away the time of the Congress and of the country in granting consent without some assured basis of a business certainty; we ought to leave it to the States to do so; but on further reflection we have concluded that that is really a matter of supererogation.

Mr. MANN. The States now have that authority?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; they have; of course we could not give it to them, but we do not care to be granting consent to any unauthorized person; but on reflection we have concluded if they are unauthorized they will not build the bridge, and that the worst that could happen would be the lapse of the consent, and they would have to start over again, so we are not insisting on that language in any of the bills.

Mr. MANN. I notice this bill is for a temporary bridge. While it probably is not important, it leaves out the language "and operate."

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, it is only for the convenience temporarily of a lumber interest there to get rid of the output of the sawmill, which they can not do without crossing the river.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that it is necessary for us to say we give permission to that company to operate a bridge, but that is the usual language.

Mr. ADAMSON. If that word is not in the Senate bill, I ask unanimous consent to insert it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia to consider Senate bill 5957 in lieu of the bill just reported by the Clerk? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5957) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River, in the States of Louisiana and Texas, about 2 miles west of Hunter, La.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Frost-Johnson Lumber Co., a corporation, with domicile at Shreveport, La., be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge of a temporary nature across the Sabine River, between Louisiana and Texas, at a point about 2 miles west of Hunter, La., suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Now, I suggest to the gentleman that in line 5 we strike out the word "and" before the word "maintain," and insert, after the word "maintain," the words "and operate."

Mr. ADAMSON. That is necessary, after inserting the word "operate," to make good grammar, and we would not be guilty of anything else.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "construct," strike out the word "and," and after the word "maintain" insert the words "and operate."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the title ought to be amended.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course.

Mr. MANN. The title is the same, "To authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River, in the States of Louisiana and Texas, about 2 miles west of Hunter, La." When one starts looking up the index for this he will look under the name of Frost-Johnson Lumber Co., and they will not find it. The bill ought to read, "A bill to authorize the Frost-Johnson Lumber Co. to construct a bridge, etc."

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no copy of the Senate bill before me, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois for calling my attention to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Frost-Johnson Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the Sabine River, in the States of Louisiana and Texas, about 2 miles west of Hunter, La."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a similar House bill was ordered to lie on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16172) to give the consent of the Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near New Orleans, La.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby granted to Elmer E. Corthell and Arthur McGuirk, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the city of New Orleans, La., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, strike out the initial "E" and insert the word "Lawrence."

Page 1, line 4, after the word "McGuirk," insert the words "when authorized by the State of Louisiana."

Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "at or near" and insert the words "near and above."

Page 2, insert a new section, after line 20, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the time of the commencement of the construction of said bridge shall be within two years, and said bridge shall be completed within five years from the date of the passage of this act."

Change section number in line 7 from "section 2" to "section 3."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what information the committee had in reference to this bill, or if it had any, for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River? While most bridge bills go through as a matter of course, when the department has reported that they will not obstruct navigation, that has not been the practice concerning bridges across the Mississippi River. Here there is no location fixed.

Mr. ADAMSON. The only limitation the department wanted to place on the location was above instead of below the city, because the magnitude of the ocean-going commerce was below the city, and the time was extended expressly on account of the magnitude of the proposition. As to the particular local reasons, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. I would be glad to supply such information as the gentleman from Illinois may want.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to supply it in order to get unanimous consent. Here is a bill to grant to two individuals, unknown, the right to build a bridge across the Mississippi River which everybody knows can not be built by individuals, but must be built by a corporation, if at all.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does not the gentleman know Col. Corthell, one of the gentlemen mentioned in this bill?

Mr. MANN. I have not the pleasure of knowing him.

Mr. DUPRÉ. He was associated with Eads in the construction of the jetties, and subsequently went to the Argentine Republic, where he was engaged in large engineering projects. I think he lived for some time in the city of Chicago.

Mr. MANN. That does not make him immaculate.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I will say that the proposed location of the bridge is at what is known as Nine Mile Point, above the city of New Orleans.

Mr. MANN. What is this bridge for, and who is going to finance it, and who is going to own it?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am not prepared to inform the gentleman as to how this project is to be financed. I assume that would depend on these gentlemen. I do not think they have the money in their pocket. They probably will form a corporation and issue bonds, and proceed in the usual way to raise funds.

Mr. MANN. Then, it is a pure promoters' speculation?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not think so. It certainly is not so on my part.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the gentleman's part.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I know both of these gentlemen. Mr. McGuirk lives in the city of New Orleans, and is a man of repute there. There have been a number of indorsements of a bridge bill of this character.

Mr. MANN. Well, my observation and experience here tell me that very often the passage of a bill like this prevents a real bridge being constructed.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit, I called attention to the fact that we had had several schemes before us for about 20 years, and we did not care to pass a speculative one; but we were assured that these gentlemen meant business; that a bridge was badly needed in that neighborhood across the Mississippi River, and they could not finance the matter until they knew they could get the consent of Congress; but if that were granted, they could finance the scheme and start a bridge, if we would allow them two years in which to start it.

I have every reason to believe the gentlemen were talking in good faith, and under the same reasoning that the gentleman and I pursued in eliminating those words "authorized by the State," we decided we could not lose much by giving them a trial on the face of their statement.

Mr. MANN. Of course no one would question the good faith of our friend from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ]. That goes without saying in this House; but here is a proposition to give a speculative grant to a couple of gentlemen, extending the time beyond what is usually permitted for the commencement of the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River. We have a lot of these propositions floating up and down the Mississippi River, from one end to the other. I do not know whether they want to build a bridge or whether they merely want to prevent somebody else from building a bridge. But until we have more information I shall not give consent.

Mr. ADAMSON. Do you want the bill to remain on the calendar?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I make the request that the bill be passed without prejudice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ADAMSON. Perhaps the gentleman from Louisiana can get the evidence to satisfy the gentleman of the bona fide nature of the proposition.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FORT BRIDGER MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 92) to extend the general land laws to the former Fort Bridger Military Reservation in Wyoming.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands on the former Fort Bridger Military Reservation in Wyoming are hereby made subject to appropriate entry under the land laws of the United States.

The following committee amendment was read:

At the end of the bill add the following proviso: "Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to provide any refundment of moneys heretofore paid for lands in the said reservation or to relieve entrymen from payments due or to become due on entries heretofore made."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would be very glad to have the gentleman from California [Mr. CHURCH], who made the report, explain this bill.

Mr. CHURCH. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who is the author of the bill, to answer questions concerning it.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to have the report read?

Mr. MANN. I have read the report, I will say to the gentleman, several times.

Mr. MONDELL. It is complete, and covers the case very fully.

Mr. MANN. I thought the report was fairly complete and showed reasons why the bill ought not to pass. I did not know but the gentleman might have some other information which would lead me to change my mind.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily, but what particular point did the gentleman refer to? If the gentleman would give me an idea of the objections he has to the bill, I would discuss those instead of discussing the general field of legislation.

I will say to the gentleman that old Fort Bridger is one of the oldest forts in the Rocky Mountain country. As the gentleman knows, it was established away back yonder in the old overland trail times, and the reservation included a large area of the ordinary greasewood and sagebrush land. There was a small tract around the post in a little valley that was of some little agricultural value, and after the post had been abandoned for quite a number of years provision was made under which the larger area was opened to homestead settlement without payment under the ordinary terms, and a smaller area was opened to homestead entry at the appraised price, which was $2.50 an acre, except this land upon which the post buildings were located.

It is 24 years since the larger tract was opened to homestead settlement, and 19 years since the smaller tract was opened. Since that time all but 2,000 acres of the 10,000-acre tract have been entered. I think of the larger tract about 10,000 acres have been entered in all, leaving about 3,000 acres. The lands are differently situated from the great extent of public land that lies around it, and all we propose to do is to put it in the same position relative to the public-land laws as the other lands are in.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, this land is now open to homestead entry—the small tract of 2,000 acres or so which comes within the provisions of the railroad-grant act, where we are required to receive $2.50. It is not worth very much.

Mr. MONDELL. Of that 2,000 acres remaining, I saw the tract a couple of years ago. What is left is pretty rough, broken land, and rather rocky and gravelly.

Mr. MANN. There would be no hardship, then, if the Government retained title for a little while in itself, because there is a lot of other land in Wyoming of equal value that has not been taken up?

Mr. MONDELL. Except that there is no real good reason why the Government should retain it. As a matter of fact, it is in the interest of development to have those lands added gradually to the surrounding farms. That is the usual procedure. In other words, the fact that 65 years ago there was at Fort Bridger a military post on the old overland trail is no reason why the lands that happened to be left in that locality should be in any different status than the lands of the same kind in the country all around.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not see any necessity or reason for the passage of this bill. Here is a very large amount of area which can now be taken. This is a small tract of a couple of thousand acres where, in order to get the land, they have to pay $2.50 an acre. If one prefers to take the land outside they can do it, and if they prefer to pay $2.50 an acre they can get this land.

Mr. MONDELL. I merely call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the land outside can be taken only under the homestead law. The desert-land law does not apply. The isolated-tract law does not apply. The mineral laws do not apply.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the mineral laws apply anywhere.

Mr. MONDELL. In this case the mineral laws do not apply to this tract. If you were to find a mine on this tract, you could not enter it under the mineral law.

Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman: This legislation is following the procedure we followed in practically every one of these cases of disposing of a large area around an old military reservation which was a large reservation in the first instance. We ordinarily open those to homestead settlement only—the unimportant parts and parts of no value—in order to give the homesteader the first chance. He has had the first chance for 24 years. But generally within 6 or 8 years after the first opening we apply the general land laws. In this case we delayed in applying the usual land laws.

Mr. MANN. Generally there is a large tract involved.

Mr. MONDELL. There are 209,000 acres here.

Mr. MANN. This bill applies to only about 2,000 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill applies to the entire reservation of 209,000 acres.

Mr. MANN. They may get that now by homestead entry.

Mr. MONDELL. They can not make a desert entry or a timber entry or a mineral entry, and they can not get it under the isolated-tract law. If there is any reason on earth why these lands should remain in a restricted condition, then all the public domain ought to remain in the same way. There is no more reason why these lands should remain in a restricted condition than that all the other lands around them should remain in that condition. It is simply following the ordinary rule of allowing the general land laws eventually to control.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall object, unless the gentleman wants to ask to have it passed over.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, rather than have it objected to, I will ask to have it passed over, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RESTORATION OF HOMESTEAD RIGHTS IN CERTAIN CASES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15983) to restore homestead rights in certain cases.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has heretofore made homestead entry of lands embraced in a ceded Indian reservation, and who, in completion of the entry, has paid or shall have paid the purchase price fixed thereon as compensation for the benefit of the Indians, shall be entitled to the benefits of the homestead laws just as though such prior entry had not been made, if otherwise qualified: Provided, That the right of commutation of entries under this act shall not be permitted.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "fixed thereon as compensation for the benefit of the Indians" and insert "provided in the law opening the land to settlement."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FERRIS. What particular phase of it does the gentleman object to?

Mr. MANN. All of it. There is nothing in it that I like.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, will the gentleman hear me a moment? Perhaps, then, the gentleman will feel different about it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a vast fund of information on these subjects.

Mr. FERRIS. I thank the gentleman for that compliment. I feel that I do have a little information on this particular subject. These are the lands ceded in one territory or another by the Indians for opening to settlement by the white people, and the opening is usually carried on by the General Government. The practice has in my State become universal and in North and South Dakota and other States where they value by appraisement they sell the lands for a fixed price and the homestead settlers pay all that the land is worth, and oftentimes more than it is worth.

Congress has usually loaded into the act that opened up such land to settlement a provision exacting of the purchaser not only that he pay for the land, but that he homestead the land as well. I am afraid I will not be able to convert the gentleman if he does not hear me.

Mr. MANN. I have heard every word the gentleman has said.

Mr. FERRIS. My bill merely gives to those homesteaders who have paid the price fixed in the law or the price fixed by competitive bid the right to take again.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it the gentleman goes on the theory that a man who has had the advantage given to him of getting a choice piece of property on one of these Indian reservations opened up by the Government may thereafter claim a homestead right in addition.

Mr. FERRIS. No; the gentleman does not get it quite right.

Mr. MANN. I may not include all of it, but to the extent to which I go do I not state it correctly?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman states some truth and some misconception. Let me state the facts. In three or four counties of my district the Kiowas and Comanches ceded under the treaty of 1900 their entire reservation to the Government. Through Judge Witton the Land Office auctioned off the land.

Mr. MANN. A lottery, not an auction at all.

Mr. FERRIS. It was to the highest bidder. The land sold at an average price of $10.54 an acre for the entire 505,000 acres of land, some high, dry, arid, mesquite land. That is between $1,600 and $2,000 a quarter section. Now, a man gets a quarter section of bald, naked, prairie land, without a stick of stove wood on it, without a fence post, a brickbat, or anything on it. The homesteader goes upon that land, and he has to get some lumber and fence posts, he has to dig a well and build a cyclone cellar and a shanty, and live on the land and plant a little sod crop, and exist along for two or three years. In many cases he can not make his payments, and he loses his land altogether. In most other cases the moment he proves up he puts a mortgage on the land for every cent he can get on it.

Mr. MANN. Those who lost out do not get anything out of this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes; they do. Those who mortgaged their land, take the money and make the required payments, and they hang along a year or two longer with the little frail equity that they have, and then they have to sell out, leaving all behind them.

My point is that where a man pays the full value of the land and the Indians get the money or the Government gets the money, as the case may be, and in addition that man has imposed upon him the provisions of the homestead law, and he has complied with it and made his payments, I think that should not exhaust his homestead rights.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman a question: How many people were at this opening to which the gentleman referred who made bids but did not receive any allotments of the land?

Mr. FERRIS. Thousands of them.

Mr. MANN. Many times the number of those who did receive allotments?

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is true.

Mr. MANN. And they thought the ones who received the allotments were receiving a grace from the Government.

Mr. FERRIS. They thought so.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman another question: At these Indian reservation openings, where they draw lots for first choice, and the man who gets first choice secures 160 acres, worth $20 or $30 an acre, when he pays for that land he may make another homestead entry, may he not?

Mr. FERRIS. If he has made his payments and complied with the homestead requirements. There are very few of them.

Mr. MANN. Many are called, but few are chosen.

Mr. FERRIS. Very true.

Mr. MANN. The ones who got the benefit of the Government gratuity to a large extent are the ones who want something more. Now, thousands of people from our cities tried to get in on these allotments, but failed. They are still working to help support the Government, while those who got the land want another chance.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that on June 5, 1900, Congress passed an act restoring homestead rights to the people who paid nothing for the land. On May 22, 1902, Congress passed another act restoring rights to those who had paid nothing for their land. On May 17, 1906, Congress passed another act restoring homestead rights to those who had paid nothing for the land. Now, in Dakota they paid a fixed price of about $6 an acre for one class of land, $4 for another class, and $2.50 for another class. In Oklahoma we had only one class, and in some instances the amounts paid ran up as high as $25 or $30 an acre. They bought it during boom days, and many of them could not get their money back to-day if they tried. The gentleman will recall that I have had to come in almost on my hands and knees to get extensions at one time and another.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has never come on his hands and knees. He has always come in like a roaring lion and has carried away what he wanted.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman does me too much honor. I have come in in sackcloth and ashes, and the gentleman has allowed me to have the necessary extensions, and there are a few of them in store for us yet.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has always gotten what he wanted.

Mr. FERRIS. The House has always been most generous to these people; but I think the men in my State and in Nebraska and in North and South Dakota, who have struggled along and paid the price for this land, ought to have the right to take again; and I believe it is only common equity and justice that they be allowed to do so.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman whether these people have any greater moral right to take homestead entries than the people who did not get the chance to get something, as these people did?

Mr. FERRIS. The answer to that is simply this: When every opening of land comes there is a great boom, and many come and go in. Nearly all the first settlers are forced out or go away. The lands are switched back and forth. Some are disappointed and do not get any land at all, and some who do not get the land are the more fortunate.

Mr. MANN. I know that some of the land they get is a liability instead of an asset, but people sometimes get excited.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I would like to state that it seems to me that these people are in the position of having bought private land.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that is not so; it is public land.

Mr. KENT. They bought and paid for the land.

Mr. MANN. The homesteader may commute his homestead entry and buy the land, but that does not make any difference.

Mr. KENT. I do not approve of this land game, anyway. These people are in the same position as though they bought the land.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if he will not consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice? I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXPATRIATION OF CITIZENS AND THEIR PROTECTION ABROAD.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1091) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," approved March 2, 1907.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," approved March 2, 1907, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Any American woman who marries a foreigner and removes from the jurisdiction of the United States, with intent to permanently reside abroad, shall take the nationality of her husband. At the termination of the marital relation she may resume her American citizenship, if abroad, by registering as an American citizen within one year with a consul of the United States, or by returning to reside in the United States, or, if residing in the United States at the termination of the marital relation, by continuing to reside therein."

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Strike out the following language, on page 2, after the words "United States": "or, if residing in the United States at the termination of the marital relation, by continuing to reside therein."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he has any objection to this going over to the next meeting?

Mr. HARRISON. I would not like to lose the place on the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. I have no objection to its retaining its place on the calendar. I just received yesterday morning the record and transcript of some matters in relation to this legislation, and I feel that it is my duty to go into it. I do not like to object at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. This matter has been up for three years, and the gentleman comes from one of the States most vitally interested in it.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, not at all; the State of California does not stand for the repeal or change of the law that has been on the statute books since 1907. I would rather not go into the matter this morning. It covers a case where an Englishman came to the country and married an American citizen. He has evidenced no intention to become a citizen or to come under the laws of the United States while he remains here; and that being the case, until I get some other information on the matter I believe it ought to be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say that the Foreign Affairs Committee thought that this bill ought to be passed because it would be in the interest of those States that were in such a condition as California with respect to women who vote and hold property.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. I am giving the gentleman what the ideas of the committee are and the reason that they reported the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Let me ask the gentleman, Upon your investigation how many did you find that were involved in this condition?

Mr. HARRISON. We did not get any definite figures, but I think a Member from California came before the committee and said that there were thousands, and there were other people who appeared and said that there were a great number. The committee thought that there were probably quite a number, but whether there were any or many we thought that the condition ought to be remedied.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I will say that we got our information from a gentleman from California, who seemed to be very familiar with the matter.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call attention to the fact that it could not be thousands or hardly ten, because where an American woman marries an alien who does not think enough of this country to obtain his first papers, or second papers, or make any effort at all to become a citizen, certainly we ought not to overturn the rule that has been adopted by this country and by foreign countries on this subject and complicate the question of international relations. The department reports adversely to the bill. This matter was gone into by Congress when the act of 1907 was passed. A report was made of some 560 pages showing the condition that obtained then, and after the report was made Congress passed the act of 1907 so as to clarify the matter and put this country on the same basis as foreign countries relative to the expatriation of the wife. I hope the gentleman will let it go over and retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman from California is he opposed to this legislation?

Mr. RAKER. I want to fully look into the matter first. I do not want to take the time to go into that matter now. I do not think we have the time to consider it. If I gave unanimous consent I would not be in a position to go into the merits of the matter. I want to say here and now that no man stands stronger, or has for years been a stronger advocate of the right for women to vote than myself, giving them the right to vote, having a committee appointed by this House for investigation, and for the Congress of the United States to pass a constitutional amendment on that question. But this is entirely foreign, entirely distinct, entirely separate from that matter, putting a wife under the United States Government who marries one who is subject to a foreign country. There is no provision made in regard to the children born from such a marriage, one native and the other foreign, but after the marriage they are put under two distinct Governments.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish the House to understand that he is in favor of taking the citizenship away from a woman who marries a foreigner who lives in this country?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am distinctly in favor of the law as it stands to-day, recognized by England and Germany and the United States, and by the wisdom of the people in this country, that there should not be two countries to which a party may owe allegiance.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman favors taking the right of citizenship from any American girl——

Mr. RAKER. I do not.

Mr. MADDEN. Who happens to marry a man of foreign birth?

Mr. RAKER. I do not. I believe in this, that when an American girl citizen, with the facts before her, marries an alien who will not take the trouble to take out his first papers, who will not take the trouble to become familiar with our laws and institutions, who does not love them, who does not have enough regard for this country to become a citizen of it—that then she must stand in the same relation as her husband does under the law.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I wonder if the gentleman knows that under existing law the woman who marries a foreigner who has expressed his intention to become an American citizen and reside in this country with his wife forfeits her citizenship. If the gentleman wants to fight that proposition, let him go to it.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from California is somewhat prepared upon this subject, holding in his hand the entire record in the case of McKenzie against Hair, decided by the Supreme Court of the State of California on August 5, 1913, but would like to have it go over for further consideration. The court has gone into the subject fully, showing the law, the facts, and the reasons for the law. The gentleman from California has read the report upon this subject where the Department of State says that the enactment of such a law would be detrimental to this country. I am not fighting any proposition, but want further time for consideration, and all gentlemen should have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will not yield to any at present. I will yield in a second. I appreciate fully the distinction in respect to the right of a woman to vote, and no one has stood longer or better than I for that in season and out of season, but I do recognize a distinction in respect to a woman who is willing to forsake her country under the law, which she knows, and to marry one who is subject to a foreign country, who owes allegiance to a foreign country, about which there can be no question on earth——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he believes where an alien has declared his intention to become a citizen, a woman forsakes her country in marrying that alien who has declared such intention?

Mr. RAKER. I believe that when a man has declared his intention to become a citizen, he has certain rights, and if carried out they will become operative.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the gentleman would deprive the woman of her citizenship until that time?

Mr. RAKER. I am not in favor of denying a woman her full rights under the law. There has been much said in this country and much is being said to-day about our American girls marrying titled foreigners and sending their money abroad, and their children, and so far as I am concerned, I am willing to-day——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman want to let it go over until next unanimous-consent day?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HANOVER, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12464) providing for the expenditure of part of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000, made by the urgent deficiency bill of October 22, 1913, for the completion of the post-office building at Hanover, Pa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $10,000 made by the urgent deficiency act of October 22, 1913, for the completion of the post-office building at Hanover, Pa., as he may deem proper for enlarging the site of said building, for incidental grading in connection with such enlarged site, and for miscellaneous items necessary in connection with the completion of said building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand we made a deficiency appropriation of $10,000 for this building?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And finding there was a little left over, they want to grab it?

Mr. LOGUE. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. What do they want? Is not that the fact?

Mr. LOGUE. No.

Mr. MANN. We made a deficiency appropriation for a certain purpose in connection with this building. The amount that was paid out of that deficiency appropriation was a little over $7,000, leaving something over $2,000 unexpended, and seeing it there you want to spend it.

Mr. LOGUE. Oh, no. The facts are the other way.

Mr. MANN. If they do not want to spend it, we will keep it.

Mr. LOGUE. True, it is to be expended, but to be expended in the extension of the site which the Treasury Department considered——

Mr. MANN. But that was not contemplated in the deficiency appropriation.

Mr. LOGUE. No; but inasmuch as the economy is incident to the construction of the building and enables the Government not only to have a completed building, but an enlarged site, without the expenditure of any further money——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman must not say that, because we have to spend it if we buy the land.

Mr. LOGUE (continuing). Than that which has heretofore been appropriated—the gentleman did not permit me to complete the sentence—and in the view of the department it is considered wise and proper that the acquisition of the adjacent piece of land should be had at this time. Several bills have been introduced covering this, one during the last session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Here was the situation. We made provision for a post-office building at this place—Hanover, Pa.—within a certain limit of cost, and in the course of time we appropriated the balance of that limit of cost, I suppose, a deficiency appropriation of $10,000. And the people either there or elsewhere assume that it would be criminal to save any money. The moment they have done that which we intended to have been done and they have a little money left there, they see that there and they think they ought to have a right to have it. Now, if it is a meritorious proposition, let the gentleman bring in a bill to appropriate the money and it will be considered on its merits. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who now has the floor, seems to think, why, this is just taking money already appropriated; it does not cost anything.

Mr. LOGUE. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. MANN. When the fact is this is just exactly a new appropriation.

Mr. LOGUE. The Treasury Department has called the attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the fact that the piece of ground adjacent to the present building will more than likely be needed, that this is a new and unimproved piece of ground, and that the present owner contemplates making improvements upon it.

Mr. MANN. If all that information is correct, and I do not deny or doubt it, it ought to have been included in the report with a statement from the proper authorities giving the correct information.

Mr. LOGUE. I admit, sir, that was an oversight; that this letter should have been embodied; that it would have been self-speaking and self-convincing as to the need of the acquisition of this piece of land; but the department fears, sir, that with the improvements that it is said the owner contemplates to make that will put the value much higher than the present value.

Mr. MANN. Now, this morning we had a case up of Thomasville, Ga., where our distinguished friend from Georgia desired the Government to buy a piece of land to make a park; but, finding that he could not get it through the House by unanimous consent, he changed it so as to permit the people there to buy the land and donate it to the Government. Well, here is a similar case, except we have not an offer from the people to buy the land.

Mr. LOGUE. We rather got in the habit of doing that in Philadelphia. We have donated 900 acres of land at the League Island Navy Yard, and we have——

Mr. MANN. Is that part of the land Philadelphia is trying to get back?

Mr. LOGUE. No, sir; not get back——

Mr. MANN. There is land we own there which Philadelphia is trying to get back?

Mr. LOGUE. No; there is nothing to be got back. We ask for a leave for use that will greatly improve League Island Yard.

Mr. MANN. Philadelphia is trying to get the Government to give some land to the city for the purpose——

Mr. LOGUE. So that we can do certain dredging that the United States would have to do, and improve the navy yard in the use we make of the land to be leased.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman is trying to get some land?

Mr. LOGUE. So that we can make improvements in the use of the land, thereby saving the Government the expense of improving the land, and everything we undertake generally turns out to be an improvement.

Mr. MANN. They have been trying to get land. I simply was confining myself to the circumstances of the one case, and the gentleman replied to me instancing another, where they have a right to do neither.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOGUE. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. The League Island proposition is a meritorious one, is it not?

Mr. LOGUE. Oh, yes; there is no question about it.

Mr. MOORE. If the Government had authorized the use of certain land it would increase the revenues of the Government, would it not, through the increase of customs receipts?

Mr. LOGUE. No doubt of it, and save the expenditure of immense sums of money.

Mr. MOORE. And a good business proposition to the Government?

Mr. LOGUE. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. I want to ask about Hanover. How far is that building toward completion?

Mr. LOGUE. The building is now completed.

Mr. MOORE. My recollection is it was not finished last year.

Mr. LOGUE. It is finished now.

Mr. MOORE. Was there any trouble over the contract?

Mr. LOGUE. There was some trouble.

Mr. MOORE. Some delay as a result of it?

Mr. LOGUE. It is practically closed now.

Mr. MOORE. Was the delay in the completion on account of the difference over the contract?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE. What is the population of Hanover?

Mr. BRODBECK. The town has an immediate population of 7,081, but the town and suburbs have a population of about 11,000. This building was considered ample in size for the needs of Hanover—that is, considered large enough for the present purposes, for which it was designed—but is without any special provision for the parcel post. The business has been increasing so much that it was deemed advisable at this point, while it was primarily understood by the citizens of our town before the bill was introduced for the last $10,000 to finish and complete the building, that part of that amount was to be used to acquire the additional land now in question.

Mr. MOORE. The present building occupies 88 by 104; that is a pretty fair site, is it not?

Mr. BRODBECK. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the additional site to be acquired is 88 by 104. The present building occupies the corner of Abbottstown and Locust Streets, and this proposition takes in property along Locust Street.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to say to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

Mr. MOORE. Do I understand the building is not yet completed?

Mr. BRODBECK. The building has been completed and in use since last December.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if there is any deficiency in the way of information at the present time which, if furnished, would cause him to withdraw his objection?

Mr. MANN. I think if you want to pass a bill of this kind you should bring an appropriation for it instead of trying to creep in on the theory that because there is an unexpended balance it will not cost anything.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I have objected, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

SECOND HOMESTEAD AND DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2068) to authorize the allowance of second homestead and desert-land entries.

The bill, with the committee amendment, was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the gentleman from Utah [Mr. JOHNSON] is better equipped to answer on this, as he reported it.

Mr. MANN. This is the same matter as was passed in the House bill, which is now pending in the Senate on the Senate Calendar, favorably reported, and it seems to me it would be shorter to let the Senate act on the House bill than it would to have the House insert an amendment to the Senate bill, and probably send it to conference. As the matter is now before the Senate in a House bill which passed the House and was reported favorably to the Senate on April 22 last, it undoubtedly will soon be up in the Senate and the Senate will probably adopt the House bill, which is satisfactory. If the Senate fails to amend the House bill, that gives the amendment we want to go in a little better chance. Therefore, I shall object to this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

PUBLIC-LAND RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1214) to amend sections 2380 and 2381, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2380 and 2381 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2380. The President is authorized to reserve from the public lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, town sites on the shores of harbors, at the junction of rivers, important portages, or any natural or prospective centers of population; also lands having a particular value for villa sites, summer homes, hotels, sanitarium, health, recreation, or pleasure resorts.

"SEC. 2381. When, in the opinion of the President, the public interests require it, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause any of such reservations or part thereof to be surveyed into urban, suburban, or villa lots or tracts of suitable size for the purposes mentioned, and to fix by appraisement of disinterested persons their cash value, and to offer the same for sale at public outcry to the highest bidder, and thence afterwards the unsold lots to be held subject to sale at private entry according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: but no lots shall be disposed of at public sale or private entry for less than the appraised value thereof, and all such sales shall be conducted by the register and receiver of the land office in the district in which the reservations may be situated, in accordance with the instructions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know to what extent this bill changes existing law. I should like to ask the gentleman from Utah [Mr. JOHNSON] just what change from the present law the first provision of the revised section contains.

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. I will say that there is very little change, except that it is made applicable to certain parcels of lands, such as islands situated in the lakes and along the river banks, and also abandoned lighthouses, as reported by the Secretary of the Interior, to which the act sought to be amended does not apply except in so far as such land may be entered by scrip. The purpose of this is to enable the President to reserve it for reasons enumerated. The Secretary of the Interior states numerous islands, both surveyed and unsurveyed, in the Great Lakes and in rivers and lands along the shore line of the United States which have in time past served for lighthouses and other public purposes, and from time to time such reservations are released by the department having temporary jurisdiction over them and turned over to the department for disposition. Many of the tracts embraced therein are of little or no value for agriculture, and there are no existing public laws especially suited to their disposition.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me make this suggestion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. The purpose is to enable the President to put these lands in such a way that they may be acquired by private ownership.

Mr. MONDELL. I notice on page 2 of the report the Acting Secretary suggested the necessity for the legislation is shown by a matter which is pending in his department relative to Island No. 6, in Scammon Harbor, Lake Huron, which was reserved for lighthouse purposes by Executive order. I am under the impression there is a law under which the department could appraise and sell that property. Abandoned lighthouse property could, I think, be appraised and sold. Does the gentleman know whether that comes under the same law that provides for military reservations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. I think not. I am not aware of any law by which these irregular parcels of land, these abandoned lighthouses, or islands, or parts of the shores, could be disposed of.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is true, there would seem to be no objection. It would probably be wise to provide legislation for their disposal, but this act does a good deal more than that. It authorizes and therefore suggests and encourages the reservation of lands for villa sites, summer homes, hotels, sanitariums, health, recreation, and other resorts. The gentleman has had a good deal of experience with withdrawals in his country. Does he feel justified in adding all these purposes to those for which lands can now be withdrawn?

Mr. JOHNSON of Utah. I will say this, so far as it applies to the character of land described in this bill: Generally I am not in favor of it, but as it applies to the character of land described in this bill, and which can not be acquired by any other method except that of scrip purchase, I would say it would be in the interest of economy.

Mr. MONDELL. I admit that in the main it does not apply much to the gentleman's State, and therefore it may be one reason why he does not seriously object to it, because he has no harbors. There are no large rivers or river junctions in his State. Whether there are any natural or prospective centers of population on lands having value for villa sites, summer hotels, and so forth, I do not know, but I am inclined to think, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation is important enough that we ought to have a little time for its discussion. Therefore I shall feel obliged to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] objected.

BOARD OF MANAGERS FOR SOLDIERS HOMES.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. TAGGART. I rise at this time to ask unanimous consent that the House take up and consider out of its order House joint resolution No. 241, providing for the election of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Military Homes. I would not ask this indulgence of the House if it were not for the fact that an emergency has arisen in the affairs of the homes. But two members of the active members of the board of managers are now legally qualified to act, and there could not in any sense of the word be a quorum of the board of managers assembled at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] asks unanimous consent to take up House joint resolution 241, for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, House Calendar No. 105, out of its regular order on the calendar, and have it considered at the present time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would not be willing to inaugurate the practice unless there was some very urgent reason for it, and in view of the fact that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has already given notice that he would endeavor to have a rule reported to take up this resolution, I am not willing to inaugurate the practice now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. TAGGART. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask that it retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Of course it retains its place without any ceremonies about it.

Mr. TAGGART. I understand the objection goes to taking it up out of its order rather than to its consideration when it is reached?

The SPEAKER. Of course. The Clerk will report the next one.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN FISHLAKE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1087) authorizing the exchange of certain lands within the Fishlake National Forest, Utah.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent to the Salina Land & Grazing Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Utah, for the following-described lands:

East half southwest quarter, southwest quarter southwest quarter, south half northwest quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, north half northeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, north half southeast quarter, southeast quarter southeast quarter, section 24; east half northeast quarter, north half southwest quarter, section 25; southeast quarter northeast quarter, east half southeast quarter, section 35; and a strip 8 chains in width extending from the northwest corner of section 2, township 24 south, range 1 east, to the junction with the southeast quarter of section 35, township 23 south, range 1 east, of the Salt Lake meridian.

Lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, section 19; southwest quarter northwest quarter section 20; northwest quarter southeast quarter, northwest quarter northeast quarter, east half northwest quarter, section 30, township 23 south, range 2 east, of the Salt Lake meridian.

Northwest quarter southwest quarter section 1; east half northwest quarter, northeast quarter section 11; west half northwest quarter, north half northeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, northeast half northwest quarter, southeast quarter, section 12; said northeast half being an area of 20 acres made by drawing a line from the northwest corner of 40 to the southeast corner of 40, township 24 south, range 1 east, of the Salt Lake meridian.

Southeast quarter, south half southwest quarter, section 5; northwest quarter northeast quarter, lot 2, southwest quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter, section 7; southwest quarter, east half northwest quarter, northwest quarter northwest quarter, northeast quarter, north half southeast quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter, section 8, township 24 south, range 2 east, of the Salt Lake meridian, upon the transfer by the said Salina Land & Grazing Co. to the United States of the northeast quarter northwest quarter section 28; southeast quarter northeast quarter section 35, township 22 south, range 1 east.

Southeast quarter northeast quarter, east half southeast quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter, section 31, township 22 south, range 2 east.

Southeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, section 11; west half southwest quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter, section 12; northwest quarter northeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter, northeast quarter southwest quarter, section 13; north half northeast quarter, southwest quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, east half southwest quarter, section 14; southeast quarter southeast quarter section 22; east half west half, southwest quarter southwest quarter, section 23, township 23 south, range 1 east.

Northeast quarter northeast quarter section 6, township 23 south, range 2 east.

Northwest quarter southwest quarter section 3; northwest quarter southwest quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter, southeast quarter southeast quarter, section 11; east half southwest quarter, southwest half southeast quarter southeast east quarter, section 12, the last 40 being divided by a line drawn from northwest corner to the southeast corner, northwest quarter northeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, northwest quarter southwest quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter, section 13; northwest quarter northeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, northeast quarter southwest quarter, section 14; southwest quarter northeast quarter, and lot 2, section 15; northeast quarter southeast quarter section 21; northwest quarter northwest quarter, southwest quarter northeast quarter, section 23; northwest quarter southwest quarter; southwest quarter northeast quarter, section 24; northwest quarter northwest quarter section 25; north half northeast quarter section 26; township 24 south, range 1 east.

Lot 3, south half northwest quarter section 4; northeast quarter northwest quarter, northeast quarter southwest quarter, section 9; northwest quarter northwest quarter, southwest quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter, section 16; northwest quarter southeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, southwest quarter northwest quarter, section 17; northeast quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, section 18, township 24 south, range 2 east, of the Salt Lake meridian, within the Fishlake National Forest: Provided, That the Attorney General of the United States shall certify that a good and sufficient title to the reconveyed lands will vest in the Government: And provided, That the lands reconveyed to the United States shall forthwith become a part of the Fishlake National Forest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman if these descriptions have been properly verified?

Mr. FERRIS. They were furnished by the department. I assume they are verified. They correspond to the letters.

Mr. MANN. The letters do not say anything about it.

Mr. FERRIS. We sent down and a memorandum was sent up. Am I correct about that?

We did not report one bill where they got a little the best of us in value.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of that. I am speaking of the verification of the descriptions. Usually the department, in making a report, gives the description in a letter, so that we can verify it.

Mr. FERRIS. As I recall, this was done by a map, properly checked, showing the lands we received and the lands we gave.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROTECTING LOCATORS OF OIL AND GAS LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5673) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest," approved March 2, 1911.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objeection?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read in lieu of the original bill, as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be read for information.

Mr. FERRIS. No, Mr. Speaker; the original bill was stricken out. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read in lieu of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest," approved March 2, 1911, be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"SEC. 2. That where applications for patents have been or may hereafter be offered for any oil or gas land included in an order of withdrawal upon which oil or gas has been discovered, prior to such application for patent, and where there has been no final determination by the Secertary of the Interior upon such applications for patent, said Secretary, in his discretion, may enter into agreements, under such conditions as he may prescribe, with such applicants for patents in possession of such land or any portions thereof relative to the disposition of the oil or gas produced therefrom or the proceeds thereof, pending final determination of the title therein by the Secretary of the Interior, or such other disposition of the same as may be authorized by law."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

That an act entitled "An act to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest," approved March 2, 1911, be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"SEC. 2. That where applications for patents have been or may hereafter be offered for any oil or gas land included in an order of withdrawal upon which oil or gas has heretofore been discovered, or is being produced, or upon which drilling operations are in actual progress at the date of the passage of this act, and oil or gas is thereafter discovered thereon, and where there has been no final determination by the Secretary of the Interior upon such applications for patent, said Secretary, in his discretion, may enter into agreements, under such conditions as he may prescribe with such applicants for patents in possession of such land or any portions thereof, relative to the disposition of the oil or gas produced therefrom or the proceeds thereof, pending final determination of the title thereto by the Secretary of the Interior, or such other disposition of the same as may be authorized by law."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] reserves the right to object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that affords temporary relief for some oil producers in California, pending the time when some suits now pending can finally be tried and settled. There has in the past been some objection to this bill on the part of the Navy Department and some objection on the part of the Department of Justice, so much so that the Department of Justice brought in their representative. As the result of numerous conferences had between the Interior Department and the Navy Department and the Department of Justice they have agreed upon an amendment among them, and it was this morning submitted to our committee and gone over, as we thought, with care, and each member of our committee agrees to it. All three departments were represented—the Navy Department, the Interior Department, and the Department of Justice.

The substance is that the royalties that come from the oil that occurs on certain so-called naval reserve lands are to be set aside for the supervision of the Navy Department, the same to go to the Navy Department for their administration and adjudication. I have in my hand the amendment referred to, which I would like to have read for information, so that the House may know what the amendment is.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read it for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That when oil or gas is produced on lands within the areas set aside as naval petroleum reserves the amount of oil or gas, or the proceeds thereof, impounded, or the damage adjudged, accruing to the United States, in case the final determination of the title should be adverse to the claimant or applicant, shall be set aside for the fuel needs of the Navy, and if paid in money this money shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of a fund known as naval petroleum fund, which fund shall be at the disposal of the Secretary of the Navy for use in the development of oil lands for the Navy, and for such other purposes connected with the supply of oil for the Navy as the Congress may from time to time direct: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall submit annually to Congress a statement of the receipts under this act and also of the expenditures and the purposes for which incurred.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee from the Secretary of the Navy approving this amendment, and for that reason I withdraw any objection I might have.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker. This is worse than it was before. The Navy has just waked up on this. I was the one who objected when the matter was up in the House before, before the Navy Department discovered that such a bill was pending. Now, they want to get possession of the money, to spend it as they please, without an appropriation. Is that what this amendment is?

Mr. FERRIS. Partially so.

Mr. MANN. That is a very laudable purpose on their part. I suppose they would like to have us appropriate $150,000,000 a year for the next few years without any further action, and let them do what they please with it.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman understand that this applies only to those lands which are on a naval reserve?

Mr. MANN. I understand it applies to certain moneys. It is immaterial to me what the amount is.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me explain to the gentleman the status of the land. There were 67,000 acres in two reserves, declared to be naval reserves by Executive order under the Pickett bill. Approximately half of that land—to be exact, 30,800 acres—is patented to the Southern Pacific. There are 7,500 acres of the other half claimed by certain claimants. There are unentered and unclaimed lands to the amount of 29,650 acres, but there are some locations on that area which have not been applied for, so that there are yet remaining approximately 21,000 acres on these naval reserves that are not in litigation. Of course, this amendment does not affect that land, but the amendment does provide that the royalty or revenue, or whatever we get under these amicable temporary agreements, from those on the disputed lands, on these particular reserves, shall go to the Navy Department.

I will present herewith a report on a companion House bill which quite well, I think, presents the situation in its true light. It is as follows:

[House Report No. 519, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

LOCATORS OF OIL AND GAS ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. FERRIS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany House bill 15469:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill 15469, by Mr. CHURCH, amending an act entitled "An act to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest," approved March 2, 1911, beg leave to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was referred to the department and the department has reported on the same, and it is thought that the entire letter will be of value in the consideration of the bill by the House.

The report thereon is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 10, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I am in receipt of your request for report and recommendation upon H. R. 15469, a bill to amend the act of Congress approved March 2, 1911 (36 Stat., 1015). The amendment proposed is the addition of a section which will authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into agreements, under such conditions as he may prescribe, with parties who have presented or may present applications for patent for oil or gas land included in an order of withdrawal and upon which oil or gas has been discovered, is being produced, or upon which drilling operations shall be in actual progress at the date of the passage of the act, said agreements to relate to the disposition of the oil or gas produced from the lands, or the proceeds thereof, pending the final determination by the Secretary of the Interior of the validity of the offered applications for patents.

The proposed legislation is peculiarly applicable to the California oil fields, where a large number of locations and applications are under investigation or involved in proceedings which challenge the validity of the locations or the regularity of the applications presented. Many oil and gas wells are in actual operation upon these and adjacent lands, and by reason of the investigations of the department and certain suits instituted by the United States to enjoin parties from removing oil from the lands, the operators are unable to dispose of the oil or gas under existing laws pending adjudication of their claims. This is disadvantageous not only to the operators, but to the United States, because the failure to continuously operate the wells may result in the diminution or destruction of the oil or gas values through introduction of water into the wells or by reason of the draining of the oil and gas deposits from under the lands involved through wells sunk and in operation upon adjacent patented lands. The situation is one which demands immediate attention if the operators and the United States are to be saved from large and irreparable loss, and I earnestly recommend the enactment of the bill. At the same time I desire to point out that this bill gives temporary relief only, in that it permits of adjustments which will permit of the operation of oil and gas wells and take care of the proceeds pending the final adjudication of the claims by the department. It does not provide a method for disposing of the lands or the deposits after final adjudication of the cases if the claims of the applicants be finally denied. Relief for the latter situation may, however, be provided later.

I understand the present bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into agreement with the record claimant to all or any part of a location, provided such record claimant has presented or shall present an application for patent for all or any portion of the location involved.

I further direct attention to the general bill providing for the leasing of lands containing deposits of oil, gas, and certain other minerals now pending before your committee, and to the similar measure, S. 4898, now pending before the United States Senate. The latter measures, if enacted, will prevent the future occurrence of such conditions as now confront us, and the necessity for the temporary remedial legislation now under consideration emphasizes the importance of the early enactment of the general leasing measure.

Very truly, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

A careful reading of Secretary Lane's report discloses that some temporary relief for these oil men engaged in oil production on the public domain is an emergency. The legislation authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make working arrangements whereby the oil claimants may go on with the production of oil, and thereby preserve the rights of themselves and the United States until a suitable leasing law can be passed covering the case.

Certain irregularities with reference to some of the oil operators have brought about a confusion of title. The institution of suits has caused the pipe lines to refuse to accept the oil and buy the oil, there being no market for the oil other than the pipe-line companies, and has brought stagnation in oil development.

As will be observed by the Secretary's letter and from facts brought to the attention of the committee in a printed hearing had, show that lands held in private ownership, most of which came from original land grants, of alternate sections make it possible for the lands held in private ownership to go on with the production, pumping, and draining of the Government lands to an extent that is greatly to the disadvantage of the General Government as well as to the oil prospectors themselves.

Twenty-five or thirty independent oil producers of California appeared before the committee and presented hardships, disaster, and trouble which deserves the attention of Congress, and at the earliest possible moment.

Your committee was unanimously of the opinion that pending a time when these titles could be definitely settled and pending a time when those who deserve patents could get patents and those who should be denied patent could be formally denied patent, such temporary working arrangements as proposed in H. R. 15469 was about the only method of solving the problem.

The Secretary of the Interior is a man of broad views, keen intellect, and with peculiar and actual knowledge of the actual conditions as they exist, and it is the thought of every member of the committee, after prolonged hearings and painstaking attention, that this bill should be passed at once for the purpose of preserving what the Government has and what the developers of oil deserve, and to prevent damage and disaster from any source.

The actual method of working is thought to be that the Secretary will retain a sufficient portion of the proceeds of the oil to indemnify the Government in the event the title will finally be held to be adverse to the claimants, so that untold hardships may not follow. Some of the men developing oil in the California region have almost been driven to bankruptcy. Telegraphic appeals and personal appeals have come from California sources urging some action on the part of Congress.

The bill, as will be observed, does not part with title to a foot of land or to any oil or gas of the United States, but merely authorizes a continuation of operations to prevent waste, decay, destruction by water breaking in, and other disaster coming from the nonuse of oil machinery and oil development. The committee can not urge too strongly the advisability of this temporary relief, and it at the earliest possible moment.

The complaints have come chiefly from California and from a strip of country about 125 miles long and from 2 to 5 miles wide on the west side of the San Joaquin Valley in California.

As was suggested by Secretary Lane in his letter, there is pending in both branches of Congress, and in truth the bill before the House committee is well under way, legislation providing for a leasing system of the oil and gas lands of the United States, so that hereafter tangled titles relative to the procedure and acquirement may not be one of the troublesome tasks for the American Congress to deal with. The affording of this temporary relief by the passage of H. R. 15469 will in no manner interfere with the broad-gauged conservation policy outlined in the leasing law soon to be reported and now pending before both the House and Senate committees.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. MANN. This amendment provides, in substance, as I understand it, that as to certain of these lands any money received, instead of being paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, as nearly all money is which comes from the sale of the public domain, shall be turned over to the Secretary of the Navy, to spend in such amounts as he pleases, at such times as he pleases, for such purposes as he pleases——

Mr. FERRIS. No.

Mr. MANN. Let me finish my sentence—in the matter of investigating in regard to oil lands. Now the gentleman can correct me.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman states it too broadly. It goes into a fund called the "Naval reserve fund."

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; that is not what it is called.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Into an oil fund in the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. A naval petroleum oil fund.

Mr. FERRIS. Why, is not that the same thing?

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The naval reserve fund is one thing. This goes into a special fund, which the Secretary of the Navy will control—without any appropriation, without any requirement that he come before Congress, without any control on our part over him at all, for such purposes as he pleases, at such times as he pleases, practically. The Secretary of the Navy may desire that, but I do not think Congress will ever give it to him.

Mr. FERRIS. May I read what the amendment has to say on that particular point?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. It says—

And for such other purposes connected with the supply of oil for the Navy as the Congress may from time to time direct.

Mr. MANN. And for such other purposes as Congress may from time to time direct; yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. There is no limitation at all on it?

Mr. MANN. There is no limitation on it at all. Now, regardless of this naval amendment, I should like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to the bill. The bill provides that proceeds coming from oil shall be practically divided between the Government and the claimants under certain terms?

Mr. FERRIS. That is all.

Mr. MANN. It says:

Pending final determination of the title thereto by the Secretary of the Interior, or such other disposition of the same as may be authorized by law.

What other disposition of the same can there be, except the determination of the title to the land?

Mr. FERRIS. Congress has now on the calendar a bill which provides for the leasing on a royalty basis of all the oil and gas lands, which finally revert to the Government. The lands so reverted would be operated under the laws then existing on the subject.

Mr. MANN. This language would not affect that.

Mr. FERRIS. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Because this says:

Pending final determination of the title.

If you determine the title and determine that the title is in the Government, then that very bill, if it is enacted, seizes the situation at once.

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly; and that is what is intended.

Mr. MANN. This is not needed in there for that purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. There is still another bill on the calendar, known as the permament relief bill, that does not involve the determination of titles.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. LENROOT. And that was the real purpose of this language, so as to protect this impounded money, to be released when that time arrives.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is entirely right about that.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the objection to putting that money into the Treasury, to be appropriated as Congress may see fit?

Mr. FERRIS. Personally I have no objection, except that I want to keep entire faith with the Secretary of the Navy. We give the proceeds of these oil lands to the development of the West for irrigation and the proceeds of these royalties under other legislation, and the Navy Department feel that they ought to have out of this naval reserve any royalty or renewal that comes in.

Mr. FOSTER. From listening to this amendment, I understand that the amount of land involved is 21,000 acres. Is that correct?

Mr. MANN. More than that.

Mr. FERRIS. There are 67,000 acres of it in all. Of course, more than half of it is patented and a good deal of the other has claimants for patent.

Mr. MADDEN. There are 21,000 acres that are not affected by this legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see the necessity of creating a petroleum fund in the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. It is safe to say that that will not be done.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so.

Mr. MANN. If it was submitted to a vote of the House today, I do not think 25 Members of the House would vote for it. Still, it may be that I am mistaken, after seeing the active and effective lobbying which the Navy Department did in reference to the sale of the battleships. I have never seen anything that equaled it, and I do not know what the House might do on both sides with any old proposition.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Yes; the Navy is very popular in the country.

Mr. MANN. It was not done in that way, and probably will not be again. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question in reference to this provision:

Said Secretary, in his discretion, may enter into agreements, under such conditions as he may prescribe with such applicants for patents in possession of such land or any portions thereof, relative to the disposition of the oil or gas produced therefrom or the proceeds thereof.

Does that contemplate a division or the impounding of the proceeds?

Mr. FERRIS. We left that discretionary with the department.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that we ought to know whether it is to be a division or an impounding?

Mr. FERRIS. My answer is that they are drilling for oil, and the Secretary of the Interior can make such an agreement as is contemplated until the courts can pass upon it, and thus save something to the Government. To let it go on as it is we lose all. By this course we can save something and still maintain orderly procedure.

Mr. MANN. This matter has been pending for a long time?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MANN. If the Secretary of the Interior has given attention to the matter he must have some idea by this time as to what he would be willing to do. It seems to me if he has any idea on the subject he ought to be in communication with the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. FERRIS. He has, and has been before us numerous times. We have tried and the Secretary of the Interior has tried and the Department of Justice has tried its hand at it, but it is a difficult thing to do justice with a lot of different cases where each one hinges on a different state of facts. We thought the best we could do was to let the Secretary of the Interior make a temporary working agreement which would play out and be at an end when the cases were decided.

Mr. MANN. If the Secretary of the Interior has to pass on each particular case and to reach a different conclusion, it would be shorter to determine the title.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman thinks so, and I confess it sounds like there was some merit in it, but the Commissioner of the General Land Office came before us at the hearing and said they had not been able to do it, and they are favorable to this relief.

Mr. MANN. What position does the Department of Justice take on the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. They appeared before us Saturday morning and this morning, and they are not opposed to it. The Interior Department is for it, and has been all along. They know the facts pretty well, and most people are for it when they know our efforts to assist.

Mr. MANN. Why is the Department of Justice opposed to the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Because they seemed to be reading this bill in connection with the permanent relief bill and had the two confused. He said Saturday morning that he had no objection to this bill and that his letters had in some instances related to both bills, but he was for this bill.

Mr. MANN. Is he opposed to the permanent bill?

Mr. FERRIS. As it stands, he is.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think he can convert him on the other bill as he has on this?

Mr. FERRIS. We have a hearing to-morrow, in which the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice and the Department of the Navy will appear in an effort to get together and accomplish something.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Is the other bill the gentleman speaks of—the bill S. 5434—is that the permanent bill?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not it before me.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. That is the bill which has passed the Senate and relates to the operation of the oil lands taken up prior to the withdrawal order of 1910, the issues of which are somewhat involved and pending before the Supreme Court.

Mr. FERRIS. I think not before the Supreme Court, but pending in the California courts.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. This would affect not only the lands in California but lands in the Western States?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; it is a general bill, but the main and important interests are in southern California.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. The remedy that you are seeking to apply is to the lands in southern California?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. The other bill has a broader scope.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill applies to the oil lands everywhere.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but the acute situation is in California.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that if this bill comes up for consideration, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Oklahoma intends to offer the amendment he had read for information?

Mr. FERRIS. I have agreed with the gentleman from Maryland and the Secretary of the Navy that I will offer it, and I will. I should not feel right about it unless it was offered.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma occupies a delicate position. If he does not offer the amendment the gentleman from Maryland will object to the bill, and if he does offer it, I will object. I will object now.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman has not removed me from the delicate situation. The oil men are between two millstones. I will try to get the Navy Department and the gentlemen together.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Oklahoma knows that this naval amendment ought not to be put in the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I feel sure the gentleman from Illinois recognizes that some legislation is needed in this direction.

Mr. MANN. I do; and I would be willing to allow the bill to pass, although I objected to it once, and yet have some doubt about it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar and be passed over without prejudice. I think it can yet be passed, for it is important and ought to be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a draft of what I understand to be the meaning of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of the passage of this legislation, and yet I wish it were possible to have it amended so as to make it a little clearer. As the matter now stands, it is not entirely clear just what cases are provided for; and further, it is not clear, but should be made clear, whether it is intended that all proceeds shall be impounded and retained in case of an adverse decision, or whether it is proposed to retain a reasonable sum as royalty in case of an adverse decision. I would suggest the following as a substitute for the bill:

SEC. 2. That where applications for patents under the mining laws applicable thereto have been, or may hereafter be, offered for lands containing oil or gas, which lands had, prior to the submission of such application, been included in an order of withdrawal, and where no final determination or decision has been made by the Secretary of the Interior upon such applications for patent, said Secretary, in his discretion, may enter into agreements, under such conditions as he may prescribe, with such applicants for patents in possession of such land or any portions thereof, relative to the disposition of the oil or gas produced therefrom, or the proceeds thereof, and the impounding of a reasonable portion of the proceeds, pending final determination of the title thereto by the Secretary of the Interior. The amounts impounded shall be retained as royalties in cases in which the final decision shall be adverse to the applicant for patent: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall apply to those cases only where oil has been discovered, is being produced, or upon which drilling operations are in progress at the date of the passage of this act.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15320. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Owego, N. Y.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 17824) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. GALLINGER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, Nos. 44, 45, 91, 92, 138, 145, and 146, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. PERKINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 29.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17824) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to insert under the head "Department of Justice, miscellaneous objects" the following items: "To pay to Frances Owen Lurton, widow of Horace Harmon Lurton, late a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, $14,500."

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17005) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, at or near Williamson, W. Va.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the town of Williamson, in the county of Mingo, in the State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman who is sponsor for this bill as to the nature of it.

Mr. LANGLEY rose.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], the author of the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill was introduced by me at the request of Judge H. H. Stallard, who is county judge of the county in which I live. He informs me that our fiscal court has some understanding with the West Virginia authorities regarding the matter. Judge Stallard and his associates are progressive, high-grade officials, and I accepted their word, without inquiry or question, that this legislation was needed.

Mr. MOORE. It is a matter that comes up from the county?

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, yes; it originates, as I just stated, from the fiscal court of my county, which is acting in cooperation with the West Virginia authorities.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman know anything about the size of the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; I know all about it. It is quite a good-sized stream. The Government has already expended a good deal of money toward the canalization of it.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman know anything about the structure and dimensions of the proposed bridge?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; not in detail; but the gentleman may be assured that it will be up to date, both in structure and materials. That is the way we are doing things down there.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to know something more about the Tug Fork.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the conversation which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] are carrying on is not audible to all of us.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is not my fault, Mr. Speaker. I am talking loud enough, I think.

Mr. MOORE. Then I will ask the gentleman from Georgia the question that I put to the gentleman from Kentucky. I want to know something more about the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, W. Va.

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to answer that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know just what else it is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to know about the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy. There is a great deal I could tell him about it. There are so many good things I could tell him that it would take me all summer and it would interfere with the legislative program.

Mr. MANN. He wants to know if there is any space left on that river that has not a bridge over it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say in answer to that that we have already built some bridges across that fork. Millions of dollars are being expended in the Big Sandy Valley, of which the territory drained by the Tug Fork is a part. It is one of the richest valleys in the world, and the finest coal field in the world. New railroads are being built, and there are extensive coal operations going on, and cities are springing up like mushrooms in the night. We will probably have need for more bridges across that stream at different points. The Tug Fork is the boundary line between West Virginia and Kentucky at this point.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman feels that the passage of this bill will not impede navigation on the Tug Fork?

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think there is any question about that, and in any event there is a provision in the bill itself that the bridge is to be constructed so as not to interfere with the needs of navigation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say that my information is that the stream is too deep to ford at that point.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; and too wide for the gentleman from Georgia to swim. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. The committee is satisfied that navigation will not be affected by the construction of this bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, we have the authority of both the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] and the War Department to that effect.

Mr. LANGLEY. There is no question about that, I can assure the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RESTORING TO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN CERTAIN LANDS AT THE HEADWATERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1784) restoring to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for reservoir purposes at the headwaters of the Mississippi River and tributaries.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby restored to the public domain, subject to the easement provided for in section two hereof, any and all lands hitherto reserved by Executive order in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries the restoration of which the Secretary of War has recommended or may hereafter recommend to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That the lands hereby restored shall forever be and remain subject to the right of the United States to overflow the same or any part thereof by such reservoirs as now exist or may hereafter be constructed upon the headwaters of the Mississippi River, and all patents issued for the lands hereby restored shall expressly reserve to the United States such right of overflow.

SEC. 3. That the time when such restoration shall take effect as to any of such lands shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and in all cases where actual settlement has been made on any of said lands prior to January 1, 1912, and improvements made the said settlers shall have a preferred and prior right to enter and file on said lands under the homestead law for the period of 90 days following the time fixed hereunder for the restoration of the lands.

SEC. 4. That no rights of any kind, except as specified in the foregoing section, shall attach by reason of settlement or squatting upon any of the lands hereby restored to entry before the hour on which such lands shall be subject to homestead entry at the several land offices, and until said lands are opened for settlement no person shall enter upon and occupy the same except in the cases mentioned in the foregoing section, and any person violating this provision shall never be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any title thereto.

With the following committee amendments:

1. In line 3, page 1, after the word "domain," insert the following words: "For entry under the homestead laws, pursuant to the proclamation of the President."

2. On page 2, line 5, after the word "lands," insert the following words: "In the counties of Aitkin, St. Louis, Crow Wing, Cass, Hubbard, Itasca, Beltrami, and Koochiching, approximately 6,000 acres, and outside of the boundaries of the Minnesota National Forest Reserve."

3. On page 1, at the end of line 10, change the period to a semicolon and insert the following paragraph:

"Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to lot 2, in section 4, township 54 north, range 26 west, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 23, in township 55 north, range 26 west, said tracts described in this proviso being hereby reserved and excluded from the lands subject to homestead entry."

4. On page 2, lines 9, 10, and 11, strike out the following words: "January 1, 1912, and improvements made" and insert in lieu thereof "the withdrawal thereof and where improvements have been made thereon."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much land is covered in this?

Mr. LINDBERGH. About 6,000 acres; but perhaps not more than two-thirds of it would be entered, because the other third would not afford ground enough for present cultivation.

Mr. MANN. What is that land worth now? If it were not subject to flowage rights, what would it be worth?

Mr. LINDBERGH. All the way from $5 to $10 an acre. It is mostly brush land, and would cost some labor and money to clear.

Mr. MANN. This is now reserved for flowage on account of the reservoir, as I understand it?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes; it was withdrawn from the right of homestead entry on that account.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of this bill is to permit people to make homes upon the land subject to flowage rights if the Government hereafter should desire to overflow any of the lands in connection with the reservoir?

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is the purpose.

Mr. MANN. As I understand from the letter from the department to the chairman of the committee, the War Department states that much of this land will never be overflowed and that it is doubtful whether any of it will be.

Mr. LINDBERGH. The letter the gentleman [Mr. MANN] refers to was one written to the chairman of the committee in answer to a letter I had written. The letter states that much of it will never be overflowed, but I do not think that the letter states that it is doubtful if any will be, because a part of it is overflowed, as a matter of fact.

Mr. MOORE. The report states that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman states that part of these lands are now overflowed. What does he mean by that?

Mr. LINDBERGH. This land was originally withdrawn without knowing which of the lands would be overflowed, and there are some lands that are not overflowed at all. Later the Government engineers determined by measurement which would and which would not be overflowed.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Some of the lands are partly overflowed and some of them are wholly overflowed.

Mr. MANN. Does this bill endeavor to permit homestead entries on lands that are wholly overflowed?

Mr. LINDBERGH. It would not be practical at all to do that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know about that.

Mr. LINDBERGH. There is no prohibition in the bill against such entry, but the homestead laws probably could not be complied with on a homestead entry on land all of which was overflowed.

Mr. MANN. Well, suppose, as a matter of fact, the Government should hereafter determine to raise its dam, so as to extend the area of the reservoir, and would overflow much of these lands a portion of which had been taken for homes. Does my friend from Minnesota think we could escape claims on the part of these people to pay them for the loss of their homes or damage to their lands?

Mr. LINDBERGH. I think so, because the bill expressly reserves that right to the Government.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. Why, we have a lot of claims here in the House, bills reported to the House, where people without any authority of law had gone on the land and made some improvements, and when they were removed they wanted the Government to pay them for the land.

Mr. MILLER. Will my friend from Minnesota permit me to answer the gentleman?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. As a matter of fact, in the operation of reservoirs at the present time quite extensive areas are overflowed. There has never been suggested a claim against the Government——

Mr. MANN. They are public lands, are they not?

Mr. MILLER. Some are and some are not.

Mr. MANN. If there are any private lands—if the gentleman can produce me any case in Minnesota or elsewhere where the Government has overflowed private lands and there is no claim against the Government, why, I am going to reverse my whole theory of government as to claims.

Mr. MILLER. I can cite the gentleman to a great number of such cases.

Mr. MANN. Cite me one, first.

Mr. MILLER. I have not the description——

Mr. MANN. Oh, there is no place where the Government takes or injures property that there is not a claim against the Government.

Mr. MILLER. The language of this bill precludes any legal claim ever being made against the Government.

Mr. MANN. Any legal claim; oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Suppose under this bill an entryman in good faith makes improvements as provided for in the bill on these lands and then the Government exercises its right to overflow the land and carries away or damages the improvements, how are we going to escape being met by at least a sympathetic claim on account of the loss incurred?

Mr. LINDBERGH. There might be a sympathy on the part of Congress to allow such a claim, but the people who are up there have made some entries after the withdrawals. All of them claim they are perfectly satisfied and glad to obtain homestead rights upon this permission without any obligation whatever upon the Government; but if these people should be damaged by the future acts of the Government, I should favor the Government paying reasonable damage notwithstanding.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will allow me, this very question was up in another form in the matter of irrigated lands. These men in good faith say they can not comply with their contracts in 10 years; they say they are unable to do it, and it takes them more time. Here we would send a man into this land, who was going in good faith, and he makes improvements. Why should the Government in this case reserve to itself the right to overflow these lands and later on assert its right to overflow these lands and carry away his improvements, carry away his crops, carry away his barn, carry away his home? Now, that is rather an anomalous condition. I know and the gentleman knows that we are called upon here frequently, those of us who do not thoroughly understand these land-claim matters, to relieve cases of distress arising from just such a condition.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania at the present time these reservoirs or these dams exist and they overflow the land as much as it is possible to be overflowed. As a matter of fact, the water is higher now there than it has been since 1865, according to statements of reliable old settlers. The dams are already constructed. There never will be any addition to these particular dams now constructed, at least I do not believe there will be, because they are now overflowing all the land that they can overflow, according to the report of settlers up there.

Mr. MOORE. In section 2 of the bill you provide that "the lands hereby restored shall forever be and remain subject to the rights of the United States to overflow the same or any part thereof," and so forth.

Mr. LINDBERGH. That is true.

Mr. MOORE. Now the tenant is permitted to have access to those lands. I am trying to get at the aftermath of it—the tenant goes in, the land is arable, it is good land. He proceeds to cultivate the land. The Government exercises the right to overflow and overflows the land. The same question arises along the lower Mississippi.

Mr. LINDBERGH. The gentleman speaks of the people complaining, really they have no legal right to complain at all. The patent under section 2 will so provide, still I think as a matter of equity that if the Government should overflow to a greater extent than was reasonably contemplated it would be no more than just to the settlers to adjust the excess damage. These lands if allowed to remain continually in the present condition would be an injury to that locality, and as these reservoirs are for the general public the particular locality that stands the burden of the floods should be given all the advantage in return that is possible with consistency.

Mr. MILLER. If a homesteader who takes a part of the Government domain wherein the Government reserves a mineral right sells that to John Jones, and subsequently a gold mine should be found upon it, I do not think anybody would seriously contend that John Jones would have any standing here or any other place as to a share in that gold mine.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit, I think the gentleman from Minnesota is mistaken in what this bill does. It only refers to those lands which the War Department or the Secretary of War may recommend shall be restored to the public domain, and the Secretary of War or the Assistant Secretary of War, speaking for the Chief of Engineers, I suppose, states:

> The experience of many years and the results of more accurate surveys showed that a considerable number of tracts so withdrawn would only be partially flooded, while others would probably not be overflowed at all in the construction and operation of the reservoirs already built or projected, and that as to these tracts the right of flowage was all that the Government needed. Accordingly, a list of the lands, which the department considered were no longer required for reservoir purposes, was prepared, and under date of March 23, 1911, this list was transmitted to the Department of the Interior with the information that tracts embraced therein might be restored to entry and disposed of, provided flowage rights were retained by the United States.
> To effect the restoration of these lands to the public domain and enable the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of them under the existing homestead laws with the easement of flowage reserved, legislation by Congress is necessary, and that is the purpose of the accompanying bill, S. 1784.

Referring to this bill. So, while under this, the Government reserved the flowage right, still it is not anticipated that that reservation amounts to anything at all except upon certain lands which are partially overflowed; that is, 160 acres, part of which might be low and overflowed.

Mr. MOORE. That letter does not appear in the report.

Mr. MANN. That is a letter under date of July 3, 1914.

Mr. MOORE. The report on page 6 states:

> It has been made to appear that a considerable part of these lands are not now and probably never will be overflowed.

I do not want to object to the bill, but I think it is important to draw attention to this matter, so that the people who may go upon the lands may have notice and be warned, because it would be embarrassing if a man had planted crops and had them growing——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can be certain that if the people go on there and occupy this land, and the Government hereafter raises the dam so as to overflow more land, we will pay it, and I think we ought to pay it.

Mr. MOORE. We have paid it in other cases. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota before he takes his seat why lot 2, in section 4, in township 54 north, range 26 west, and so forth, page 2, lines 5, 6, and 7, is excepted?

Mr. LINDBERGH. The reason for that exception is it is generally supposed that those lands contain iron ore, and they were excepted because it was thought wise to except them on that account.

Mr. MANN. That is an erroneous description, is it not?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Yes; and I will ask to have it amended.

Mr. MOORE. Is that under Government control?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Under the same arrangement that these other lands are under at this time.

Mr. MOORE. And not subject to homestead entry?

Mr. LINDBERGH. Not now subject to homestead entry, and this excepts them from this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINDBERGH. I have three short amendments, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to offer verbally, and then I will send the others up to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments. Without objection, the committee amendments will be agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. There is objection to the first committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 1, line 3, after the word "domain," insert the following:
> "For entry under the homestead laws, pursuant to proclamation of the President."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] to the language. This reads: "Pursuant to proclamation of the President." Unquestionably it contemplates opening the lands to settlement, and therefore the President by proclamation shall open them to entry, so that parties desiring can make application and make homestead entry thereon. That is one of the amendments. The original language in the bill, as contained in section 3, is as follows:

> That the time when such restoration shall take effect as to any of such land shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

It was contemplated by that language that an order from the Secretary of the Interior would restore these lands to the public domain—by that act would make them subject to homestead entry by application. Now apparently there is a conflict in these two sections.

Mr. RAKER. In regard to that matter, the committee were very clear and unanimous as to putting this amendment in the bill, that this land should not be open for rush, but it should be open under the proclamation of the President under the bill passed some time since by the Congress.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think there is any question but that may be a very satisfactory way in which to proceed.

Mr. RAKER. The amendment has not been disposed of.

Mr. MILLER. I think it ought to be considered in the line of the subsequent language, so that the committee could say which it wanted to retain.

Mr. RAKER. Unless it is voted down I think this amendment ought to be changed.

Mr. MILLER. What difference does it make whether it is the order of the Secretary of the Interior or the order of the President of the United States. In any event there would be no opportunity for the grand rush mentioned.

Mr. MANN. There is plainly a conflict here.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not mean to offer amendments and change the clear intent of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

Mr. RAKER. There is not any idea of taking away the thought to issue a preliminary proclamation?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota called attention to the fact that in section 1 you provide that restoration shall be the proclamation by the President, and in section 3 you provide it shall be by order of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FERRIS. That undoubtedly ought to be changed.

Mr. MANN. Which do you want?

Mr. FERRIS. What is the precise amendment the gentleman offers?

Mr. MANN. He did not offer an amendment. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. The rule is uniform that the President issues the proclamation.

Mr. MILLER. I move to amend by striking out the words "pursuant to the proclamation of the President"; and I will say frankly that I do not care whether he makes the proclamation or the Secretary of the Interior makes it. It seems to me it should be the Secretary of the Interior, and I will say that that is the language heretofore used in a bill of this kind. As a matter of fact, I drew this myself originally, and that was the language adopted and was satisfactory to the department.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think the language in section 3 is quite broad enough to inaugurate the usual rules and regulations to carry on an orderly opening?

Mr. MILLER. I certainly do. The Secretary of the Interior has got to move before anybody can do a thing.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, namely, that there is no conflict between these two sections.

Mr. MILLER. There is a plain conflict.

Mr. RAKER. The first is a proclamation by the President that the land shall be thrown open for settlement.

Mr. MILLER. When?

Mr. RAKER. When he proclaims it and this bill passes. The provision in section 3——

Mr. MANN. He can not make a proclamation throwing this land open to the public domain without saying when it shall be thrown open.

Mr. RAKER. Surely not.

Mr. MANN. And section 3 says that the Secretary of the Interior shall fix the time for the restoration of the land.

Mr. RAKER. No; that the time when such restoration shall take place as to any such land shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. That is clearly in consonance with the bill passed, that after it has been thrown open by the President the Secretary of the Interior shall have rules and regulations prescribed in his department, which is always done, and that fixes the disposition of the land.

Mr. MANN. The President can not make a proclamation restoring this land to the public domain without saying when. That fixes the time. Then you say that the Secretary of the Interior shall fix the time. I presume they will both fix the same time, and to that extent there might be no conflict.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, if there is a conflict—and it rather seems to me that there is—it ought to be changed. I doubt if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] should be adopted, because when section 3 is referred to, and it is asserted that section 3 is in conflict with section 1, it only fixes the time for the opening. I have had some experience in these openings, and it is necessary to go further than merely fixing the time. It is necessary to go so far as to prescribe when and how and under what conditions the lands are to be filed upon. Otherwise you would have horse races and gun fights and other irregularities that this Congress would not stand for.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care whether the proclamation is made by the Secretary of the Interior or the President. I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not contending that that should be done, except that I say that section 3, standing alone, is not quite sufficient. You observe that it says this, "That the time when such restoration shall take effect as to any of such land shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior." Now, under that the Secretary of the Interior would say, on the 1st of September, for instance, or the 1st of October, these lands shall be opened. Then what follows? Then the provisions of the general homestead law apply, and the rush would begin.

Mr. MILLER. And he will also say what terms and conditions shall prevail.

Mr. FERRIS. Where is that?

Mr. MILLER. That is to be supplied.

Mr. FERRIS. I am perfectly willing that that should be done.

Mr. MILLER. If the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands thinks that the words "pursuant to the proclamation of the President" are sufficient, we can strike out section 3.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course the gentleman and I know that putting it in the hands of the President of the United States means that the Secretary of the Interior shall fix up the program and the President shall merely issue the proclamation. Of course that is the usual procedure. If your amendment is adopted, then we ought to add in section 3 that the time and such further conditions and stipulations shall be fixed as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. MANN. Is that done where there is a little, minor opening?

Mr. FERRIS. I think not, but it is best to proceed orderly.

Mr. MANN. Here is a small amount of property. Probably two-thirds of it has squatters on it already. Why not leave it to the Secretary of the Interior? In either case he does the work. The President can not be expected to do it.

Mr. FERRIS. I have agreed to that, but does not the gentleman think that in section 3 he ought to have authority to make the conditions?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the amendment can be fixed up.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, let me say it is futile if you are going to spend the time of the committee going over matters and considering these questions, and they are not brought up until after the unanimous consent is given. It is the determination of the Public Lands Committee that these lands shall not be thrown open except under the proclamation of the President, which means that under the act passed by this House there will be no more rush for these lands that are reserved. They should be opened in an orderly manner. All that the first provision does is to provide that these lands shall be opened in an orderly manner, and the third provision fixes the time upon which the parties can go on the homesteads and have their rights.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. MANN. It being a small matter at most, why would it not save any question by providing that the proclamation in the first place be made by the Secretary of the Interior and not by the President? We think there is a conflict as it stands now. We do not care how it is disposed of. Why would not that cover it?

Mr. RAKER. I have no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I move, Mr. Speaker, to amend the amendment voted by the committee by striking out the word "President," in line 5, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "President" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question on that?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know anything about these public-land matters, but has it not always been the custom for the President to issue those proclamations. Has that ever been delegated to a Cabinet officer before?

Mr. MANN. It has been the custom in large openings to have the proclamation made by the President, but we frequently permit the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain smaller bodies of the public domain.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This does provide for a proclamation?

Mr. LINDBERGH. This was proposed to be opened to homestead entry and then was withdrawn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It just occurred to me that possibly it ought to be done by the President as a legal proposition.

Mr. MANN. It is not necessary. Ordinarily the proprieties would require that the proclamation be made by the President; but, after all, it is a small matter. I doubt whether it is desirable to have the President annoyed with it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Are not all these proclamations issued by the President? If we are going to have a little bit of a monument, the President issues a proclamation.

Mr. MANN. What kind of a monument?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. A national monument for setting aside a piece of land, 640 acres. For such a thing the President issues a proclamation.

Mr. MANN. What kind of a monument?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. A national monument, for the setting aside of a piece of Government land or anything——

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Even if it is only 640 acres, the President issues a proclamation.

Mr. MANN. If there is any withdrawal, it has to be done by the President under the general law. Nobody objects to this being done by the President.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why not let it go then?

Mr. MANN. The only difficulty is that in one case it is provided that the President shall do it, and in the other case the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let us make it the President in both cases.

Mr. MANN. I do not care.

Mr. FERRIS. I think we can come at this easily. The first proposition comes from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] that there is a conflict. The next thing is that the gentleman's amendment would have the Secretary of the Interior issue the proclamation. I do not think you want to do that. I think if, on page 1, in lines 4 and 5, you strike out the words "pursuant to proclamation of the President" and insert in lieu thereof "under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," that will let him work it out.

Mr. MILLER. That is satisfactory.

Mr. RAKER. That does not comport with the usual method of handling the public lands. In the case of all reserves the President of the United States must make a proclamation opening the land.

Mr. FERRIS. There is no general law on the subject.

Mr. MILLER. There is nothing in the law that provides that.

Mr. MANN. Congress is the authority that provides that.

Mr. MILLER. Every week or two we pass some sort of an act telling the Secretary of the Interior how he shall dispose of certain lands.

Mr. MANN. There was a bill here this afternoon providing for disposing of certain lands, and the President had nothing to do with it.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the attention of the committee to this, on page 1, lines 3, 4, and 5:

For entry under the homestead laws, pursuant to proclamation of the President.

Now, when the President withdraws any land that has been reserved or when any land is reserved, except by act of Congress, the President makes the proclamation. This bill provides that the President shall by proclamation declare the land open. It then dovetails into the bill that the House passed some time since. The only question as to the date of opening is referred to in section 3, which says that the time when such restoration shall take effect as to any of such land shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Now, after it is thrown open and declared to be public land under the rules and regulations provided by that bill, the time when the parties can enter is fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from California yield at that point?

Mr. RAKER. In one minute I will yield. Then if there should be any question as to that, by striking out the words "by the Secretary of the Interior" and inserting the words "in the President's proclamation" it covers both phases of the case, and would then read as follows:

That the time when such restoration shall take effect as to any such lands shall be prescribed in the President's proclamation.

Now, you are covering the subject both ways from the beginning of the bill. I yield now to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER. Section 2 as now drawn and section 3 as to the part we have been discussing are copied exactly from a law now in force governing other lands that were withdrawn at the same time for the same purpose. In other words, this language is the language of a law. That law operated, and evidently this law would operate. Now, it seems to me inadvisable in a small matter of this kind that the President of the United States should go to the necessity of issuing a proclamation. It seems to me vastly more advisable that the Secretary of the Interior shall simply restore the lands under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe relative to their being opened to homestead entry. And would it not be reaching the whole situation satisfactorily if in that first amendment, as suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma, after the word "pursuant," in line 4, we add "to rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior"?

Then you will have the land opened under the homestead law under rules and regulations to be specified by the Secretary of the Interior. That is the same provision as is contained in section 3, which will fix the time. Have not you then got all the machinery necessary?

Mr. RAKER. I do not want to be captious, and I would have no objection to that.

Mr. MILLER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and offer as a substitute the following.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I offer as an amendment, after the word "to," in line 4, strike out the words "proclamation of the President," as contained in the committee amendment, and in lieu thereof substitute "such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 1, after the word "lands," insert the following: "in the counties of Aitkin, St. Louis, Crow Wing, Cass, Hubbard, Itasca, Beltrami, and Koochiching, approximately 6,000 acres, and outside of the boundaries of the Minnesota National Forest Reserve."

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, as to that amendment, I wish to modify it by striking out the counties of St. Louis, Hubbard, and Koochiching, because there are no lands in those counties.

Mr. MANN. And you want to strike out the word "and" before Koochiching and insert the word "and" after "Itasca."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6, 7, and 8, the words "St. Louis, Hubbard, and Koochiching" and insert the word "and" after the word "Itasca."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "Interior," insert the following: "Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to lot 2, in section 4 in township 54 north, range 26 west, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 33 in township 55 north, range 26 west, said tracts described in this proviso being hereby reserved and excluded from the lands subject to homestead entry."

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, as to that amendment, there is an error in line 8, where the word "northwest" should be "southwest." Therefore I offer an amendment to strike out "northwest" and insert in lieu thereof the word "southwest."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment in line 8 by striking out the word "northwest" and inserting the word "southwest."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 2, strike out the words "January 1, 1912, and improvements made," and insert the following: "the withdrawal thereof and where improvements have been made thereon."

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, as to that amendment, it has been discovered that it was made under an error. I offer as an amendment the following:

In line 23, strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "fourteen."

Mr. FERRIS. That is stricken out by the committee.

Mr. MANN. It has not been stricken out by the House. The gentleman wants to amend the text of the bill so as to make it read "January 1, 1914," and then vote down the committee amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, there can be no misunderstanding about the matter. This language is stricken out by the committee so as to leave the lands standing as they were when the withdrawal was made. There are 21 parties who have made application in good faith, and they ought to have consideration. That being the fact, I do not feel as though the mere fact that they settled there after reverses ought to deprive them of their rights, and, therefore, I am going to support the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 23, page 2, by striking out the word "twelve" in the original text of the bill and inserting the word "fourteen."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The question now arises, Mr. Speaker, on the committee amendment, to strike it all out, and that they want to vote down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, has the bill been read?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. MOORE. I want to offer an amendment to paragraph 2.

Mr. MANN. Now is the proper time to offer that amendment.

Mr. MOORE. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "overflow," strike out the period, substitute a comma, and insert the following: "and shall further provide that all improvements made upon the land by entrymen shall be subject to any damages that may result from such overflow."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman desire to be heard in support of the amendment? If not, I should like to be heard in opposition to it.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the entryman goes upon the land desiring to improve it. He may come from your State, or he may come from mine. He holds a patent from the Government. It is very much like an insurance policy or a deed to him. He may not be thoroughly familiar with all of the details, nor may he be thoroughly familiar with all of his rights when he goes on the land. His disposition would naturally be to improve it if he wants to make a living upon it. I want to protect him as against the action of the Government exercising its rights to overflow the land after he has taken it. I presume the lowland would be first overflowed, if any would be overflowed, and that would be the land that he would want to use first. Or, if he did not want to use that and used land higher up, he would gradually work down, in any event, to the lower land. No provision is made in this bill to protect him against any damage that may be done to him by the Government, and there is no provision in the bill which would protect the Government against his claim for damages should the right of overflow be exercised by the Government. I do not think he has sufficient notice. He ought to be fully advised before he goes in, and the purpose of this amendment is to give notice to the honest entryman, the man who means to toil on that land after he thinks he has acquired it, that if he takes chances on certain of the land, if he plants in certain parts or builds on certain parts of it, the Government may in the course of time overflow those particular parts, and he may have his crops and buildings wiped out. I think he ought to be fully advised before he goes on the land about the risk he takes. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, of course I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] would not advocate the insertion in a deed of anything that was not necessary or essential to the rights of the parties. The gentleman will appreciate, I am sure, that if we should require that there be inserted in these deeds, beginning with the patent from the Government and thereafter every mortgage, every deed of conveyance that may be made, the fact that the possessor of the land should not have a right of action against the Government by reason of any overflow of the land which might occur by the use of the Government of its reservoir system, we would be in a position where we might as well say that the Government would not be under any obligation to build the man's barn if it were struck by lightning and burned down, or that the Government would not be subject to damages if a cyclone destroyed the man's crops. The purpose the gentleman has in view is a splendid one, that these men shall have adequate notice of what they are getting and shall not be deceived. I think the gentleman will be convinced in a moment that they have this notice. These are scattered tracts. They are isolated fragments, as it were. They are the leavings after the Government has performed its big work of constructing these reservoirs. Heretofore when a man desired to take up one of these places and make a home he made application to the local land office and openly waived in writing, when he made his application, any right or claim by reason of overflow of the land on the part of the Government through the use of the dams or reservoirs. He did an affirmative act at that time, and therefore, of course, he had it all clearly before him. A large number of tracts of these lands are already in possession of settlers who went on in the regular way, hitherto prescribed, when they made that application, and they made the waiver, as indicated, and then went on the land and made their home and improvements.

It just happened two or three years ago that the Secretary of the Interior held he had no authority and the President had no authority to restore these lands when once they had been withdrawn. Thereupon the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War both recommended this legislation restoring these lands. Everybody in that vicinity is fully advised that these lands are in this basin system.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. And, of course, two or three generations from now the deed plainly will show on its face if Tom Jones buys the land that the land is subject to overflow by the United States.

Mr. MOORE. After settlers have already made improvements for which provision is made in one of the amendments here, we are giving nothing in this bill except preference in the matter of filing claims under the new law. Therefore if flowage is authorized and these lands should be affected, as undoubtedly they would be if the water reached them, what would prevent the present entrymen or any new settler from coming to Congress and saying, "We have been damaged, our crops have been destroyed, our buildings have been inundated or carried away by the water that the Government poured in upon us, and we ask relief from the Government"? What is to prevent them from doing that, and is not that very likely to occur?

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman will at once see if written in the deed that which he now advocates it could not change the rights of the parties. They now would have no right of action against the Government, and they will not have any if this passes.

Mr. MOORE. Suppose a new settler should go on and acquire land where possibly inundation might take place; that man then becomes an object of concern on the part of all of his neighbors and an object of concern to his Representative, ultimately, by coming back to Congress and saying, "I entered this land in good faith; I put up my buildings; I sowed my seed; I raised my crops." Would not he have a fair right to say that——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LINDBERGH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill by inserting a letter from the gentleman from Minnesota and one from the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, July 9, 1914.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MANN: I am sending you a letter from the War Department, as you wish to know what the conclusions of that department are in regard to S. 1784, being No. 209 on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. This is a copy of a letter the original of which was sent to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I also inclose a letter directed to me referring to the matter. According to this letter there should be an amendment to the bill. In line 8, page 2, the word "northwest" should read "southwest."

The lands involved are largely within the district which I represent. I know their general condition and know many of the pieces specifically. A large part of the land is high and can not ever be submerged by any dam or dams now constructed or that may hereafter be built. In a few cases settlers moved onto these lands before they knew about the withdrawals and when they supposed they could homestead them. Some made improvements and still live on the land. There are very few, if any, of the tracts that are or ever can be wholly submerged. The effect of the water going back upon these lands has been to wash out the soil at the junction of the water with the shore line where there are hills and create caving banks. In time they will limit themselves, but in some cases they would be limited by the settlers if they owned the property. They would plant willows and take other steps to retard such washing. Most of the lands are brush lands and have small scrubby timber. In clearing the brush and timber the settlers, in some cases, would use the stuff cut off to pile up on the banks to prevent further caving. Many pieces of this land would make good farms. The people there are fully aware that any homestead entry would be subject to flowage rights. They understand that they would have to take the land subject to that right on the part of the Government. The people there who now own the lands would be benefited by the settlement of these lands, because the new owners would help in building roads and in keeping up schools, etc.

Sincerely,
C. A. LINDBERGH.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 3, 1914.

Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH,
United States House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 19th ultimo, inclosing a copy of Senate bill No. 1784, present session of Congress, and asking whether this department has any objection to the passage of the bill, I beg to advise you that I have this day addressed a report on the measure to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, a copy of which I inclose for your information.

Very respectfully,
HENRY BRECKINRIDGE,
Assistant Secretary of War.

JULY 3, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States House of Representatives.

SIR: I am in receipt of a communication from Hon. C. A. LINDBERGH, Member of Congress, inclosing a copy of Senate bill No. 1784, current session of Congress, and asking whether this department has any objection to the enactment of the measure, which it appears has been passed by the Senate and is now pending on the calendar of the House of Representatives.

By Executive proclamations and otherwise numerous tracts of public land have from time to time been withdrawn from entry for the use of the War Department in connection with the "reservoir system" at the headwaters of the Mississippi River.

The experience of many years and the results of more accurate surveys showed that a considerable number of the tracts so withdrawn would only be partially flooded while others would probably not be overflowed at all in the construction and operation of the reservoirs already built or projected, and that as to these tracts the right of flowage was all that the Government needed. Accordingly a list of the lands which this department considered were no longer required for reservoir purposes was prepared, and under date of March 23, 1911, this list was transmitted to the Department of the Interior with the information that tracts embraced therein might be restored to entry and disposed of, provided flowage rights were retained by the United States.

To effect the restoration of these lands to the public domain and enable the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of them under the existing homestead laws, with the easement of flowage reserved, legislation by Congress is necessary, and that is the purpose of the accompanying bill S. 1784.

The interests committed to the charge of the War Department are believed to be fully protected by the provisions of the bill, and I am aware of no objections to its passage by Congress.

Attention is, however, invited to an apparent error in the description in line 8, page 2, of the bill—the word "northwest" it is thought should be changed to "southwest."

Very respectfully,

HENRY BRECKINRIDGE,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the question of woman's suffrage, and to include in that a statement from the Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of woman's suffrage and to print a statement by William J. Bryan. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am going to ask the gentleman to put off his request until the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is present. In the absence of the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. RAKER. I hope my Democratic colleague will not object to a statement by Mr. Bryan.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object unless the gentleman is willing to wait until Congressman HEFLIN is present. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut objects. The gentleman from Alabama is not here.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 28.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of George Washington Glick, presented by the State of Kansas to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his distinguished civic services.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Kansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 17824. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On July 13, 1914:

S. J. Res. 105. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the Sixth International Dental Congress.

On July 14, 1914:

S. 3488. An act for the relief of Ernest C. Stahl.

On July 17, 1914:

S. 60. An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals;

S. 388. An act for the relief of Ella O. Richardson;

S. 2903. An act for the relief of Judd McKelvey;

S. 3817. An act authorizing the issuance of a patent to James Gunning for lot 2, section 32, township 29 north, range 39 east, Montana;

S. 4441. An act to extend the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stats. L., p. 592), authorizing assignment of reclamation homestead entries, and of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stats. L., p. 265), authorizing the issuance of patents on reclamation homestead entries, to lands in the Flathead irrigation project, Montana;

S. 751. An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

S. J. Res. 157. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the International Congress on Education.

CEDING A CERTAIN PARCEL OF LAND TO FULTON COUNTY, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13311) to cede a certain parcel of land to the county of Fulton, State of Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States do cede unto the county of Fulton, State of Georgia, a certain parcel of land on the northeast corner of the property of the United States at Atlanta, Ga., Fulton County, upon which is located the United States Penitentiary, said strip of land containing 1,754.94 square feet, projecting into and along what is known as Forrest Road 151.55 feet.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, after the word "feet," insert the following:

"Provided, That title to the said parcel of land shall revert to the United States when it shall have ceased to be used for road purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, who has charge of this bill?

Mr. PARK. I have, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether this description of the land in the bill is correct?

Mr. PARK. No, sir; I have only Mr. HOWARD'S word for it. He was before the committee.

Mr. MANN. The Attorney General did not seem to be willing to take any chances on it.

Mr. PARK. The Attorney General is willing to do it if it goes back to the United States when it ceases to be used for the purpose for which the bill provides. I understand it is a rather sharp angle there, and there is a cutting down of the land to a level with the road and automobiles passing have some difficulty passing on a 26-foot roadway and they wish to extend it 18 feet 5 inches.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the bill and the purpose of it, but it seems to me we ought to have some one at some time to verify the description in the bill where you have a legal description of the property. The Attorney General says, in respect to this bill ceding a certain strip of land in Fulton County, Ga.:

Permit me to say that the files of the department show that the county of Fulton made application to the department as early as June, 1912, to have ceded to it a small strip of ground belonging to the penitentiary reservation—

And so forth. I do not know whether this is right or not, and he does not know either.

Mr. PARK. He has described it as 18 feet and 5 inches wide at the broad end and narrowing down to a point, being a triangle.

Mr. MANN. Well, I guess I will have to take chances on it. But the committee ought never to report a bill without verifying whether the description of it is correct or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after the word "feet," in line 11, insert the following:

"Provided, That title to the said parcel of land shall revert to the United States when it shall have ceased to be used for road purposes."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS, STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 785) to relinquish, release, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to certain lands in the State of Mississippi.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States of America hereby forever relinquishes, releases, and quitclaims all right, title, and interest in and to the northwest quarter of section 36, township 14 north, range 5 east, Choctaw meridian, situated in the State of Mississippi, now held under claim or color of title by individual or private ownership or municipal ownership, which was reserved, retained, or set apart for James Gipson under and by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Choctaw Nation of Indians on the 27th day of September, A. D. 1830: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or dispose of any right, claim, or title, if any, which said James Gipson or his heir or heirs and assigns may have in or to any of said land.

SEC. 2. That the true intent of this act is hereby declared to be to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said lands under the laws of the State of Mississippi, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of said interest, title, and estate of the said United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SISSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REORGANIZATION IN THE PATENT OFFICE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16480) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 476 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in line 2 thereof, before the words "one assistant commissioner," the words "one first assistant commissioner," and before the words "examiners in chief" change the word "three" to "five," so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 476. There shall be in the Patent Office a Commissioner of Patents, one first assistant commissioner, one assistant commissioner, and five examiners in chief, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The first assistant commissioner and the assistant commissioner shall hereafter perform such duties pertaining to the office of commissioner as may be assigned to them, respectively, from time to time by the Commissioner of Patents. All other officers, clerks, and employees authorized by law for the office shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the nomination of the Commissioner of Patents."

SEC. 2. That section 477 of the Revised Statutes be amended by changing the words "four thousand five hundred," after the words "Commissioner of Patents," to "five thousand" by inserting the following paragraph:

"The First Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $4,500 a year."

By inserting, after the words "three thousand" in the paragraph beginning "the Assistant Commissioner of Patents," the words "five hundred"; by changing the word "three" before "examiners in chief" to the word "five"; and, after the words "three thousand," adding the words "five hundred," so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 477. The salaries of the officers mentioned in the preceding section shall be as follows:

"The Commissioner of Patents, $5,000 a year.

"The First Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $4,500 a year.

"The Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $3,500 a year.

"Five examiners in chief, $3,500 a year each."

SEC. 3. That so much of section 440 of the Revised Statutes as follows the words "in the Patent Office," and refers to said office only, be amended as follows:

In the reference to the chief clerk, after the words "chief clerk," insert "who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner," and change the salary of the chief clerk from "two thousand five hundred" to "three thousand."

Insert the following paragraphs:

"Five law examiners, at a salary of $2,750 a year each.

"One examiner of classification, at a salary of $3,600 a year."

In the salary of the examiner in charge of interferences change the word "five" to "seven."

In the salary of the examiner of trade-marks change the word "five" to "seven."

Before the words "principal examiners" change the words "twenty-four" to "forty-three," and in the salary change "five" to "seven."

Before the words "first assistant examiners" change "twenty-four" to "eighty-six," and in the salary change "one thousand eight hundred" to "two thousand four hundred."

Before the words "second assistant examiners" change "twenty-four" to "eighty-six"; omit the parenthetical clause "two of whom may be women"; and in the salary change "one thousand six hundred" to "two thousand one hundred."

Before the words "third assistant examiners" change "twenty-four" to "eighty-six," and in the salary change "four" to "eight."

Insert the following:

"Eighty-six fourth assistant examiners, at a salary of $1,500 a year each."

Cancel the words:

"One machinist, at a salary of $1,600 a year.

"Thirty-five copyists of drawings, at a salary of $1,000 a year each."

Insert the following:

"Four draftsmen, at a salary of $1,000 a year each."

In the clause, one messenger and purchasing clerk," change "purchasing" to "property."

Cancel the words:

"One skilled laborer, at a salary of $1,200 a year.

"Eight attendants in the model room, at a salary of $1,000 a year each.

"Eight attendants in the model room, at a salary of $900 a year each."

So that the part of the section following the words "in the Patent Office," and which refers to said office only, shall read as follows:

"One chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner, at a salary of $3,000 a year.

"Five law examiners, at a salary of $2,750 a year each.

"One examiner of classification, at a salary of $3,600 a year.

"One examiner in charge of interferences, at a salary of $2,700 a year.

"One examiner in charge of trade-marks, at a salary of $2,700 a year.

"Forty-three principal examiners, at a salary of $2,700 a year each.

"Eighty-six first assistant examiners, at a salary of $2,400 a year each.

"Eighty-six second assistant examiners, at a salary of $2,100 a year each.

"Eighty-six third assistant examiners, at a salary of $1,800 a year each.

"Eighty-six fourth assistant examiners, at a salary of $1,500 a year each.

"One librarian, at a salary of $2,000 a year.

"Three skilled draftsmen, at a salary of $1,200 a year each.

"Four draftsmen, at a salary of $1,000 a year each.

"One messenger and property clerk, at a salary of 1,000 a year."

The SPEAKER. There is a typographical error in the last line of the bill. There ought to be a dollar mark before "1,000," or the word "dollars" should follow.

Mr. MANN. We have not reached that stage yet, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. I know we have not, but I thought I would suggest it while I was thinking of it. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, when I first went over this bill it struck me rather favorably, but, as I gather from it now, it will not make any change of any extent if it is passed.

Mr. OLDFIELD. It does not make much change, except that it equalizes the force in the examining department in the Patent Office.

Mr. MANN. How does it equalize it?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Well, it makes the same number in the various grades, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, and as a result it really increases the number of employees in the Patent Office from 334 to 344 in that department.

Mr. MANN. That is only an increase of ten. It adds three law examiners; it adds two examiners in chief; but what it really does is to put into law the salaries and places now carried in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. OLDFIELD. And have been carried for a great many years.

Mr. MANN. Some of them have, and some of them have been newly inserted.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Some of them have been newly inserted, and some carried 8 or 10 years.

Mr. MANN. It would have been a very apt bill before the last legislative bill; but we carried the Fitzgerald amendment to the last legislative bill, which is now a part of the law, providing that the salaries fixed in the bill should be the legal salaries hereafter, and that authorizes both the salaries and the places, and that is all this bill does, with two or three exceptions. I do not know, unless the gentleman can inform me, just what differences there are between this bill and the provisions in the legislative bill.

Mr. OLDFIELD. The difference is in position, rather than the salary propositions. They change some of the positions.

Mr. MANN. Now, I think I know how a bill like this came to be drawn.

Mr. OLDFIELD. It was drawn by the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. MANN. Well, I expect not.

Mr. OLDFIELD. By whom?

Mr. MANN. The chief clerk under the Commissioner of Patents is the gentleman who is now qualified to act as principal examiner. That language was inserted in the law a number of years ago, I think, for the purpose of taking care of a very able gentleman, so I am informed and believe, hailing from the State of Illinois—and that is no discredit to him; I did not do it, and——

Mr. OLDFIELD. He is a very able man.

Mr. MANN. When the legislative bill was up in the House that part was stricken out, but it was restored in the Senate, and it is still in the law. It remained in the bill in conference. I should think that that very bright man, fearing that that provision might be left out of the law, and if left out of the law some one might succeed him——

Mr. OLDFIELD. I do not think so——

Mr. MANN. Concluded he would get up this bill. It is no discredit to him at all, but all these things are taken care of in the existing legislation, all except two or three places. I have named five of them. Let the gentleman from Arkansas name the others.

Mr. OLDFIELD. It is to equalize the examining force in the different divisions. There are to-day 110 fourth assistant examiners, and there are only 83 third assistant examiners, 73 second assistant examiners, and 63 first assistant examiners. They should be made equal in number, so that the promotions will come along regularly. It equalizes the work in the Patent Office. I think it is a very important bill and very necessary.

Mr. MANN. How many are there now?

Mr. OLDFIELD. There are 110 fourth assistant examiners.

Mr. MANN. There are now 63 first assistant examiners at $2,400 each, and 73 second assistants at $2,100 each, and 88 third assistants at $1,800 each, and 110 fourth assistants at $1,500 each. I doubt whether there is any occasion to pass this legislation. But I think these men are overworked and underpaid, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Then why not equalize the number? I think the Commissioner of Patents is right about it, and the previous Commissioner of Patents also was in favor of this legislation, but it was never presented. We did not report it.

The inventors of the country are demanding more thorough searches, and they are entitled to it. The inventors of the country pay the expense of running the Patent Office, and the Patent Office this year will have a surplus of something like $200,000. This bill eventually will only increase the salaries by $61,000 or $62,000 a year, and anything that we can do that will make the searches more thorough and make the patents issued to inventors more valuable and more certain ought to be done, in my opinion; that is, if it is within reason.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with the gentleman in all that general language, but the question here is whether we ought to increase a large number of salaries by unanimous consent without any showing whatever on the subject.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Well, the report shows very clearly, it seems to me, what the necessity is.

Mr. MANN. It can be done at any time by unanimous consent on an appropriation bill.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I do not want to do it that way.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. A paragraph in the report says:

> The total number of increases in the force by the foregoing bill are 15, and the total annual increase of salaries due to this increase in the members of the force and reorganization of the assistant examiners is slightly more than $61,000.

Mr. OLDFIELD. That is right.

Mr. MANN. You see, the commissioner was not very frank. The gentleman from Pennsylvania got the idea from that that this affected only 15 places, and the language is susceptible of that interpretation. But notice that is not what it says. If it did say that, it would not be true.

Mr. MOORE. It says:

> The total number of increases in the force by the foregoing bill are 15.

That is to say, 15 new appointees. That is the inference to be drawn from this language.

Mr. MANN. There are more than that.

Mr. MOORE. And, including the creation of 15 new places, the total increase of salaries would be $61,000.

Mr. OLDFIELD. They really are not new places. The places are there, but it is desired to equalize the examining force in the office.

Mr. MOORE. Has the need for this increase existed for a long time?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes; ever since I have been on the committee.

Mr. MANN. I think there ought to be a considerable increase in the number and salaries of these men in the Patent Office, but I do not think a bill of this kind ought to be passed by unanimous consent. I therefore object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12919) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, and of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved June 17, 1910, as amended by an act approved February 11, 1913, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That any person who has made, or shall make, homestead entry of lands of the character herein described, and who has not submitted final proof thereon, or who having submitted final proof still owns and occupies the land thus entered, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, contiguous to his first entry, which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres: Provided, That the land originally entered and that covered by the additional entry shall have first been designated as subject to this act, as provided by section 1 thereof.

"SEC. 4. That at the time of making final proof, as provided in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes, the entryman under this act shall, in addition to the proofs and affidavits required under said section, prove by himself and two credible witnesses that at least one-sixteenth of the area embraced in such entry was continuously cultivated for agricultural crops other than native grasses, beginning with the second year of the entry, and that at least one-eighth of the area embraced in the entry was so continuously cultivated beginning with the third year of the entry: Provided, That any qualified person who has heretofore made, or who hereafter makes, additional entry under the provisions of section 3 of this act to an entry upon which final proof has not been made, may be allowed to perfect title to his original entry by showing compliance with the provisions of section 2291 of the Revised Statutes, respecting such original entry, and thereafter in making proof upon his additional entry shall be credited with residence maintained upon his original entry from date of such original entry, but the cultivation required upon entries made under this act must be shown respecting such additional entry, which cultivation, while it may be made upon either the original or additional entry or upon both entries, must be cultivation in addition to that relied upon and used in making proof upon the original entry; or, if he elects, his original and additional entries may be considered as one, with full credit for residence upon and improvement made upon his original entry, in which event the amount of cultivation herein required shall apply to the total area of the combined entry, and proof may be made upon such combined entry whenever it can be shown that the cultivation required by this section has been performed; and to this end the time within which proof must be made upon such a combined entry is hereby extended to seven years from the date of the original entry: Provided further, That where an entry is made as additional to an entry upon which final proofs has heretofore been submitted by an entryman who still owns and occupies the land thus entered, the entryman in making proof upon his additional entry shall be credited with residence maintained upon his original entry from date thereof, but the cultivation required upon entries made under this act must be shown respecting such additional entry and must be performed upon the land included therein to the extent and for the period required in connection with original entries under this act, proof of which must be submitted within five years from and after the date of the additional entry: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to require residence upon the combined entry in excess of the period of residence as required by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 23, after the word "has," strike out the word "heretofore" and insert the word "theretofore."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the present enlarged homestead act permits an entry on 320 acres of arid land, land which is nonirrigable and does not contain timber.

Mr. MOORE. That is the law now?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is the law now. In addition to that it permits the entryman, before final proof, if his original entry was 160 acres of this arid land, to take an additional 160 acres.

Mr. MANN. That is where he has already taken 160 acres?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; where he has already taken 160 acres it permits him to take an additional 160 acres of this arid land before final proof. Now, this bill aims to give the right to take an additional 160 acres of contiguous land to one who has already made final proof.

Mr. MOORE. That is to say, a man who has already acquired 160 acres——

Mr. SINNOTT. A man who has already acquired 160 acres——

Mr. MOORE. Can by virtue of this law acquire an additional 160 acres?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE. To bring him up to an equality with the man who takes 320 acres under the new law.

Mr. SINNOTT. Provided his original entry is of arid land.

Mr. MOORE. Provided it is of the same quality of land.

Mr. SINNOTT. And contiguous.

Mr. MOORE. In looking over the bill hurriedly I find one provision which says:

> That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to require residence upon the combined entry in excess of the period of residence as required by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is merely the present law, and the entire bill is really a reenactment of the present law with the necessary changes to give to the entryman after final proof this privilege of taking an additional 160 acres.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman state the merits of this proposition? If a man already has 160 acres, why does he want an additional 160 acres? Is he unable to make a living on 160 acres?

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, the theory is that the land will not be designated as arid land if the entry is of such a character that the entryman can make a living upon the 160 acres. In addition to that, there is another reason: Frequently an entryman applies for the additional 160 acres before making final proof. After his application is filed, on account of delays in the survey, and sometimes by a contest, he is compelled to go to final proof on his original entry, and therefore his subsequent application dies.

Mr. MOORE. What is the position of the man who has 160 acres adjoining whose entry there is no contiguous land by which he can benefit under this act?

Mr. SINNOTT. He is not benefited at all.

Mr. MOORE. Then, the man who is surrounded by neighbors, where there is available no contiguous land, is simply shut out from the advantages that the other man can obtain under this bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. He gets nothing under this bill.

Mr. MANN. They have got another bill to let him in.

Mr. MOORE. Before I consent to the passage of this bill I should like to have the gentleman, who is well informed, or some member of the committee, state whether or not it is true, as is sometimes asserted from the Department of the Interior, that a man can not exist and raise a family on 160 acres of land.

Mr. SINNOTT. There are many quarter sections of 160 acres of which that is true.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I will tell him where he can find 10,000 acres of land on which a man can not raise a family, on which he can not raise a spear of grass.

Mr. MOORE. Of course there is desert land or wholly arid land. I can not understand and I do not assume that a man would be foolish enough to take 160 acres of wholly arid land.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. There are some very foolish people in the West.

Mr. MOORE. There are some who go there from the East.

Mr. DONOVAN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DONOVAN. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut demands the regular order. The regular order is, Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MOORE. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. Answering the last inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. Have not I the right to reserve an objection in order that an explanation may be made of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the regular order is demanded.

Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If a gentleman seeks information on a bill, is it wholly within the power of a Member, the gentleman from Connecticut, for instance, to force the Member to object or not to object, thus forcing its passage or defeat without any discussion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. I have made a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has held that the regular order is to put the question; is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say something on this amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of woman suffrage and to include therein an article written by Hon. William J. Bryan, as published in The Commoner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of woman suffrage and to include therein a statement by the Hon. William J. Bryan. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from California if he has any objection to placing in the RECORD together with the speech that he refers to the resolution adopted by the late Democratic caucus on the question of woman suffrage, and if he further has any objection to placing in the RECORD along with the speech the statement made by the President recently to a delegation of ladies interested in woman suffrage?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am preparing, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order, and the regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MONDELL. I object, unless the gentleman from California will include the other matters I have referred to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming objects. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, my five minutes has not expired on this amendment. There is no use in trying to rush the matter through. I want to say that many men get up and take much time here, and I believe that ordinarily a Member ought to have a right to express his general views on some subjects.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think, in view of the fact that there are other bills on the calendar and that the hour is getting late, that he ought to let this bill take its course so that other Members can have their bills considered?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from California has got his bill through.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, may I answer the gentleman?

Mr. BURNETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Is there any five-minute rule in operation?

The SPEAKER. There is not. The gentleman said he had five minutes on an amendment, but the Chair heard no amendment offered by the gentleman from California. The gentleman from California asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and the gentleman from Wyoming practically objected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make another request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks on the bill H. R. 1991, which was disposed of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks on the bill H. R. 1991.

Mr. MANN. What was that bill?

Mr. RAKER. It was the bill H. R. 1991, referring to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend to include the suffrage statement to which he has referred as a part of his remarks?

Mr. RAKER. If I get permission to extend my remarks, I shall put in what I think is legitimate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4545) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after section 274 thereof three new sections, to be numbered, respectively, 274a, 274b, and 274c, reading as follows:

"SEC. 274a. That in case any of said courts shall find that a suit at law should have been brought in equity or a suit in equity should have been brought at law, the court shall order any amendments to the pleadings which may be necessary to conform them to the proper practice. Any party to the suit shall have the right, at any stage of the cause, to amend his pleadings so as to obviate the objection that his suit was not brought on the right side of the court. The cause shall proceed and be determined upon such amended pleadings. All testimony taken before such amendment shall stand as testimony in the cause with like effect as if the pleadings had been originally in the amended form.

"SEC. 274b. That in all actions at law equitable defenses may be interposed by answer, plea, or replication without the necessity of filing a bill on the equity side of the court. The defendant shall have the same rights in such case as if he had filed a bill embodying the defense of seeking the relief prayed for in such answer or plea. Equitable relief respecting the subject matter of the suit may thus be obtained by answer or plea. In case affirmative relief is prayed in such answer or plea, the plaintiff shall file a replication. Review of the judgment or decree entered in such case shall be regulated by rule of court. Whether such review be sought by writ of error or by appeal the appellate court shall have full power to render such judgment upon the records as law and justice shall require.

"SEC. 274c. That where, in any suit brought in or removed from any State court to any district of the United States, the jurisdiction of the district court is based upon the diverse citizenship of the parties, and such diverse citizenship in fact existed at the time the suit was brought or removed, though defectively alleged, either party may amend at any stage of the proceedings and in the appellate court upon such terms as the court may impose, so as to show on the record such diverse citizenship and jurisdiction, and thereupon such suit shall be proceeded with the same as though the diverse citizenship had been fully and correctly pleaded at the inception of the suit, or, if it be a removed case, in the petition for removal."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. I am anxious to expedite the general dam bill and get it out of the way, and I understand the sundry civil conference report will probably be brought up. I would like that additional hour, if possible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, my understanding was to-day that the general debate on the dam bill would last certainly through to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. So that we may be assured if we meet at 11 o'clock in the morning the House will not proceed to read the general dam bill for amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand from the gentleman in charge of the bill, Mr. ADAMSON, that he does not expect to take the bill up under the five-minute rule to-morrow.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it will not be possible, in my judgment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE GENERAL DAM ACT.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the amendments which have been tentatively agreed upon by a number of gentlemen interested in the general dam bill have already been printed, and I would like to print in the RECORD for the convenience of Members the new form of the bill, as remodeled by the amendments. I have also an additional statement or resolution passed by the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, Cal., which I will also ask to print in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not care anything about the printing of the resolutions. I will ask the gentleman if the bill now proposed to be printed is different from the bill form already printed?

Mr. ADAMSON. The proposed amendments are printed in it.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman want to do—simply insert in the RECORD what has already been printed in bill form?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; in bill form.

Mr. MANN. It is not something new?

Mr. ADAMSON. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill and the resolution referred to are as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 23, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That when consent has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress, either directly or indirectly through any duly authorized official or officials of the United States, to any persons to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purpose across or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dam shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for such dam and all accessory works, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such dam and accessory works; and after such approval it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans or specifications either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of such plans or specifications has previously been submitted to and received the approval of (the Chief of Engineers and of) the Secretary of War [and the Chief of Engineers].

"SEC. 2. That as a part of such approval such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that the persons constructing or maintaining such dam shall construct, maintain, and operate in connection therewith, without expense to the United States, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structure or structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers or Congress then may deem necessary in the interests of navigation, in accordance with plans made a part of such approval; and also that in case such facilities of navigation shall not be made a part of such original approval and construction, whenever Congress shall deem such facilities necessary, the persons owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States free water power or power generated from water power for building and operating such constructions, and in such original approval, at the discretion of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, may be required to maintain and operate such lock without expense to the United States [: Provided, That whenever Congress has heretofore provided, either directly or indirectly, through any official or department of the United States Government, for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a lock, free of cost to the United States, as may be deemed necessary for navigation by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers in any dam in navigable waters authorized by law at the date of passage of this act, in all such cases such obligation shall continue to be of full force and effect].

"SEC. 3. That as a part of said approval the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall require that the plans, specifications, and location for any dam shall be such as shall be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway in question for the uses of navigation and for the full development of its water power and for other beneficial public purposes, and best adapted to conserve and utilize, in the interests of navigation and water-power development, the water resources of the region.

"SEC. 4. That as a part of the conditions and stipulations such approval shall provide—

"(a) For reimbursement to the United States of all expenses incurred by the United States with reference to the project, including the cost of any investigation necessary for the approval of the plans as heretofore provided, and for such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interest of the United States.

"(b) (For the payment to the United States of reasonable charges for the benefits which may accrue to such project through the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of headwater improvements, including storage reservoirs, on any such stream, such charges to be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and Chief) [For the payments to the United States of reasonable charges for the benefits which may accrue to such project through the construction, operation, and maintenance, in and about such streams, by the United States of headwater improvements of every kind, nature, and description, including storage reservoirs or forested watersheds or land owned, located, or reserved by the United States at the headwaters of any navigable stream for the development, improvement, or preservation of navigation in such stream in which such dam may be located. Such charges shall be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and Chief] of Engineers and to be based upon a reasonable compensation equitably apportioned among the grantee and others similarly situated upon the same stream receiving benefits by reason of increase of flow past their water-power structures artificially caused by such headwater improvements, the total charges to all such beneficiaries from any such headwater improvement not to exceed in any one year an amount equal to five per centum of the total investment cost, in addition to the necessary annual expense of the operation of such headwater improvement.

"(c) (That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and accessory works there may be occupied and used such lands of the United States as may be necessary therefor, and in consideration thereof the owner of such dam shall pay to the United States such charges, not to exceed an annual payment of 5 per cent of the fair value of such lands, as may be fixed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and in fixing such charges consideration shall be taken of the benefits accruing thereby to the interests of navigation as well as to the business of such grantee) [That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of any project under this act for the promotion of navigation, the grantee may, with the consent of the Secretary of War, use and occupy, when necessary for carrying out the project, lands acquired by the United States through purchase or condemnation and any part of the public lands withdrawn by the President from entry or disposition for the sole purpose of promoting navigation, which the President may do as provided in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawal of public lands in certain cases,' approved June 25, 1910. For any of such lands so used the grantee shall pay to the United States such charges as may be fixed by the Secretary of War].

"(d) For the payment or securing the payment to the United States of such sums and in such manner as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem reasonable and just substantially to restore conditions upon such stream as to navigability as existing at the time of such approval, whenever the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall determine that navigation would be injured by reason of the construction, maintenance, and operation of such dam and its accessory works.

"SEC. 5. That the operation of navigation facilities which shall be constructed as a part of or in connection with any such dam, whether at the expense of such grantee or of the United States, shall at all times be subject to such reasonable rules and regulations in the interest of navigation, including the control of the level of the pool caused by any such dam, as shall be made by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and in the use and operation of such navigation facilities the interests of navigation shall be paramount to the uses of such dam by such grantee for power purposes. Such rules and regulations may include the maintenance and operation by such grantee, at its own expense, of such lights and other signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers and such fishways as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, and for failure to comply with any such rule or regulation such grantee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not less than $500 for each month's default, in addition to other penalties herein prescribed or provided by law.

"SEC. 6. That the persons constructing, maintaining, or operating any dam or appurtenant or accessory works, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise.

"SEC. 7. That any grantee who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, and every month such grantee shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such grantee to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to said penalties the Attorney General may, on request of the Secretary of War, institute proper proceedings in the district court of the United States in the district in which such structure or any of its accessory works may, in whole or in part, exist, for the purpose of having such violation stopped by injunction, mandamus, or other process; and any such district court shall have jurisdiction over all such proceedings and shall have the power to make and enforce all writs, orders, and decrees necessary to compel the compliance with the requirements of this act and the lawful orders of the Secretary of War and the performance of any condition or stipulation imposed under the provisions of this act; and if the unlawful maintenance and operation are shown to be such as shall require a revocation of all rights and privileges held under authority of this act, the court may decree such revocation. In case of such a decree, the court may wind up the business of such grantee conducted under the rights in question, and may decree the sale of the dam and all appurtenant property constructed or acquired under authority of this act, and may declare such dam and accessory works to be an unreasonable obstruction to navigation and cause their removal at the expense of the grantee owning or controlling the same, except when the United States has been previously reimbursed for such removal, or may provide for the sale of the dam and all accessory and appurtenant works constructed under authority of this act for the further development of water power, and may make and enforce such other and further orders and decrees as equity demands; and in case of such a sale for the further development of water power the vendee shall take the rights and privileges and shall perform the duties which belonged to the previous grantee, and shall assume such outstanding obligations and liabilities arising out of the maintenance and operation of said dam and accessory works for power purposes as the court may deem equitable in the premises.

"Sec. 8. That no property or project installed and operated under the provisions or benefits of this act shall be assigned or transferred except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War, except by trust deed or mortgage issued for the purpose of financing the business of such owner, and any successor or assign of such property or project, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, or foreclosure sale or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held, and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original owner hereunder.

"SEC. 9. That the rights herein granted shall continue for a period of 50 years from and after the date of the completion of the (structure) [dam] described in the original approval, and after the expiration of said 50 years such rights shall continue until compensation has been made to said grantee for the fair value of its property, as hereinafter provided [, or until said rights and privileges are revoked as provided in this act, or until action by Congress shall have provided for the disposition of the project or for extending the consent of Congress and fixing the period of extension, as well as providing such additional terms and conditions of consent as Congress may deem wise].

"Sec. 10. That at any time after the expiration of said 50 years the Secretary of War may terminate the rights hereby granted upon giving to the owners thereof one year's notice in writing of such termination, and upon the taking over by the United States, or by any person authorized by Congress, of all of the property dependent in whole or in part for its usefulness upon the rights hereby granted, which shall include all necessary and appurtenant property created or acquired and valuable or serviceable in the distribution of water or in the generation, transmission, and distribution of power, and all other property the value and usefulness of which would be destroyed or seriously impaired by such termination, and upon paying the fair value of said property, together with the cost, to the grantee of the lock or locks or other aids to navigation and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, and assuming all contracts entered into prior to the receipt by it of said notice of termination which have the approval of the duly constituted public authority having jurisdiction thereof, or which were entered into in good faith and at a reasonable rate, in view of all the circumstances existing at the time such contracts were made. The fair value of said property and the reasonableness and good faith of such contracts shall be determined by agreement between the Secretary of War and the owners of such property, and in the event of their failure to agree, then by proceedings instituted by the United States, or by any person authorized by Congress, in the district court of the United States within which any portion of such dam may be located. In the determination of the value of said property upon the termination of said grant as above provided no (value) [compensation] shall be claimed by or allowed for the consent hereby granted, nor for good will, profit in pending contracts, nor other conditions of current or prospective business [; nor shall compensation for any land acquired from the United States or any State or subdivision thereof exceed the cost originally paid by the grantee].

"Sec. 11. That in all cases where the electric current generated from or by any of the projects provided for in this act [including leases under section 14 hereof] shall enter into interstate or foreign commerce, the rates, charges, and service for the same to the consumers thereof shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable and unduly discriminatory charge, rate, or service therefor is hereby prohibited and declared to be illegal; and whenever the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that the rates or charges demanded or collected on the service rendered for such electric current are unjust, unreasonable, or unduly discriminatory, upon complaint made therefor and full hearing thereon the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what shall be the just and reasonable rates and charges therefor to be observed as the maximum to be charged and the service to be rendered; and in case of the violation of any such order of the Secretary of War the provisions of this act relative to forfeiture and failure to comply shall apply. That in the valuation for rate-making purposes of the property existing under said approval of the project there may be considered any lock or locks, or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures required by the United States.

"The Secretary of War is further authorized and directed to include among the conditions for his approval of any plans or any project herein provided, [including leases under section 14 hereof,] as an express condition thereof, a clause reserving to the Secretary of War the same rights, powers, and duties set forth in this section, together with the same penalty for violation thereof: Provided, That whenever the State in which such current shall be used shall have provided by law adequate regulation for rates, charges, and service to the consumers for such electric current, and such regulation shall not be unduly discriminatory or unjust against the service or charges in any other State arising from the use of the power from the same project, and such facts shall be established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, then in such case the provisions of this section shall not apply to the rates, charges, and service in and for such State.

"SEC. 12. That the grantee shall commence the construction of the dam and accessory works within one year from the date of the approval herein provided, and shall thereafter, in good faith and with due diligence, prosecute such construction, and shall, within the further term of three years, complete [the dam] and [afterwards shall] put in commercial operation such part of the ultimate development as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall deem necessary to supply the reasonable needs of the then available market, and shall, from time to time thereafter, construct such portion of the balance of such ultimate development as said Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers may direct and within the time specified by said Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, so as to supply adequately the reasonable market demands until such ultimate development shall be completed; and extensions of the periods herein specified, not to exceed two years, may be granted by the Secretary of War, on recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, when, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted thereby. In case the grantee shall not commence actual construction within the time herein prescribed, or as extended by the Secretary of War, then the authority as to such grantee shall terminate, and in case any dam and accessory works be not completed within the time herein specified or extended as herein provided, then the Attorney General, upon the request of the Secretary of War, shall institute proper proceedings in the proper district court of the United States for the revocation of said authority, the sale of the works constructed, and such other equitable relief as the case may demand, as provided for in section 8 of this act.

"SEC. 13. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be authorized in accordance with the provisions of this act whenever Congress determines that the conditions of consent have been violated. In such case the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in such dam.

"Sec. 14. That the Secretary of War, upon the advice and with the approval of the Chief of Engineers, may lease to any applicant having complied with the laws of the State in which the dam is constructed or to be constructed by the United States, the right to develop power from the surplus water over and above that required for navigation at any navigation dam now or hereafter constructed, either with or without contribution by the applicant, and owned by the United States, and on such terms as may be deemed by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for the best interests of the United States, and in awarding such lease preference shall be given to the applicant whose plans are deemed by any action of Congress or by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers to be best adapted to conserve and utilize in the public interest the navigation and water-power resources of the region [: Provided, That no lease shall be made to any private corporation or applicant operating for private profit for a longer term than 50 years, and that the provisions of this act, so far as applicable, shall be made a part of the terms and conditions of any such lease], and all such leases and the parties thereto and the terms and conditions thereof shall be reported annually to Congress.

"Sec. 15. That no works constructed, maintained, and operated under the provisions of this act shall be owned, trusteed, or controlled by any device or in any manner so that they may form a part of, or in any manner effect, a combination in the form of an unlawful trust or form the subject of an unlawful contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric energy or in restraint of the generation, sale, or distribution of electric energy, or the exercises of any other business contemplated: Provided, however, That it shall be lawful, under the approval of the Secretary of War, for different grantees to exchange and interchange currents, to assist one another whenever necessary, by supplementing the currents or power, and enable any grantee to secure assistance to carry on the business and supply his customers, accounting therefor and paying therefor under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

"In no case shall such an arrangement be permitted to raise the price, render unjust or unfair any practice, work, or discrimination, or operate in restraint of trade.

"SEC. 16. That the word 'persons' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations. The word 'dam' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and plural, as the case demands.

"Sec. 17. (That all provisions in this act contained fixing conditions upon which the consent of Congress is granted for the construction of dams shall apply alike to all existing enterprises in operation or authorized, as well as to new projects to which the consent of Congress may hereafter be granted. All conflicting provisions contained in any act of Congress granting consent to the construction of any dam are hereby repealed, and all such previous authorizations are so altered, amended, and modified hereby as to conform to all of the conditions and provisions incorporated in this act.") [That all of the provisions in sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 11, and 15 of this act fixing conditions of the consent of Congress and regulating practices and charges between the grantees and their customers for the construction, maintenance, and operation of dams in the navigable waters of the United States shall apply alike to all existing enterprises in operation or previously authorized in the navigable waters of the United States in which the approval and supervision of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers are required, as well as to new projects in the navigable waters of the United States for which the consent of Congress may hereafter be granted, in the construction, maintenance, and operation of which the approval and supervision of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers shall be required. All conflicting provisions contained in any previous act of Congress granting consent for the construction, maintenance, and operation of any dam in the navigable waters of the United States in the construction, maintenance, and operation of which the approval and supervision of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers were required are hereby repealed, and all such previous authorizations are so altered, amended, and modified hereby as to conform to all the conditions and provisions in said sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 11, and 15 of this act.]

[SEC. 18. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to irrigation or power dams or other projects under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture upon the public lands of the United States, nor grants to municipal corporations for the use of water power or water power for municipal purposes, heretofore directly authorized by Congress or indirectly authorized through some department or official of the Government of the United States.]

IN RE WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

JULY 9, 1914.

"Be it resolved, That the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce respectfully urges upon Congress the necessity of passing water-power legislation at this session of Congress, of such nature, while protecting the public interest, as shall make it possible to secure capital for development purposes and establish a definite and comprehensive policy for the utilization of water power under Government control.

"Be it resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, to the Secretaries of War and of the Interior, to the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and to Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States."

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at the regular meeting held Wednesday, July 8, 1914.

LOUIS M. COLE, President.

Attest:

FRANK WIGGINS, Secretary.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. Con. Res. 28. Concurrent resolution accepting the statue of George Washington Glick, presented by the State of Kansas, and tendering thanks of Congress therefor; to the Committee on the Library.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4545) just objected to be restored to its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 4545 shall be passed over without objection. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, is that a bridge bill?

Mr. DUPRÉ. No.

Mr. MOORE. I understood the request to be that it should be restored to its place on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. That is true; it is the same thing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection. Why not consider the bill now?

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has withdrawn his objection to the bill H. R. 4545. May we not consider it now by unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. We have not yet passed it by.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection to the present consideration of the bill. The Chair will put the question over again. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of this bill by incorporating in the RECORD a report which I made from the Committee on the Judiciary, which report was prepared by Mr. Everett P. Wheeler, of New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill H. R. 4545. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADDITIONAL LAND FOR PUBLIC BUILDING SITE AT RICHMOND, VA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11822) to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional land for the post office, courthouse, and custombouse in the city of Richmond, Va.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the necessity of this, or the emergency, if there be one, why this bill should be passed by unanimous consent?

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be necessary to take up the time, as I propose to object to the bill. I have no objection to its keeping its place on the calendar, but I do not think this is the time or place to pass it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his candor, because I did not want to trespass upon the time of the House if there was to be objection. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill S. 485, a bill creating an additional judgeship in southern California.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill creating a new judgeship for southern California. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman is to confine his remarks to the bill to which he has referred?

Mr. RAKER. That is what I stated, and when I state upon that bill it means that. I will get, if I can, irrespective of these unanimous-consent objections on the other side, the right to extend my remarks upon the question——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, then I object. The gentleman will never get anything by threats.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. I am always here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not get things by threats.

Mr. RAKER. I have been here right along——

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen are out of order.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Tuesday, July 21, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Thoroughfare Bay, N. SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 21, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O God, our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that a way has been opened for our approach into Thy presence; that we can talk with Thee as a friend talketh face to face with a friend; and that we can come boldly to the throne of grace and make our requests known unto Thee. Surely our hope is in Thee. Our strength cometh from Thee. Amid the difficulties of the way we seek Thy hand. If we meet perplexing problems, may the light of Thy truth give us understanding. If doubts becloud our sky, may we see new visions of Thy law. And may our steps this day be ordered by the Lord. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk three short articles on three of the bills that are now pending before the Senate, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York American, July 20.]

ONE SERIOUS PERIL IN THE RAYBURN BILL.

The Rayburn bill, as rewritten by Mr. Brandeis, and now being considered by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, affords an immediate illustration of the irresistible tendency of seemingly conservative railroad legislation toward Government ownership.

This bill has for its purpose the supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission of all future issues of securities—stocks, bonds, debentures, etc.—by railroads. The commission will be vested with the power to prohibit the issuance of any block of such securities unless, upon examination, it concludes that real need existed for borrowing the money, and that the volume of securities issued was not unduly great.

So far, so good. Wildcat methods of railroad finance, overcapitalization, buying a feeder at a price and bonding it for double the price paid, consolidations like the one planned between the New York Central and the Lake Shore, with the resultant increase of capital by some hundred millions or more, all join to make the need of some such legislation evident.

But with the new issues once authorized, the railroads will at once claim that the Government is morally bound to see that no regulative legislation shall prevent the earning of money sufficient to make interest payments.

To-day the roads base their demand for an increase in freight rates largely upon the plea that the demands made upon them by Government regulation necessitate increased earnings.

If they shall be permitted, under national authorities, to turn their great volume of ill-digested securities, hundreds of millions of which stand for mere water, into new bonds, they will instantly demand that the Government stand responsible for these bonds.

If under private ownership the roads are unable to meet these fixed charges their manager will turn them over to the Government. At what price? Obviously at the value for which the Government has authorized them to issue bonds and stock. It is therefore the business of Congress, which still has the Rayburn bill in hand, to see to it that the Government supervision over the volume of securities shall not end by making the Government take over the railroads at an exaggerated and extortionate figure.

[From the New York Tribune, Monday, July 20, 1914.]

THE SENATE LOSING INTEREST IN THE DENATURED ANTITRUST BILLS.

It is just about a month since Mr. Wilson told the Virginia Editorial Association that the administration's program of antitrust legislation was "complete" and predicted its speedy enactment. But enactment still lingers. Although the House bills, which constituted the finished Wilson program, have been torn to pieces and patched together again, the Senate is still reluctant to pass them. They have been greatly improved by the elimination of crudities all along the line. But even so, the Democratic leaders in the Senate can get up very little enthusiasm over them.

These leaders realize that a vast amount of useless labor has gone into an effort to do something which really doesn't need to be done. The administration started out with the idea that it was necessary to supplement and invigorate the Sherman antitrust law. Mr. Clayton and the other House antitrust dentists tried to put a lot of fine new teeth into the Sherman Act. But at practically every point at which the present provisions against monopoly or conspiracy to restrain trade were sought to be supplemental the experiment broke down. The proposed new law did not clarify or strengthen the existing statute. It simply overloaded and confused it. The Senate committees have been busy for the last four or five weeks ripping out the Clayton-Rayburn-Covington dentistry. What they have seen of the work of those bunglers has virtually convinced them that the Sherman law doesn't need new teeth at all.

What is the advantage, for instance, of giving an interstate trade commission power to punish interstate corporations engaging in "unfair competition" when nobody knows what such a term means? If unfair methods lead to restraint of trade, they can be dealt with already under the Sherman law. If they don't lead to restraint of trade, the commission doesn't need to worry about them. Why strain and cogitate to meet a situation which it isn't necessary to meet?

It is exactly the same with the Clayton-Gompers trick amendments giving, or merely pretending to give, union labor and farmers' organizations exemption from prosecution for violations of the antitrust law. If the amendments grant union laborers and farmers no privileges which they do not already have—as the President insists is the case—what is gained by merely saying that what is the law is the law? But if it is intended to offer special class privileges to two special classes, why incur the displeasure and enmity of all other classes? The National Association of Retail Dealers, for example, is about to descend on Congress to ask why its organization shouldn't be allowed to have the same exemption as is being offered to the farmers and the Federation of Labor people. Why, indeed, shouldn't it? If they are not to be prosecuted for carrying out the legitimate objects of their association—whatever those objects may be—the organized retailers ought not to be prosecuted for clashing to a similar extent with the Sherman law.

The antitrust bills in the original form in which Mr. Wilson approved them were destructive and vicious. In the form which the Senate committees are giving them they are far less dangerous. But, on the other hand, they are degenerating more and more into mere surplusage. No public advantage will result from passing them. It is the realization of this fact that makes them drag so woefully in the Senate. Nobody there is able to get excited over measures whose only thunder is in the title page.

[From the New York Times, Monday, July 20, 1914.]

THE TRUST DEBATES.

While Congress is working overtime upon the trinity of antitrust bills there is proceeding in the country a second debate of another sort, of which an excellent example is afforded by the address of Lincoln Cromwell to the knit-goods jobbers, reported in Saturday's Times. He speaks for substantial middle-class business, neither the biggest nor the smallest. It does not occur to the business men whom he represents to oppose the legislation which is being thrust upon them. Their aim now is "to keep it along lines which are helpful to honest merchants rather than to theorists and politicians, with their fads and demagogy." Especially apropos is Mr. Cromwell's reference to the completeness with which the Federal courts are doing under the old law what Congress is bustling about as though there were no law to accomplish what it wants. In the decree against the Thread Trust as a combination in unreasonable restraint of trade no less than 15 practices are specifically forbidden. Blacklists, rebates, buying out competitors, fixing of resale prices, giving of bonuses, pooling of orders to get special discounts, "fighting brands," flying squadrons of salesmen to undersell competition in restricted areas, the limitation of traders from trading with others than the trust, misrepresentation of competitors' goods, threats of prosecution without intention to prosecute, selling below cost, differences of freight being considered, "free goods"—these are among unreasonable restraints of trade forbidden without the help of the new laws. It is not suggested that these are all the unreasonable restraints there are. They are merely the restraints forbidden in a single case. The power to forbid these extends to the power to forbid any other restraints contrary to commercial morality. The interesting thing about the list is that it includes so many obnoxious practices which it is designed to forbid as "unfair competition." It makes no difference whether they are forbidden as unreasonable restraints or as unfair competition, so long as they are forbidden; but it is not desirable unnecessarily to introduce a new phrase which can not be completely defined for as long a time as it has required to learn what the earlier phrase means.

Another interesting symposium to contrast with the debates in Congress is the referendum upon the Clayton bill by the United States Chamber of Commerce. The votes were taken of 559 organizations in 36 States. Nine of the ten proposals which were voted upon were rejected by majorities ranging from 6 to 1 to 20 to 1. The adverse vote is stronger than this, for many organizations declined to vote at all, on the ground that there is no demand for legislation of this sort at this time. The following votes may be given as examples:

1. The committee recommends that there should be no attempt by statute to forbid discrimination in prices of commodities; 531 in favor, 22 opposed.

2. The committee recommends that a proposal to compel persons controlling the products of mines to sell to all applicants "who may be responsible" is wrong in principle and unworkable in practice; 527 in favor, 32 opposed.

3. The committee recommends that there should not be a statutory prohibition of conditions accompanying sales and leases to the effect that buyers or lessees can not handle or use the products of competitors; 514 in favor, 35 opposed.

4. The committee recommends that the final decree in an equity suit brought by the Government which establishes the existence or the nonexistence of a restraint of trade or of a monopoly should be conclusive evidence as to the same general fact in private actions brought against the same defendants under the antitrust laws; 484 in favor, 62 opposed.

Space fails to give the rest of the proposals of the Clayton bill so overwhelmingly favored by Congress and so overwhelmingly opposed in the debates among those to whom the law is to apply. May it not be that the popularity of the trinity of antitrust laws is so great among the classes of lawmakers which Mr. Cromwell describes because they will not have to obey the law, business being out of their line? If business men were legislating, would they enact the laws which they condemn when proposed by nonbusiness lawmakers? Finally, what remains of the antitrust legislation which is pending if there is deducted from it what the courts are now preventing and punishing without the assistance of the new laws, and what the representative business men of the country vote against with almost unanimity, and yet accept with the excellent temper shown by Mr. Cromwell on behalf of those for whom he speaks?

The President continues to consult business men with commendable openmindedness. He is not finding them rebellious, and can count upon their cooperation in just that degree to which he defers to their sentiments. Yet in all the reports of the consultations at the White House there is no such cordiality as in the echoes of the President's remarks to the effect that big business is as patriotic and moral as any other sort of business. The Chicago business men who went to advise the President regarding his antitrust proposals said of these remarks, "No more hopeful, helpful, finer words have ever come from the White House, and we believe that they will meet with the Nation's hearty approval." If either Congress or the President has elicited any such cordial expressions regarding the antitrust bills they have not been published. It is idle to contend that business wants the new trust bills. On the other hand, business will accommodate itself to them with resignation, and, as Mr. Cromwell says, will guide them into the right direction after they leave Congress.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Norris	Sterling
Borah	Cummins	Overman	Stone
Brady	Gallinger	Page	Swanson
Brandegee	Hughes	Perkins	Thomas
Bristow	James	Pittman	Thompson

Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	White
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Works
Clapp	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Smoot

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent and is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on account of illness.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I wish also to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], who has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I wish also to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. He is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

IMPROVEMENT OF TRINITY RIVER, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] published in the RECORD a purported interview with one M. J. Wirth, an interview in the Washington Post, in which that gentleman ridiculed the Trinity River. I wired to Texas to find out something about M. J. Wirth, and I send the reply to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

DALLAS, TEX., July 20.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Yours date. No such person as M. J. Wirth known in Fort Worth by chamber of commerce or other organizations, nor is his name listed telephone or city directory. Statement that Trinity River is sought by interurban absurd on face. Distance by river between Dallas and Fort Worth approximately 50 miles, as against 30 miles air line over prairie country. Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce adopted resolution listed below March 19, 1914, approving improvement of Trinity. Steamboat has been purchased for navigation of the Trinity, and is now en route to Dallas under own steam to enter the trade. Water in Trinity at normal stage, and there is no truth whatever in statement of Wirth. Have been unable to locate him here or in Fort Worth or to find one who knows such a person. Dallas citizens have spent $2,000,000 of their own money in sites for locks and dams and bond issues for raising bridges and diverting sewage, and are considering spending twice as much more to supplement Government work. The canalization of the Trinity will mean a saving of $9,000 a day in Dallas freight bills. Dallas is not a seaport, but it is a port of entry with a present volume of business through its port many times greater than that of cities three times her size. This is in no sense a political project. The Trinity movement is a commercial proposition, and Dallas is supporting it for the reduction it will bring in freight rates, which will benefit the whole State. There is no pork barrel or politics in it, and this is well known to every bona fide citizen of Texas who is at all informed.

Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce resolution is as follows:

Whereas the Federal Government has designated the Trinity River for improvement; and

Whereas the improvement of this river for navigation will bring water rates into Fort Worth trade territory; and

Whereas Fort Worth is vitally interested in the prosperity and development of all of the counties in Texas through which the Trinity River runs; and

Whereas we have, as business men of Fort Worth, in years past commended the action of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and that of the Federal Government in this work in making the Trinity River navigable: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call attention of the Texas Senators and Congressmen to the fact that the interests of Fort Worth can be vastly developed by the completion of the work on the Trinity River; that we favor an increase in the present appropriation in sufficient amount so that this work can go forward promptly. We believe that no other development can so effectually tend to solve the transportation problems in Texas, and we urge immediate action on the part of all Representatives in Congress to secure prompt and favorable appropriation for this purpose.

JOHN W. PHILP,
Chairman Trinity River Committee,
Dallas Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Texas if the object of this appropriation for the improvement of the river is to reduce freight rates, which reduction the people of Fort Worth and Dallas will enjoy after the improvement is made?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is partly the object.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is an appropriation, then, to secure a reduction of the freight rates which the people of that immediate vicinity now have to pay.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is partly the object.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think that an appropriation of public money for the purpose of reducing freight rates in some particular locality is a proper expenditure of public money?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Oh, I said that was partly the object. It will not only reduce freight rates for that locality but for an entire section. It may even have a favorable effect on Kansas.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a Texas subsidy; that is all.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is it the purpose of the Senator to have toll gates established on this river and charge tolls for the use of it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The question of subsidy does not enter into the question of improvement at all.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator is not in favor of establishing toll gates on this river?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am not, because the improvement will be a general benefit to which the entire country is entitled.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why should the people of the United States be taxed in order that freight rates for Fort Worth and Dallas may be reduced?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state to the Senator it is not only the people at Fort Worth and Dallas who will be benefited but a tremendous section of country, thus making the project national in its character. I would not favor a project if it were to reduce freight rates merely in one small locality.

Mr. BRISTOW. It will probably benefit the States of Kentucky and Virginia and New Hampshire somewhat?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is so absurd now that his statement does not deserve any attempt at reply.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator said it was a national improvement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I intended to say it would affect such a large scope of territory that it was almost national in character.

Mr. BRISTOW. How much does the Senator expect this improvement to cost the Federal Government?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The estimate of the engineers is $3,000,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think that the benefits will be more national than those of the Panama Canal?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have not compared the two. I have not entered into any study as to which will be of more benefit to the country.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator think that possibly Trinity River will be as important a waterway for national expenditure as the Panama Canal?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Trinity River will be used by other people besides monopolists.

Mr. BRISTOW. What other people will use it? How many steamboats have navigated the Trinity River in the last year?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order having been called for, the presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask one question which arises, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me.

The statement was made in the telegram read at the desk that $2,000,000 had been expended by the citizens of Dallas for securing sites for locks and dams and for the construction of sewers. I think we should have an itemized statement of those expenses. Was this amount of $2,000,000 expended for the most part in providing for a sewerage system and municipal improvements?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I insist on the regular order. We will get up the river and harbor bill in a few minutes.

Mr. BURTON. I think in connection with the canalization of the river——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Permit me to say——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the regular order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall furnish the itemized statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is without remedy. The Senator from Georgia has called for the regular order, and the presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 785. An act to relinquish, release, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to certain lands in the State of Mississippi;

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Maryland, praying for the enactment of the so-called Clayton antitrust bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 926) for the relief of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 695) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4492. A bill to authorize James F. Barbour and his successors in title to permanently maintain and use siding from the tracks of the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad in the city of Washington (Rept. No. 696); and

H. R. 12844. An act for the relief of Spencer Roberts, a member of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 697).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 6134) granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Bridge & Terminal Co., of Muscatine, Iowa, to build a bridge across the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUGHES:

A bill (S. 6135) granting an increase of pension to Jean H. G. Kitchel, to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEST:

A bill (S. 6136) to increase the salaries of the United States district attorney and United States marshal and deputy marshals for the southern district of Georgia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 6137) refunding certain taxes illegally collected under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 6138) for the relief of Frank Kinsey Hill, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 6139) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Littrell (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 6140) granting a pension to Mary McJenkins (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6141) granting a pension to Charles R. Conger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Wyoming:

A bill (S. 6142) granting a pension to Nancy J. Northup; to the Committee on Pensions.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WATERS OF THE RIO GRANDE.

Mr. CATRON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) to determine the rights of the State of Colorado and of its citizens in the beneficial uses of waters of the Rio Grande and its tributaries within the boundaries of Colorado, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ELIZABETH P. DURFEE.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 428), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth P. Durfee, widow of Benjamin Durfee, late messenger, United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral and all other expenses.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. WORKS. I have an article on the subject of the International Institute of Agriculture by David Lubin, delegate of the United States to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, 1914. I desire to have the article printed as a Senate document, and for that purpose I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The article will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PUBLIC BUILDING SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 551).

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to ask that the communication I send to the desk may be printed as a Senate document. It is an estimate submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury for appropriations for the acquisition of sites and the erection of post-office buildings all within the limit of cost. The communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but was not printed. Senators interested in it are anxious to have it printed, so that they may see what is being done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Thursday next, July 23, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall address the Senate on the subject of trusts, trust regulation, and trust legislation.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

On July 17, 1914:

S. 4714. An act to authorize Louis Eder to enter lands under the homestead laws; and

S. J. Res. 29. Joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1784) restoring to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for reservoir purposes at the headwaters of the Mississippi River and tributaries.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MYERS, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

SABINE RIVER BRIDGE, LOUISIANA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5957) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River in the States of Louisiana and Texas, about 2 miles west of Hunter, La., which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "and" and insert a comma; on page 1, line 5, after "maintain," to insert ", and operate"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the Frost-Johnson Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across the Sabine River in the States of Louisiana and Texas, about 2 miles west of Hunter, La."

Mr. RANSDELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 16579. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across St. John River at Fort Kent, Me.; and

H. R. 17005. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Williamson, W. Va.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 13311. An act to cede a certain parcel of land to the county of Fulton, State of Georgia; and

H. R. 16476. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the city of Susanville, in Lassen County, Cal., for certain lands, and for other purposes.

H. R. 4545. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 15110. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept conveyance of title to certain land between the post-office site and Madison Street, in the city of Thomasville, Ga., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HILO, HAWAII, STREET RAILWAY.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, I wish to state that there is a House bill upon the calendar, reported by that committee, which relates to the franchise of a street railway in the island of Hilo. The franchise will expire on the 1st day of August unless the bill, which grants its extension for two years, is promptly passed. Those interested have expended $15,000 in the enterprise. It is very urgent, as I have stated, that the bill should be passed before the 1st of August. The street railway involved runs alongside of Government property, and the railroad will be of more benefit to the Government lands than to any others. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which is House bill 8660.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at this time I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

PENSION BUREAU EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 427) submitted by Mr. GOFF on yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to transmit to the Senate the following information:

First. The names, age, and length of service of all employees of the Bureau of Pensions on March 4, 1913.

Second. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States.

Third. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been promoted since said date.

Fourth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $100 per annum since said date.

Fifth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $200 per annum since said date.

Sixth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $300 per annum since said date.

Seventh. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $400 per annum since said date.

Eighth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been demoted $500 per annum since said date.

Ninth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who are now receiving pensions.

Tenth. Total number of those so employed who served in any war of the United States who have been dismissed or whose resignations have been asked for since said date.

Eleventh. Total number of Confederate veterans employed in said bureau on the date named.

Twelfth. Total number of Confederate veterans so employed who have been promoted since said date.

Thirteenth. Total number of Confederate veterans so employed who have been demoted since said date.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to make a statement in reference to the resolution?

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to suggest this: The junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who offered the resolution, is not in the Chamber, and perhaps action on it ought to be deferred on that account. I have an amendment which I intend to offer. I will send it to the desk, and ask that both the original resolution and the amendment lie over until the Senator from West Virginia is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to state that the Senator from West Virginia has been called to his home on account of illness in his family, and I have been requested to ask that the resolution might lie on the table, subject to his call, until his return.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I wish also to offer this suggestion: I think that later on both the resolution and the amendment should be referred to a committee for their consideration and report, but I do not ask that to be done at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution and the proposed amendment lie on the table for the present.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution, which I ask may take the course suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution, together with the amendments intended to be proposed by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from West Virginia, will lie on the table and be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, commonly known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. KENYON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who is necessarily absent. I believe, under the terms of the pair, I am entitled to vote, but I shall wait and see if I can obtain a transfer. If not, I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], but it has been agreed by us that the pairs shall be so modified as to apply only to the trust and trades measures now before the open Senate, and to some other matters. I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. WARREN], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I wish this announcement to stand on subsequent roll calls for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. May I inquire if the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] is necessarily absent. He is paired as has been stated. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been requested to announce the following pairs.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

I will not repeat this announcement, but will ask that it may stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—37.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in the telegram from Dallas, Tex., which has been read from the desk, the statement was made that some two million dollars had been raised by the citizens of that city, with the inference that it was for the promotion of the improvement of the Trinity River. I do not wish to say anything in disparagement of that growing community. Its citizens have shown great public spirit and have contributed somewhat liberally to the promotion of navigation in the Trinity River; but I think the telegram conveys an inference altogether incorrect. No such sum as $2,000,000 has been contributed toward this improvement. Information as to the amount contributed in connection with the improvement is published in a public document, and I think we should ask for an itemization of that $2,000,000. My impression is that the larger portion of it, in fact, nearly all of it, has been expended for a sewerage system and for municipal improvements which are entirely independent of any plan for the navigation of the Trinity River.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, a new sewerage system was constructed in order that the disposition of the sewage might not interfere in any way with the navigation of the river, and but for the fact that they thought that it was desirable to improve the river there would have been no necessity of expending the money to provide other means for the disposition of sewage.

Mr. BURTON. I think everyone knows that it would be utterly insanitary for a growing city of that kind to discharge its sewage through a navigable stream which for a portion of the year is practically dry; and any growing community considering the future will provide some other means for disposing of its sewage rather than to discharge it through a river that sometimes has practically no flow whatever, and that, too, in the hot seasons of the year, when prompt disposition of the sewage is indispensable.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the river has been used for that purpose ever since the city was founded, and I dispute the statement that the river is ever practically dry. It may be dry sometimes in some branches above Dallas, but from Dallas down I dispute that it is ever practically dry, and I ask the Senator for his proof.

Mr. BURTON. I think the official reports will show that it is difficult, if not impossible, to carry away a great quantity of sewage, such as must be disposed of from a city of that size with the ordinary flow of that river at all seasons of the year. Of course, I have not made any specialty of the sewerage of the city of Dallas, but that is an inference which I very decidedly draw from the reports upon the subject.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, do I understand that this large expenditure for sewage disposal was for the purpose of carrying the refuse away from the river, so that it would not fill it up and prevent navigation?

Mr. BURTON. I so understand the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BRISTOW. And the river is dry a part of the year?

Mr. BURTON. It may not be dry, but there is practically no water or current. The suggestion was made that the flow might be stimulated by digging artesian wells, but I believe that has never been done.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is it proposed to dig artesian wells in order that we may create navigable streams, and then dig trenches for the streams to run in, in order that our steamboats may float?

Mr. BURTON. I will not say it is exactly that. Artesian wells were recommended or favorably commented on in the first report made on this river, the one upon which the improvement is based.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the original engineers' report made the suggestion that artesian wells might be utilized to furnish water for the stream. There is no doubt about that. They have gotten along without it. Possibly the sewage helped out a little toward furnishing water for the stream.

Mr. BRISTOW. I undertook to find out during the morning hour what navigation there was on this stream, how many steamboats had been constructed, and how many steamboats were in operation carrying commerce up and down the Trinity River. Has the Senator from Ohio any information as to that?

Mr. BURTON. No; I have not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Why, Mr. President, at present the locks and dams have not reached a sufficient stage of completion to justify the navigation of the river; but several locks and dams have been in course of construction during the last six or eight years and are now reaching completion, and we have a boat ready to pass up the stream as soon as the locks and dams now being built are completed.

Mr. BRISTOW. They have one boat?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The city of Dallas has purchased a boat to put on the river.

Mr. BRISTOW. Where is that boat now, please?

Mr. SHEPPARD. As I understand from this telegram, it is now near Galveston.

Mr. BRISTOW. How do they expect to get it there—by train or by water?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They expect to get it there by the river, I will say; and they may send for the Senator from Kansas and let his eloquence pull it up.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; my eloquence is not to be contributed to any such purpose as that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it would cause such a disturbance in the atmosphere that if you put sails on the boat it would carry it right up the river.

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, if the Senator thinks they will put on sails and navigate the air in Texas, that would be a different proposition; but the boat that I understand the city of Dallas has is not an aeroplane, I think.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A sufficient disturbance of the air produces rainfall. If we can not get the water in any other way, we might get it in that way.

Mr. BRISTOW. I suppose that is about the way the Senator expects to get the boat floated up the dry ditches that he is having the Government dig there to lower the freight rates.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; I was simply giving an answer worthy of the charge made by the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have made no charge. I have been trying to secure information from the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am perfectly willing to give the Senator information.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, this telegram, which it has been suggested is longer than the river, states that this boat is en route to Dallas under its own steam, so the Senator must realize that there is at least one boat there that is proceeding under its own steam.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wonder where that boat is. I will inquire of the Senator from Texas if he can not send a tracer for it and locate it, so that we may have some knowledge as to where that boat is now, and how much it will cost to get it up to Dallas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will do so, for the benefit of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I think the country ought to know something about it. These vast expenditures are being made on dry ditches in Texas for the purpose of improving the navigation of the streams and thereby lowering freight rates. We have heard a good deal in the discussion about appropriations to lower freight rates. We have heard some very eloquent speeches on that subject.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have not the floor, except by the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHILTON. I just wanted to suggest to the Senator that probably the boat is in the river.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What river is the Senator speaking of?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Trinity River, as I understand, is the name of the ravine there that is being improved for purposes of navigation. The Senator from West Virginia suggests that the boat is in the river, but we have not any information to that effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the further information has been vouchsafed that it can not navigate the stream until the locks and the dams are built.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why do they have it in the river? I think they ought to have it in a box car.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Of course, all this humor is very pleasant, but I want to say that the statement that the river is dry, or practically dry, is an unspeakable slander; that it is a worthy project; and I shall endeavor to show that it is a worthy project when the time comes to discuss it. So far as the artesian-well proposition is concerned, the first engineer who made an examination did say something about artesian wells in the upper reaches of the river, the reaches at and above Dallas; but since that time a special board of engineers reexamined that section of the river and found that no artificial water supply would be necessary; that the rainfall was sufficient for navigation in the upper stretches of the river.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will ask the Senator what is the length of the river?

Mr. SHEPPARD. About 500 miles.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether it has been charged that there is no water in this river?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly it has been charged that there is no water in it. It was charged this morning; but I can demonstrate to the satisfaction of any reasonable man that all these charges are mere harmless badinage; that they are just as empty as some gentlemen claim the river is [laughter]; that the attacks they make on the river to-day are of a kind with the faked interview in the Washington Post yesterday. I think it must have been faked, because it wore all the earmarks of a fake. I refer to the interview that was published here in the RECORD yesterday purporting to come from one M. J. Wirth, of Fort Worth, Tex. Nobody in Texas seems to know anything about him.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask, in my own time, and while the Senator from Texas is on his feet, when he expects to make his remarks defending the Trinity. That subject seems to be assuming such importance and awakening such wide interest that I certainly would be willing to give way for his defense of the Trinity River and the various Texas projects. May I ask when the Senator from Texas intends to take this up?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I propose to discuss it when we reach the item in the bill.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, we may never reach the item. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the way the Senator is speaking now, I do not suppose we will.

Mr. BURTON. That may be.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest that the attack on the Trinity ought not to involve an attack on the whole plan of salvation—the salvation of Congress.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state, for the benefit of the Senator from Iowa, that there are no red lights on the river.

Mr. KENYON. I suppose the water could not put them out if there were.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, again resuming my argument, yesterday I referred to the statistics for traffic through the Muscle Shoals Canal, with its locks, and through the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals Canal on the Tennessee River. I should like the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who participated in that discussion and made some valuable suggestions. I stated that I had only the figures for the year 1912, and that possibly the figures for the later year would show a material increase. This morning I have obtained the 1913 statistics, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMERCIAL STATISTICS OF MUSCLE SHOALS AND COLBERT SHOALS CANALS.

DISTRICT ENGINEER OFFICER, CHATTANOOGA DISTRICT,
July 16, 1914.

The CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.:

In reply to telegram of the 15th instant relative to commercial statistics for the Muscle Shoals Canal and the Colbert Shoals Canal, Tennessee River, below is the statement for the calendar year 1913, these being the latest figures available:

Muscle Shoals Canal.

	Tons.
Cotton	1,226
Cotton seed	784
Grain	16
Hay	37
Other farm products	9
Logs	45
Lumber	147
Ties	10
Other timber products	3
Coal	45
Fertilizer	2,150
Flour	131
General merchandise	905
Machinery and implements	233
Miscellaneous	136
Total	5,887

Estimated value, $580,000.

Colbert Shoals Canal.

	Tons.
Grain	158
Live stock	1
Other farm products	89
Lumber	16
Ties	30,012
Other timber products	4
Fertilizer	209
Flour	34
General merchandise	160
Machinery and implements	5
Miscellaneous	22
Total	30,710

Estimated value, $215,000.

H. BURGESS,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Mr. BURTON. I wish to make some comments upon these figures.

The traffic through the Muscle Shoals Canal in the year 1912 amounted to 5,520 tons. For 1913 it was slightly larger—5,887 tons. The value has also somewhat increased, from $449,857 to $585,000—an increase, however, which is not very material.

On the other hand, in the Colbert Shoals Canal, which was first opened in the month of November, 1911, there has been a decrease from 31,943 tons in 1912 to 30,710 tons in 1913, and a decrease in the value of the freight from $232,672 to $215,000. The predominant item is still railroad ties—30,518 tons in 1912 and 30,012 tons in 1913. In 1912 the traffic in merchandise and all other articles besides railroad ties amounted to but 1,175 tons. This has fallen in the last year to 698 tons, a decrease of nearly one-half.

The idea I had yesterday that possibly a later year would show some increase, which would afford some vestige of justification of these improvements, has certainly been entirely disappointed. The traffic on the Muscle Shoals Canal, though slightly increasing, is still very small. The traffic on the very expensive Colbert Shoals Canal, costing $2,313,000, and $30,000 or $40,000 a year for maintenance, has diminished in its second year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator say, taking out logs and ties, that in 1913 there were only 698 tons?

Mr. BURTON. Six hundred and ninety-eight tons.

Mr. NORRIS. That would mean that the cost per ton to the Government would be higher this year than the one we were talking about yesterday?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator there the expense of maintenance?

Mr. BURTON. I have not. I should conjecture that it would be somewhat less than for the first year, which was $34,500. The interest on the investment at 4 per cent would be $92,000. It would be a safe conjecture that, coupled with the cost of operation, the sum of the two would be $100,000, and probably it would be in excess of that amount; perhaps $110,000 or $115,000.

Mr. NORRIS. We found out yesterday that taking the maintenance cost for 1912 and adding 4 per cent interest on the investment, and then taking out of the calculation the logs and the railroad ties, it cost the Government about $100 a ton to put this traffic through the lock.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; or the canal. The canal includes the lock.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. In that connection I wish to ask the Senator a question. This is only one lock on the river?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. There are quite a number of other locks, are there not?

Mr. BURTON. There are in the Muscle Shoals system. Part are on one side of the river, and part on the other side.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, if it costs the Government $100 to put a ton of freight through one lock, and there are five or six locks to go through, if there was any freight there that traveled any distance, the cost would amount to several hundred dollars per ton, would it not?

Mr. BURTON. The cost is not so great per ton of valuable freight in the Muscle Shoals Canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not quite so great.

Mr. BURTON. This seems to be the maximum cost of freight passing through any lock or improvement in the Tennessee River, and perhaps it is the maximum in the United States. The total cost per ton, excluding railroad ties, for the last year—1913—would be approximately $150 per ton; and using the very striking comparison that the Senator from Nebraska employed yesterday, the value of all traffic passing through the Colbert Shoals Canal in 1913 was $215,000. The value by items is not given, but the quantity of railroad ties is almost exactly the same as last year, and they were valued at $137,000. Deducting that amount from the total value of 1913 would show the traffic other than ties had a value of $78,000. So the expense, when you count in interest on the investment and the cost of maintenance, is clearly $20,000 more than the total value of all the freight passing through the canal, excluding the railroad ties, which could readily be floated.

Mr. NORRIS. Those are the figures for this one lock only?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. But suppose the freight had to be passed through two locks?

Mr. BURTON. I would not anticipate that the cost would increase proportionately.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator another question on a subject that I asked him about yesterday. I have found from the report of the Chief of Engineers something bearing on the point, and it is directly in connection with the subject about which the Senator is talking now.

I asked the Senator yesterday whether or not the United States Government was not liable for damages to the men who were engaged in logging and getting out and shipping railroad ties. They seem to be the principal articles that are shipped down these rivers. The Senator did not think there was any possibility of damages coming on that account.

Mr. BURTON. I understood the question of the Senator from Nebraska related to the liability of the Government for damages.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, probably not a technical or legal liability, but a moral liability. I believe the records show that the Government has destroyed an occupation in which a good many men were employed, and a great deal of money invested, by putting in these locks. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to read from the report of the Chief of Engineers for 1913. The report is speaking not of this particular lock, but of the same thing in connection with another river.

Mr. BURTON. The Kentucky River?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. They say as follows:

> The principal commerce of the river is timber, which can be most advantageously handled as loose logs; but as the slack-water improvement has progressed it has been necessary to impose and enforce regulations preventing the running of loose logs in the portions improved, which imposes hardship on the interests involved, since it requires rafting and towing the logs. If allowed to run loose the logs and the dams would cause reciprocal damage. For the towns of Valley View and Ford, at railroad crossings of the river, and formerly sawmill and transshipping points, the results have been disastrous, since such of their industry as survived has been transferred to other points.

So it seems the building of dams has driven men out of business.

Mr. BURTON. I certainly do not see any ground of liability when the Federal Government improves a waterway and makes it more suitable for general commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. About the only commerce is railroad ties and logs.

Mr. BURTON. And that is by persons who use original methods.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say that I am not claiming that there is any legal liability, but ought we not to take into consideration before we build dams and locks in rivers where there is no navigation except for logs that we are injuring men who are engaged in the logging business?

Mr. BURTON. I have no doubt whatever that locks and dams have been constructed at very large expense in instances where the communities tributary to the river have been injured rather than helped.

The statistics for the Muscle Shoals Canal show a striking similarity for the years 1912 and 1913. Those for the Colbert Shoals Canal are not so identical.

The most unfavorable indication in the statistics for the two years for that improvement is the decline in the development of general merchandise. In the year 1912, 329 tons of general merchandise passed through that canal. That quantity diminished to 160 tons in 1913.

Think of it, Mr. President and Senators; this is an improvement which extends the navigation of a stretch of great river 206 miles long, near to two promising industrial centers—Florence and Sheffield. At one of those towns there are iron furnaces. One of them has a population of over 6,000 inhabitants. They are only a few miles from this improvement, but yet you have this unfavorable showing for the second year after this great canal is opened.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What was the cost of it?

Mr. BURTON. Two million three hundred and thirteen thousand dollars. The amount of general freight, other than railroad ties, carried through it was only 698 tons for the year 1913.

The conjecture I offered yesterday that possibly in the first year the shipping interests has not as yet begun to use it and that a larger traffic would develop is disproved by the traffic of the second year.

I do not begrudge the time consumed in presenting to the Senate the arguments and the indisputable facts on such a project when similar features appear in the pending river and harbor bill.

I know something of the history of this canal. It was authorized in the year 1890. Year after year Congress hesitated about about making any appropriation. In the month of May, 1899, I saw that lock and dam, a magnificent piece of masonry, standing there alone. Egypt had no monopoly on great works of masonry the purpose of which remained a mystery. The pyramids are no finer than this lock. Of those who look upon it some praise the work and some the architects, but I think the laudation will be largely reserved to the Congressmen who obtained the original appropriation for that improvement.

It has been finished at last, and here are the results: Two million three hundred thousand dollars have been expended upon it, and if it were not for the pride in finishing what we began it had better been left unfinished, so far as any commercial results from it have been shown.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio at what time did the worthlessness of this improvement at Colbert Shoals appear?

Mr. BURTON. You never could be sure of it until it was opened in November, 1911, and was subjected to the test.

Mr. SHIELDS. Is it not a familiar fact that $1,500,000 of the appropriation complained of was appropriated while the Senator from Ohio was chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so, though I want to look that up. While I have delinquencies to answer for, I trust that is not one of them. It is true it was a work under way when I became a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and it is probable that appropriations were made for it during my service as chairman of that committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to call the Senator's attention to page 2499 of the report of the Chief of Engineers and let him see that between the period beginning March 3, 1899, and ending March 4, 1909, there was $1,518,000 appropriated for this improvement, while the Senator was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and of course I suppose it was done with his approval.

Mr. BURTON. Well, I suppose it was, but I do not think it will amount to that figure. I see that an appropriation was made in the sundry civil act of 1903 and in the river and harbor act of 1905. But am I to blame for that? Here was a project to which the Government had committed itself in the year 1890, on which it had expended the sum of $695,000. A magnificent masonry structure had been erected; and it would be a very far cry, it would be an unusual exertion of the prerogative of a member of a committee or even of its chairman to say "I will stop that improvement right there."

A great many of these projects did not commend themselves to us. We had the Illinois & Mississippi Canal, which had already cost some six or seven million dollars, and required a million more for completion, and we actually hesitated about appropriating that additional million. But, of course, it is not very creditable to a great Government like our own to commence a public work and when it is half or two-thirds or six-sevenths completed to drop it. It is true the Rivers and Harbors Committee at the time when I was its chairman did absolutely abandon some projects for which appropriations had been made for many years. Most of them have made their way back into the bill now, and they are very prominent in this bill and the appropriations for them are very large; but we did not feel that we could altogether abandon work which had been recommended and appropriated for during the time of our predecessors. The way to handle such a project as this is to stop it before it is commenced. There are two other locks and dams in this river less favorably situated for the increase of traffic than this Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals Canal, one to cost $1,600,000 and the other $1,000,000, which will be continued toward completion unless Congress at this session and in this bill declares that it does not want any more such waste as this Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals Canal has proved in the years 1912 and 1913.

I say with confidence that the proposed canals are less promising than this one, because, if you were to look at the cities of Florence and Sheffield and others in the neighborhood, situated less than 20 miles from the end of the stretch of the river, which is navigable all the year round, you would conclude that great benefit would be conferred by bringing them into touch with that stretch and giving them continuous all-year navigation.

I certainly regret if during the time I was chairman or a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee such large appropriations as this were made for a public work that has turned out so badly; but, in the first place, I repeat I do not see that I am to blame, as it had been commenced and prosecuted at an expense of $700,000 before I ever knew of it. In the next place, suppose in those years 1902 and 1903 and 1905 we did think that such a plan might be successful; suppose we looked at the cities that would be made tributary to it and heard the arguments of chambers of commerce, listened to telegrams such as were sent in this morning, if we did make a mistake, then is that any reason why in this year 1914, with further information on the subject, we should make a still further mistake, one even worse than that, by passing river and harbor bills which sanction the construction of other public works and of two other locks and dams which do not promise as well as this one did?

I presume before I am through other things that I may have said, other things with which I may have had some connection will be quoted here to show that my course on this bill is inconsistent. But I shall not be troubled at all by that. The usual fault found with any action of mine during all the years when I was a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee was that I was too conservative; that I was not liberal enough. A cry went up from divers parts of the country that I was holding back improvements, and it was with the utmost difficulty that I succeeded in keeping down these bills to the amounts which they did carry. Unquestionably, items appeared which I did not altogether approve. Others were accepted by me and my colleagues because they were in continuance of projects already begun.

More than that, the country has learned something on this question of river traffic since 1902. The facts here speak most eloquently of the tendencies of river and harbor traffic. We know more on the subject than we knew then. I should very much regret if I felt that I myself did not have now in this year 1914 a more adequate understanding of many of the problems considered from 1896 to 1909 than I then had.

Mr. President, I desire to resume where I left off last night the argument in regard to greater simplicity in the reports of the engineers. It is exceedingly difficult for anyone who does not make a speciality of these subjects to gather from the great mass of data presented in these reports facts and circumstances relating to river and harbor works. I would suggest at the beginning of each description of a river project in volume 1 be given the following general facts:

A. The general location of the river or harbor.

B. The length under improvement.

C. The natural depths and present depths available. That will compare the river in its natural and its present state.

D. The present project. For instance, if the river in its natural state was 4 feet deep and it is now 6 feet, and it is expected to make it 8 feet, those facts should appear.

E. The amount expended to date.

F. The traffic in tons and the average haul.

That would take only about 8 or 10 lines. If those facts are given at the beginning, knowledge about river and harbor improvements would no longer be the possession of the few, but any Senator or Representative who desires to post himself upon the subject could learn at a brief glance the essential facts in regard to any project in the country. Some might say that is too much like the headline system of the newspapers, but however that may be, it would be decidedly useful and it would simplify the study of a subject which I am sure has not evoked the attention which it deserves. If it had received that attention, I do not believe we should have included in this bill and in some prior bills items costing millions and tens of millions of dollars for which the United States Government is now expending money.

Supplementing what I have said, I wish to read extracts from several letters received from Gen. Kingman, who is an able and scientific officer and the Chief of our Engineer Corps, on the question of statistics. I read first from the letter of July 7. In corresponding with him I suggested that special agents be appointed as one way to obtain more accurate information. I raised the question whether these facts had best be gathered by the Engineer Corps or by some other branch of the public service. He says:

Relative to your suggestion that special agents be appointed for the express purpose of gathering statistics, I beg to say that I believe that much better results in proportion to the amount of money expended can be obtained without the appointment of such special agents than could be obtained by them. The statistics now are gathered by employees of the engineer department, who do other useful work when not engaged in commercial statistics work. The question is largely one of the relative cost and value of the statistics. Under existing laws it will be possible to collect, without the appointment of special agents, very accurate statistics, if sufficient money is spent; but it is believed that the statistics now reported, as a rule, are reasonably accurate, and that the extra refinement, which would add comparatively little to the value of the statistics, would enormously increase the cost of collection, and, as stated in my letter of July 2 to you, in many cases the cost would be no small proportion of the total cost of the improvement.

Mr. President, I do not quite agree with that last statement. The gathering of statistics is no expensive matter. It may be that the cost of collecting the statistics in some cases would bear a large proportion to the amount of traffic as in the Colbert and Bee Tree Shoals Canal, but the masters of vessels, those who navigate our rivers, are compelled by law to make a full and definite report. That has been the law for nearly 50 years, and the work of those who gather these figures is largely one of addition, subtraction, and classification.

In another letter of July 9 Gen. Kingman says:

Replying to your letter of July 8, 1914, upon the subject of commercial statistics, I would say that it might be a good thing to have a certain sum at the disposal of the Chief of Engineers, which might be allotted by him, in much the same way that survey money is allotted to the different engineering districts, for the purpose of obtaining more accurate commercial statistics than those which we now get. In the case of harbors the Government really has the machinery for collecting accurate commercial statistics with very little increased expenses, if it could be made use of. I refer to the employees at the custom-houses. They do have boarding officers and they do collect a great deal of information, and without much additional expense could collect it all.

When I was stationed in Oswego N. Y., a number of years ago I made a friendly arrangement with the collector of customs at that place whereby he caused his boarding officer to visit every vessel that came into the harbor, and being provided with printed blanks he got from the master the cargo, the place from whence it came, the part that was left at the harbor, and all that was taken away and where it was to go. This information when tabulated gave very correct and comprehensive results. I explained the method to the officer who was stationed at Duluth, and the method was put in force in that district, and the last that I heard of it they were still using it. That will do for the harbors. An extension of the system would cover the internal waterways.

I have not a very high opinion of the statistics that were collected years ago. The officers charged with this work did the best that they could, but the matter years ago was not regarded as of very great importance, and it was not thought that the expenditure of money in connection with it was justified. The statistics were generally obtained by correspondence with boards of trade, chambers of commerce, managers of steamboat lines, etc. Some of the information was doubtless duplicated, and some things were doubtless missed.

The collection of correct statistics is an art and requires both training and experience. When I first went to the Tennessee River I was satisfied that we were not getting full and complete statements of the amount of business done. I therefore prepared quite an elaborate plan. I ascertained from my own employees the name and home port of every steamboat plying on the system. I learned the name of every person engaged in rafting lumber, and I addressed letters to the masters of the boats and the owners of the rafts. I explained to them very carefully what the law was and what we were trying to do and how desirable it was in the interest of the improvement to have full, complete, and accurate statistics. I was gratified to find that I got a great deal better showing of commerce than we had ever had before. But I did not discover until it was too late for me to make use of the information that year that many of the statistics were inflated—absolutely exaggerated—and made two or three times as big as they ought to have been. So that afterwards I found it necessary to study very carefully all the reports received and afterwards to send an experienced man out to visit the parties from whom reports had been received and to carefully check up their statements and to get, if possible, the exact truth.

The most troublesome class of business to get on the small rivers is the business that is carried on by independent steamboats that are owned and operated by the master, a man who keeps no books, and is probably too illiterate to keep any, and who does his business on a cash basis or with a broomstick tally or something of that kind. If you go to him at the end of the year, he can not possibly tell you how much business he has done.

Finally I would say that in order to make statistics comparable and to make it possible to deduce correct conclusions by a comparison of results taken at considerable intervals of time, it is absolutely necessary that the same method of collecting the statistics should be used in all cases, or at least that methods should be adopted that are absolutely accurate within appreciable limits. I should be glad to do anything in my power to facilitate the collection of correct statistics, and I think one of the first things that should be done would be to find out who are collecting statistics and in this way to arrange a coordination of effort that should secure the greatest accuracy and avoid the duplication of results.

In a third letter, under date of July 13, he says:

I have your letter of July 11, 1914, in which you speak of my communication dated July 9. If there is anything in that letter that you could use for the good of the public service, I certainly have no objection to your doing so. If special provision were to be made for the collection, in a more thorough and accurate manner, of the commercial statistics of rivers and harbors under consideration, I should think that some increase in the contingent fund, with the authorization for its use for that purpose, would be all that would be necessary.

Mr. President, I regard this as a comparatively simple matter. It may cost $50,000 or $100,000, but that is a very small sum to spend when we have been groping in the dark for so long.

I am inclined to think the collection of the statistics had best be left to the Engineer Corps. I will resume reading the letter of Gen. Kingman:

I somewhat doubt the propriety of reporting ferry traffic as a part of the commercial statistics on a river. A ferryboat simply takes the place of a bridge, and, in fact, in the course of time is generally replaced by one. But where landing places are not opposite each other on a river, but many miles apart, there would be no objection to considering it, and there would be no objection to considering it in any case if it were a question of ton mileage, and was so reported. People naturally, without thinking very seriously of the subject when considering the commerce on a river, imagine that the commodities are transported over the entire length of the stream, although this is hardly ever the case; so that ton mileage is really the only valuable basis of general comparison, and this is expensive to collect accurately, and, in a way, such that the commerce of one stream can be properly compared with that of another.

That is the point to which I have repeatedly called attention—the importance of ton mileage in determining the importance of a stream as an artery of commerce.

Mr. President, I have discussed this matter of the inadequacy of data and statistics on several different days, and my remarks therefore have been somewhat interrupted. With the indulgence of the Senate I desire to read a brief summary of my views on the subject of lack of statistics.

I.—Lack of Statistics.

SUMMARY.

Deficiencies.

1. Lack of uniformity.

(a) Some figures are for the fiscal year ending June 30 and some are for calendar years.

(b) Classification of commodities is not uniform. The terms "miscellaneous," "general merchandise," "package freight," and so forth, are used indiscriminately. (See Report of National Waterways Commission, p. 74.)

(c) There should be a uniform rule for statistics relating to freight ferried across a river. In some cases this traffic is included in the general aggregate of traffic upon a river and in others it is not. On the Mississippi River, at and below St. Louis, ferry traffic is not included. On the other hand, for at least one year in the last decade, ferry traffic was included on the upper Mississippi. It is included on the Ohio River apparently at all points at which there are ferries. Traffic in the harbor of Philadelphia, more than 4,000,000 tons, ferried from Philadelphia to Camden, was included in the total for the last year for which statistics are available.

(d) In some cases, as on the Oconee and Ocmulgee, floating logs are excluded, though usually they are not. Indeed, they are included in almost every case.

Uniformity should be secured in the particulars above referred to by general order.

(e) There is no uniformity as regards stretches of a river or the different pools created by locks and dams. In some cases the traffic is given for the whole river as an entirety, naturally involving considerable duplication in the making up of the total.

As an example, the Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans is divided into four sections—St. Louis to Cairo, Cairo to Memphis, Memphis to Vicksburg, Vicksburg to New Orleans.

It is impossible to derive from the figures the amount of through traffic. (See H. Doc. No. 50, 61st Cong., 1st sess., 1909, pp. 344, 345.)

On the other hand, on most rivers the traffic is given as an entirety on the whole river.

It is valuable to have statistics by stretches or portions of a river as well as for the whole river, especially when divided by locks and dams, but, at any rate, there should be a uniform rule.

II.—Inadequacy of Statistics.

(a) Ton mileage should be furnished. This is absolutely essential. The average haul and ton mileage is given on some streams but not on others.

Indeed, I think those figures are given for a comparatively small fraction of the streams; they may be given for one-fourth or perhaps one-third. The ton mileage is given for the traffic through the Soo Canal, and that is exceedingly valuable and important.

The figures given are barely sufficient to give an adequate idea of tendencies.

(b) In order that the increase or decrease in traffic may be recognized, comparisons should be given for successive years. In the Report for 1912, volume 1, a considerable number of these comparisons are given. They are also given in numerous reports from the Corps of Engineers.

(c) The French publication "Statistique de la Navigation Intérieure," affords a good example to follow. Statistics relating to rivers and canals divide the traffic into two classes:

1. That originating on the river or portion of a river, which is again subdivided into traffic between points on the river or portions of the river in question, and that which originates within and is shipped outside.

2. The second class of traffic is made up of freight originating outside and then again subdivided into two classes:

(1) That which is shipped to points on the section in question from outside.

(2) Freight passing through without unloading.

(d) The total traffic on all rivers and canals should be given; also the kinds of freight carried.

(e) Receipts and shipments at the respective points of receipt and distribution should be given.

(f) It goes without saying that charges by boat per ton per mile for different classes of freight are extremely important.

(g) It is desirable that statistics should be published separately, either as an appendix to the Engineers Report or in a separate volume, and not scattered through the volumes. There are French and German publications devoted exclusively to statistics upon rivers and canals.

(h) It is desirable that traffic partly by sea and partly by river should be distinguished from that which is exclusively by river.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Before the Senator drifts too far from the matter, I should like to ask him if he knows why logs are not included in the ton mileage on the Ocmulgee?

Mr. BURTON. The Oconee and the Ocmulgee are the only two I recall now where floating logs are excluded.

Mr. WEST. Does the Senator know why logs are not included in the estimates of ton mileage on those rivers?

Mr. BURTON. My recollection is that the quantity of floated logs is given in the reports, but not in the general aggregate. The probable reason for that is that at some time difficulty was experienced in obtaining the statistics as to logs. I note that the quantity of floating logs is given on page 557 on the report pertaining to the Oconee.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him further?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. I merely wanted the information as to the Oconee and the Ocmulgee Rivers, because I know that at times timber has been a great part of the tonnage on those rivers.

Mr. BURTON. Indeed, I think the greater part at all times.

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. On page 557, of the report, it is stated:

During the calendar year 1912 the amount of freight carried on the river between The Forks and Milledgeville amounted to 7,451 tons, valued at $309,190. There was also rafted on this portion of the river during the same period 17,110,000 feet board measure of lumber, valued at $287,150.

The 17,110,000 feet of lumber would weigh probably four times as much as the other traffic, if it were counted in the tonnage.

Mr. WEST. Four and a half times as much.

Mr. BURTON. Four and a half times as much. I have no doubt that the estimate of the Senator from Georgia is more accurate upon that than is my own estimate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Ohio, who has made a careful study of almost every waterway in the United States, whether as a rule before the Government expended money on these streams logs could not have been floated?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; and they could be floated to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. In that connection I will say that an enormous commerce in logs has been floated down the Connecticut River, the Pemigewasset and the Winnipesaukee Rivers to the Merrimac and from there to market over shoal places and other obstructions, but we never thought in our country of asking the Government to deepen those rivers to enable us to float logs to the market. It was more expensive no doubt than it would have been if we had an open channel, but our own people have done it at the expense of private parties, and I wondered, in remembering how shoal some of those streams are in places and how those logs have been manipulated by skilled men, whether there was an actual necessity for these improvements for the purpose of getting logs to market.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think one can make the broad generalization that the mere floating of logs ought to be eliminated from consideration in the improvement of streams. I do not say that a certain amount of improvement in the way of the removal of snags and possibly in some places dredging sand bars might not be justified, where the sole purpose was to float logs or timber, but that was a method of transportation long before the rivers were improved at the expense of the Government, and it never was in itself an excuse for improving any of them. It is not until recent years that we have come to realize how large a share of the traffic of such rivers as the Red and the Arkansas, and even the Tennessee, and a number of other streams is made up of floating logs. Indeed, when you deduct the floating logs there is hardly anything left, and yet we are paying enormous sums for improving the streams on the idea that it is necessary in the interest of navigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if the suggestion does not appeal to him that where streams are somewhat obstructed by snags or trees falling over them that private parties who are engaged in this great traffic ought not to remove those at their own expense?

Mr. BURTON. That is what has usually been done until the modern era of river and harbor legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is trying to instruct the Senate, and I notice there are very few Senators present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Md.
Brady	Gronna	Overman	Sterling
Brandegee	Hughes	Page	Stone
Bryan	James	Perkins	Swanson
Burton	Jones	Pittman	Thomas
Camden	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thompson
Catron	Kern	Ransdell	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lane	Shafroth	Tillman
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	West
Clapp	Lewis	Shields	White
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Simmons
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I had understood the Chair to announce that a quorum was present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Forty-nine Senators?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Answering further the Senator from Georgia, I give also the figures for the Ocmulgee River, which are found on page 560 of the engineers' reports. In 1912 the freight carried on this river amounted to 9,528 short tons, valued at $505,130. Besides this, 21,940,000 feet, board measure, of timber was rafted down the river, valued at $317,000. It will appear that in this river, as well as the Oconee, the quantity of timber floated was, in tonnage, far in excess of the general freight. I conceive that the reason why it has been omitted in some years is that possibly in some seasons of the year the statistics were not readily available. I make this statement and include this generalization because in other publications the Oconee and Ocmulgee are given distinctive positions. The asterisk accompanies the statement of tonnage, and reference is made to the fact that this does not include floated logs. That is true of the Statistical Abstract and other publications.

It is exceedingly difficult to find these figures, though by the use of a number of publications and by correspondence with the commercial bodies some very valuable figures are obtainable. If I were to express an opinion, I would say that those of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis are the most valuable of those furnished by any commercial organization relating to the rivers of the country. Other valuable statistics are furnished from Cincinnati, from New Orleans, and some from Chicago.

While I am on this subject I may say that if anyone desires to study river traffic, the best publication for its comprehensiveness in statistics is the report of the Inland Waterways Commission, published in the year 1908. At that time a strenuous effort was made to compile a list of abandoned canals to show the tendencies as to water-borne traffic on rivers and canals, and to give the available figures relating to tonnage up to that date. The Bureau of Corporations took up the subject, and President Roosevelt cooperated in the work. The statistics published in that report give very complete figures down to and including the years 1906 and 1907. It is to be regretted that this publication could not be continued down to date. Then the report of the National Waterways Commission published in 1910 and 1912—the preliminary report in 1910 and the final report in 1912—gives a class of statistics equally valuable; but the aim of that publication is not so much to furnish statistics as generalizations, and hence the figures given are much less comprehensive than those contained in the report of the Inland Waterways Commission. There are other publications, such as the Statistical Abstract, the Report on Transportation by Water, and divers census reports, which have very considerable value; but none of them can compare with the publications which are available in France and Germany, particularly those in France.

Briefly commenting on the inadequacy of our statistics, I have said a great deal in regard to ton mileage, and I think it will be recognized by everyone that it is not merely the number of tons that are handled on a river that is important, but the distance that freight is carried. If tonnage alone is considered, the ferriage traffic between two cities, merely crossing a river at some point where there is no bridge, might seem to give to a stream an importance for commerce which did not belong to one of far greater magnitude and commercial importance. It is only for a few years that these figures have been gathered in this country at all. Anyone who examines them, and who has labored under the impression referred to in Gen. Kingman's letter, that when a certain amount of tonnage is ascribed to a river it was carried for the whole length of the river, must have experienced a rude shock, for it appears that the great bulk of our river traffic on most of these rivers, even those of large size and very considerable importance, is hauled for only short distances.

In order that the increase or decrease in traffic may be recognized, comparisons should be given for successive years. In France these comparisons are available from 1847 to 1912 and statistics on a large and general scale from 1895 to 1912. On some rivers in the United States they are available from 1890 to 1912 or 1913, but with the qualification that the method of taking the statistics is by no means uniform; so the comparison is not so reliable as it otherwise might be. I have referred at some length in the summary given above to the French publication as an example.

The total traffic on all rivers and canals should be given, also the kinds of freight carried. It is exceedingly desirable that we should have the whole amount of freight carried on rivers in the United States aggregated in one total. If we did, and if we had a comparison by years, we could readily judge of the tendencies relating to water-borne transportation. With great labor I have tried to figure out this problem, and find that it is hardly possible to give any satisfactory figure of the aggregate traffic; but it is possible to find enough to determine what the tendencies are. Later in my argument I shall refer more fully to the inferences which may be derived from the figures available.

It is also very desirable that the different classes of commodities conveyed on all the rivers of the country should be grouped; that is, which are the principal articles of water-borne commerce? Is it package freight? Is it grain? Is it building material? Is it coal? Is it raw material for manufacture? What are the tendencies? Is the quantity of coarse material increasing out of proportion to the others? What is the tendency as to general merchandise—merchandise of considerable value per ton?

The figures relating to the French traffic show that the leading article carried on all the rivers and canals of France is building material, and that comprises about a third of the total; next in order comes coal and different mineral combustibles for fuel; next to that agricultural products and provisions. The importance of these different figures, the increase or decrease from year to year, can not be overstated. Indeed, where they are accurately obtained they show tendencies so plainly that it is impossible to deny or avoid the inference which can be derived from them.

Receipts and shipments at the respective points of receipt and distribution should be given. These figures are now given with reference to our harbors very carefully and very adequately; but on the rivers, strangely, nothing of the kind appears, save in an occasional document like that upon the wall; and that does not take up fully, as the French statistics do, the different ports on the river as separate places of receipt and shipment.

Another item of statistics which I have included under the head "F" is charges by boat per ton per mile for different classes of freight. The engineers' reports are just beginning to furnish these, and they give very important information. We have had these figures for 20 years or more—yes; I think for 30 years—on freight passing through the Soo Canal. I may say in passing that the statistics gathered there—and they are gathered by the engineers with very little difficulty—are a model to follow. They are among the most valuable statistics furnished anywhere in the world. They show the classes of commodities passing through, the exact quantity of each, the value of all, and the rate per ton per mile.

Strangely, those commodities have varied very little in value for more than 20 years. The average value is between $10 and $12 per ton, showing that the great bulk of the freight is made up of coarse material, such as iron ore and coal. The figures also show that there has been a very substantial reduction year by year in the rate paid on freights going through.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Does not greater tonnage pass through the Soo Canal than through any other canal in the world?

Mr. BURTON. Much greater. Something over 70,000,000 tons pass through there. In making that statement, however, it is necessary to add the qualifying statement that the statistics at the Soo, as it is called—the St. Marys River Canal—are taken on a different principle or rule from those at the Suez. In fact, they are much more complete. At the Soo statistics are gathered of the net tonnage of all boats passing through, and also of the actual freight carried. At the Suez Canal they only gather statistics of the net tonnage. They do not attempt to obtain figures as to the aggregate quantity of freight, the weight of the cargoes of the vessels. For everything under the sun there is a reason, and there is a reason for this. They charge tolls on the basis of the tonnage. It would be regarded as impracticable to ascertain the quantity of all the respective cargoes. Again, the imposition of tolls upon the quantity of freight would throw the door wide open for fraud, or at least require such minute measurement as to be impracticable. It is in every way more convenient in fixing charges to determine the rates according to the tonnage; that is, by the capacity of the vessel, and not by the cargo that is hauled.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I see the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce here I should like to ask him what is to be the program with reference to the trust legislation. Are we going to postpone that now until the river and harbor bill is disposed of?

Mr. SIMMONS. Did the Senator ask me a question? If so, I did not hear it.

Mr. BORAH. I was asking the Senator from Nevada, but I am willing that the Senator from North Carolina shall speak.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Nevada is present.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It has been the sense of the Interstate Commerce Committee that it should not press the trade commission bill until it has disposed of the securities bill now pending before it, the view being that there is quite a general demand upon both sides of the Chamber that all the so-called trust legislation should be reported to the Senate before we acted finally upon any of the bills. The Interstate Commerce Committee prepared its final draft yesterday, and it is printed to-day and is now under the inspection of the various members of the committee with a view to final action to-morrow morning, when we hope to report that bill.

As to the Clayton bill pending before the Judiciary Committee, I am told that the bill is finally shaped and the report is being written and that it will be filed to-morrow.

So whilst I did expect that these reports would be filed to-day and that we would be able to proceed with the trade commission bill to-day, I find that the condition is such that we will not be able to proceed with it until to-morrow. Then I shall expect to press the bill vigorously.

Mr. BORAH. I understand, then, the program will be not to delay longer than to-morrow.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

Mr. BORAH. Whether other bills are reported or not? If the other two bills are not reported, I understand we will go ahead with the trade commission bill to-morrow, anyway.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; that is my intention.

Mr. BORAH. I have no intention to find fault or to criticize. While there is some difference of opinion on this side of the Chamber, speaking for myself I am not in favor of the commission bill as it stands, but I am ready to help it to its final passage, or any other trust legislation that has to go through.

Mr. KENYON. I understood the Senator from Nevada to say last week that he would vigorously press the trade commission bill. He now states that he will vigorously press it some time in the future; but evidently the bill is not to be pressed this afternoon. As we have now spent some hour and a half on the river and harbor bill, it seems to me there is a measure of much more importance that should be considered by the Senate. I gave notice on the 9th day of March that I would ask for the consideration of Senate bill 392 at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The river and harbor bill is the unfinished business, I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS' RETIRED LIST.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa what is the bill that he speaks of?

Mr. KENYON. It is a bill to place on the retired list the volunteer officers of the Civil War. Their average age is now 76 years. There has been an earnest effort made on the part of their friends throughout the country to induce Congress to take up this measure. It has been before Congress for a great many years. The Committee on Military Affairs finally reported it out, and it is on the calendar. We have tried time and time again to get it up. There is going to be plenty of opportunity, apparently, to consider the river and harbor bill, and this bill would not bring out very much discussion. I think we could dispose of it this afternoon. It is a mere act of justice to these old veterans of the Civil War. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 392.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What is the bill?

Mr. KENYON. It is what is termed the volunteer officers' retired bill.

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator from Iowa if that is not the same bill the Senator or some other Senator upon the other side moved to take up and displace the river and harbor bill a few days ago?

Mr. KENYON. I made no motion to take it up. I think some one did move to take it up. I earnestly hope it may displace the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] moved to take up the bill the other day.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I was about to state that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] the other day made this same motion. I am very much in favor of the bill referred to by the Senator from Iowa. I took an active interest in its promotion before the committee, and I am willing to do everything I can to further its passage, but the Senators on the other side certainly can not be acting in the interest, in the real interest, of these old soldiers when they undertake to give this bill a partisan cast and undertake time after time and time after time to displace an appropriation bill that must be passed, using it as a sort of a weapon for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. KERN. My judgment is——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire rises to a point of order, which he will state.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is not a debatable question; and if it is to be debated, I want to have it left open, because I want to say something in reply to what the Senator from Indiana states.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that it is not debatable, and there is a call for the regular order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Cummins	Overman	Smoot
Borah	Gallinger	Page	Stone
Brady	Gronna	Perkins	Thomas
Brandegee	Hollis	Pittman	Thompson
Bryan	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thornton
Burton	Kern	Saulsbury	Weeks
Catron	Lane	Shafroth	West
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	White
Chilton	Lippitt	Shields	Works
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Clarke, Ark.	Myers	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have responded to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. JAMES, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. SWANSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. CAMDEN, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. BRISTOW, and Mr. HUGHES entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, to take up the bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY]. I vote "nay." I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. MCCUMBER] and vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent from the Chamber. He is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but under the terms of it I have a right to vote as I please on this kind of a question, and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the negative). I voted, but I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask if the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. LIPPITT. As I have a pair with that Senator I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have announced my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I now desire to transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 32—as follows:

So Mr. KENYON's motion was rejected.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in dwelling upon the deficiency of our statistics, I would add that it is extremely desirable that the figures relating to traffic should be separately published. At present they are scattered through several volumes and are given but incidental attention. It was not until about 12 years ago that any importance seems to have been attached to the traffic on the rivers and harbors which were being improved. At that time when delegations came to Washington to ask for appropriations they were invariably confronted with the question, "What is the present and prospective traffic of the river or harbor whose improvement you advocate?" Immediately commercial bodies began to realize the importance of those figures. They cooperated with the engineers, and, as a result, our statistics were made much more comprehensive and perfect.

There is, I think, a general tendency to exaggerate the amount of traffic. For instance, in an improvement upon which a report was made to Congress, the local engineer expressed his doubt upon the accuracy of the figures given, stating that he could not see how the traffic could be so large. The board of review, in going more deeply into the question, found that the amount of existing traffic had been multiplied by 10. There have been other instances in which on careful analysis the figures have been found altogether untrustworthy; but with a careful review, with that scrutiny which the respective engineers would naturally give to the reports made by chambers of commerce and other bodies—more frequently, I may say, these erroneous reports are made by individuals who advocate an improvement—I do not think there is much question that accurate results can be obtained if sufficient effort is put forth.

These figures should be published either as an appendix to the Engineers report or, better still, in a separate volume, such as is the custom in France and also Germany, though in a somewhat less degree. It is especially desirable that the traffic, partly by sea and partly by river, should be distinguished from that which is exclusively by river. A great deal of confusion has arisen from a lack of this discrimination. For instance, there is no similarity between the traffic on the Delaware River below Philadelphia and the traffic on the Mississippi River above New Orleans; nor is there any natural basis for comparison between the traffic on the Mississippi River below New Orleans and that above that city. The traffic below New Orleans is almost exclusively in connection with the sea; it is made up of the freight brought in and carried out by boats which sail thereon to the Gulf and carry their cargoes to foreign lands or to the seaports of this country, while the traffic above New Orleans on the Mississippi River is almost exclusively, in strict terms, river traffic. I say that with the exception, in order that I may be entirely understood, that occasional boats go up to Baton Rouge from the Gulf. There is a sufficient draft for that purpose, there being perhaps 30 feet all the way to Baton Rouge; but taking the traffic to which I refer on the Delaware River below Philadelphia, that between different points on the river is trivial. There is, however, a traffic of more than 20,000 000 tons brought in from or carried out to the sea. That same distinction is observable everywhere.

In foreign countries the importance of the Thames below London as a local stream is not of importance, but the river is of supreme importance as affording access to the North Sea for the great traffic of the port of London. We may take also the case of minor rivers, such as the Kennebec, leading to Augusta; the Penobscot, leading to Bangor; and the Connecticut, leading to Hartford. That traffic is partly by river and partly by sea. The cities of Bangor and Augusta have a through line from Boston and the city of Hartford has a through line from New York. The boats sail from New York through the East River and Long Island Sound to the mouth of the Connecticut, and then go up the river to Hartford. This is in no sense river traffic in the manner in which that term is ordinarily used.

Mr. President, I now pass from this first branch of the inquiry. It is perhaps fit that I should apologize to the Senate for having given so much attention to the question of facts and statistics, but, view this question as we will, there is the source of the whole difficulty. We have been improving rivers and we have been improving harbors without adequate understanding of the results. Figures are now available, though not in the abundance which I should like, to show certain tendencies. When those tendencies are understood we shall cease making many of the appropriations that we have been making; we will realize that streams which have been developed at great expense may have been useful arteries of commerce in the past but they are not so now, and the future holds out no prospects that they ever will be.

Possibly a change may occur. Almost every year we read in the newspapers or we hear from delegations of a new type of steamboat or barge which it is maintained will revolutionize conditions and restore the waning traffic on rivers. Again, almost every year we read or hear of some new boat line on some of the rivers which will rejuvenate traffic and give to the streams upon which it is located a restoration of the former conditions when boats were numerous; but usually, after the lapse of a year or two, the old conditions recur—the new style of boat is found not to be much better than the old style, and the new boat line is found to be unprofitable. Oftentimes there have been instances in which at the end of the week—it may be on Saturday night—an association of business men has made a declaration that they would give their traffic to a new boat line on the river, but on Monday morning they are making arrangements with the railroads for carrying the freight in the old way. I think nothing less than a sworn oath would make it sure that those shippers who for a time are so enthusiastic for river traffic will patronize the rivers to any very considerable extent. It thus becomes necessary for us to review this whole subject, to ascertain where we are, and to analyze these different propositions before us, so that we may act wisely in the making of appropriations. We shall find, when we recognize present conditions, that they are very different from those of the past; that rivers and streams which were utilized profitably 20 or 30 years ago are without promise of profit for the future.

Improvements of harbors have in general produced much better results than those upon rivers. This is especially true of ports of major importance, like Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, New Orleans, Galveston, and many harbors on the Great Lakes.

The table hereafter given sets forth a statement of harbors on which more than $5,000,000 has been expended by the Federal Government in the relative order of their commerce either for the calendar year 1912 or for the fiscal year 1913, according as statistics are available. The expenditures to June 30, 1913, are also given.

It will be noted that there is included in this list the sums expended on rivers, some of which are of considerable length, in that portion which connects a port with the sea. I have already mentioned the fact that the rivers leading to certain ports are not, in the ordinary sense, devoted to river transportation, but that they are utilized merely for connection with the sea. The most notable examples of these are the Delaware to Philadelphia, the Patapsco to Baltimore, the Columbia and Willamette to Portland, the Mississippi to New Orleans, the Savannah to Savannah, the St. Johns River to Jacksonville, and the Cape Fear River to Wilmington, N. C. It is quite as essential that the expenditure for the improvement of these rivers which afford access to the sea should be included under the head of harbors as that a bay, such as Massachusetts Bay, which affords access to Boston, or Mobile Bay, which furnishes means of communication to Mobile, should be included under the head of expenditures upon harbors. I concede that it is exceedingly difficult to make a satisfactory classification, but the one adopted is the most accurate. The following is a list of harbors on which more than $5,000,000 has been spent, in the order of their commerce:

Harbors on which more than $5,000,000 has been spent, in the relative order of their commerce for last year.

[2] Foreign commerce only. Prepared from statistics of the New York State Chamber of Commerce. See page 1680, volume 2, Engineers Reports for 1913.

[3] The Duluth and Superior projects were combined by the act of June 3, 1896. This figure includes $574,246.82 expended prior to that date for Duluth, and $695,883.80 expended prior to that date on Superior Bay.

[4] This figure includes 4,685,234 tons carried on car floats between Philadelphia and Camden.

[5] Of this amount $3,950,000 was expended on the Philadelphia Harbor. See page 1749, volume 2, Engineers Reports, 1913.

[6] This includes local traffic not passing to and from Portland through the mouth of the Columbia.

[7] This includes the South Pass and the Southwest Pass.

[8] This does not include all of the traffic of Boston, but the figures are the best available.

First comes New York Harbor. This stands far and away at the head, with an estimated commerce of 90,000,000 tons. It is true that this figure includes freight carried by ferries, and that the traffic of that harbor, with its different channels, when you take into account ferriage, domestic commerce, and foreign commerce, presents such complications that it is almost impossible to arrive at any satisfactory figure. It is nevertheless true that it is the leading harbor in the United States, and, judging by volume of traffic, it is no doubt the greatest harbor in the world.

Those who are proud of this country, of its production, of its commerce, and of its transportation facilities can hardly realize the importance of the features which give supremacy to New York Harbor. It has three characteristics which, taken together, make it stand out in a class by itself. First is the ease of access from the sea. The best approach from the south for an ocean steamship seeking the wharves at New York is through the so-called Ambrose Channel, 2,000 feet in width and 40 feet in depth—a depth, without counting the tide of some 6 feet, sufficient to admit at all stages the largest boat in the world, and with a width which gives abundant seaway. This approach is protected at the entrance by Long Island on the north and by the New Jersey coast on the west, giving it an advantage over any harbor in the world in its protection from the troublesome winds, those from the north and from the west.

There is a similar advantage, though less marked, in the access through Long Island Sound and the East River. While storms of considerable violence sometimes prevail on Long Island Sound, there is here also a large body of water in which there is the best of protection from the wind and from the difficulties which many boats experience in approaching a safe haven. The second feature of importance is the very great area——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Pittman	Sterling
Borah	Hollis	Ransdell	Stone
Brady	Hughes	Reed	Swanson
Bryan	James	Saulsbury	Thomas
Burton	Jones	Shafroth	Thornton
Camden	Kern	Sheppard	Tillman
Catron	Martin, Va.	Simmons	West
Chamberlain	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	White
Chilton	Page	Smith, Ga.
Cummins	Perkins	Smoot

Mr. JONES. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] and the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] are detained on the business of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the call been concluded, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I had reference to. Has the announcement been made as to the number of Senators present?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. LANE responded to his name when called.

Mr. CLAPP, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request absent Senators to attend the sessions of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will request Senators who are absent to attend the sessions of the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS and Mr. NEWLANDS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is very warm in the Chamber, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KERN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer as on a previous vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. Under the terms of my pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] I can vote upon this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 36, as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The principle is well established that it does not require a quorum to carry a motion to adjourn; but does it not require a quorum to determine that a body shall not adjourn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that it does not. This was upon a call of the Senate for the purpose of determining whether a quorum was in attendance.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; this was a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And a motion pending that does not require a majority of the Senate to respond.

Mr. GALLINGER. Personally I should be glad to have the Chair at his convenience point out to me the rule that justifies that ruling. I shall not appeal from it, of course. It is well understood that if the majority votes to adjourn it does not require a quorum; but when a motion is made to adjourn and a quorum is not developed and the decision is adverse to the motion to adjourn, I do not think there is any rule that justifies the position that a quorum is not to be considered necessary.

The Secretary called the name of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Why does the Chair call for me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because there was not a quorum on the roll call, and the Senator from Arkansas is not recorded as present at that time.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas answered to his name.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, the call now is to develop a quorum, which was interrupted by my motion, to adjourn; am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The original call of a quorum is still open, and the Sergeant at Arms is endeavoring to get Senators here.

Mr. KENYON, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. BRISTOW entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, at the time my remarks were interrupted I was describing the second characteristic feature of excellence in New York Harbor. That is the very ample space for anchorage and the movement of vessels afforded by the wide expanse in the lower and the upper bay and the narrower channels in the Hudson River and in the East River, together with a number of subsidiary channels near at hand, such as the Kill Van Kull and the Arthur Kill. In this regard there is an exceptional amount of space for fleets to anchor and move about in waters of ample depth and width.

The third characteristic in which New York Harbor is absolutely supreme among all harbors is the facility with which freight can be transferred from the sea to the land and from the land to the sea. If a skilled draftsman had undertaken the task of preparing a plan for a harbor in which there would be the utmost convenience in reaching wharves and in providing space for the transfer of freight, he could not have surpassed what nature has furnished at New York Harbor. He might possibly have made Manhattan Island narrower, so that there would be only sufficient space for wharfage, for warehouses, and for railroad tracks to bring and take away the traffic; but if he had done that there would have been no space for population on the island. The abundance of land abutting on deep channels is phenomenal. The truth of this statement will be readily recognized by anyone who considers the water front extending from Bay Ridge and Red Hook along the westerly side of Brooklyn and that on the Hudson River, both on the New York and Jersey sides; on the East River, Newtown Creek in Brooklyn; farther away on the Kill Van Kull, the Arthur Kill, and other channels almost too numerous to mention. Nevertheless, with all this abundance of space, the harbor is congested, which is a proof of the enormous traffic in this great commercial course.

The expenditures on this harbor and adjacent channels, not including the Kill Van Kull and the Arthur Kill, and the Hudson River above New York, have been for the harbor proper $7,339,284, and for the Ambrose Channel, $5,103,510. Of this amount $4,000,000 was appropriated and authorized in the act of 1899. There was considerable delay in the completion of the work, due to the fact that there was no dredging equipment in the world adequate for undertaking the task of digging so wide and so deep a channel. The Government was compelled to build dredges of its own. The amount of $4,000,000 proved inadequate, and the further sum of $1,103,510 was appropriated and authorized in the act of 1907. It was something over 10 years after the first appropriation for this channel on the 3d of March, 1899, and its final completion. The Bay Ridge and Red Hook channel received an appropriation of $4,146,100. The Hudson River channel opposite the wharves, between New York on the one side and Jersey City and Hoboken on the other, received $225,000. Nature made here a channel of extraordinary depth and there has been very little necessity for dredging except in the portion near land, and that only in a small amount.

The amount appropriated for East River and Hell Gate, between New York City and Brooklyn, has been $6,233,341, making a total of nearly $23,000,000 for this harbor proper and for the channels immediately adjacent to it.

Of course an enormous additional sum has been expended for wharves and docks by private parties and by the city.

Mr. President, we may contemplate with pride the results that have been obtained by Government expenditures in this locality. Compared with this $23,000,000, a dock company, the Mersey Channel & Dock Co., in the city of Liverpool, has expended $130,000,000 to improve Liverpool Harbor. Of course the comparison is not an exact one, because the latter amount includes expenditures for basins, into which boats may go and load or unload their cargoes free from the influence of the tide. The tide is so considerable at Liverpool as to be a very disturbing factor. But we have, nevertheless, the fact that the Government of the United States has spent upon this magnificent harbor, so colossal in all the features that make up a port, but $23,000,000, as against an expenditure of $130,000,000 on the harbor of Liverpool.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. What does the Senator say about the ownership of the terminals at New York Harbor? Do not the railroads own a large part of the terminals there?

Mr. BURTON. Not on the water front. Those belong almost exclusively to the city. They are, however, leased to different steamship companies and to railroads.

Mr. KENYON. In a large number of our harbors are not the terminals owned entirely by the railroads?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator contemplates discussing that proposition?

Mr. BURTON. I may perhaps touch upon it, but I think that is hardly relevant to the present discussion. The question of public ownership or private ownership has been very much discussed in connection with conditions in New York Harbor on the Hudson River front. It has been maintained by some who are earnestly interested in the welfare of the city that private ownership would have been better than public ownership. I am not ready myself to accept that opinion. Leases are made, and made at very high figures, to steamship companies and to railroads.

Mr. KENYON. How is it where the water fronts are owned almost entirely by the railroads?

Mr. BURTON. That would be a great disadvantage. I shall touch on that subject.

Mr. KENYON. Congress is called upon to appropriate the money, and ought there not to be some provision by which there should be public wharves and public terminals?

Mr. BURTON. That is a question which I shall discuss.

Mr. KENYON. Otherwise they would be merely for the benefit of the railroads.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa where these terminals are owned by railroads to any great extent?

Mr. KENYON. The Commissioner of Corporations has made a very extended report upon the subject of transportation by water in the United States and part 3 deals almost entirely with that question. If the Senator will refer to that it will answer the question better than I can. I remember very distinctly in the discussion some years ago of the Panama toll proposition the Senator from New York referred to certain harbors in Connecticut where the water front was owned entirely by the New York, New Haven & Hartford, and, I think, there was one in New London.

Mr. GALLINGER. Bridgeport, more particularly.

Mr. BURTON. In this connection I will say in some harbors that is a decided feature and a disadvantage. So in the river and harbor bill for the year 1905 a provision was inserted providing for an improvement, where railroad control seemed probable, to the effect that charges on the wharves should be under regulation of the Secretary of War, and in other bills since then similar provisions have been enacted requiring that the community most interested should secure proper wharfage facilities which were not under a monopoly. That is the substance of the requirement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to suggest, if the Senator will permit me, if these privileges are leased at reasonable amounts there would be no great objection to ownership by railroads which run directly to those wharves. But, of course, if there is a monopoly and an excessive charge there ought to be some method of remedying it.

Mr. KENYON. Where the railroad owns its own terminal, the entire front of the harbor, and by that very fact excludes others from the business.

Mr. GALLINGER. If there was any remedy we could apply I think it ought to be done in cases of that kind.

Mr. BURTON. I shall take up that subject a little later.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask for information as to where the increase of wharfage and terminal facilities will be found later on, if the commerce of New York City grows, as we expect it will grow, with the opening of the enlarged Erie Barge Canal to Buffalo.

Mr. BURTON. One place would be secured by deepening shallow water on the west side in New Jersey, in very plain sight of the Statue of Liberty. I am not certain but this has already been made available, at least a part of it. Another, by extending the wharves up the Hudson River. Still another, on the water front of Long Island in and around Brooklyn. So there is almost unlimited opportunity. Of course, the proposition has been made to have ocean steamships stop at Montauk, at the east end of Long Island. That proposition received very considerable support 10 or 15 years ago. The situation is this: That with increased depth and greater loads and increased traffic it is almost impossible to keep pace with the demands of commerce.

I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that the number of tons handled in New York Harbor has doubled in the time I have been connected with river and harbor legislation, within probably 10 years.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator by what amount he thinks the traffic will be increased, either in tons or in percentage, owing to the large expenditure of $101,000,000 by the State of New York to widen and deepen the Erie Canal?

Mr. BURTON. By the way, let me give another place, the Harlem River. That is another place that may be utilized—the Harlem River—leaving the Hudson above New York, and coming down to East River. There some of the barge traffic could be accommodated. Does the Senator ask what percentage of increased traffic there will be?

Mr. PAGE. Yes. That is, traffic due to the opening of the canal from Buffalo to the Hudson River, with a depth of 12 feet.

Mr. BURTON. I would think it would increase the traffic, but I should not anticipate that this alone would add a very great percentage to the traffic which already exists. The increase in the future will be due quite as much to the normal increase of domestic and foreign traffic as it will be to the construction of that barge canal.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator anticipate that the traffic between the St. Lawrence River and New York City will be very materially increased when the Narrows of Lake Champlain are made 12 feet in depth?

Mr. BURTON. When the Canadian Government finishes its part of it north of Lake Champlain?

Mr. PAGE. Yes. On the Richelieu River.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. I would anticipate the development of very considerable traffic. In the present Narrows of Lake Champlain the amount of traffic going through is, I believe, a little over 500,000 tons.

Mr. PAGE. That is correct.

Mr. BURTON. Some years ago it was more than that; it was about 700,000 tons. The traffic of New York Harbor is now about 90,000,000 tons. You can see that any probable increase from that source is not going to add a very great percentage to the space already in demand.

Mr. PAGE. The question in my mind was as to the extent of the traffic through the lake, which is now practically shut off to a large extent, because the large boats now run south only to Ticonderoga. In the channel south of Ticonderoga there is only 5 or 6 feet depth of water a good part of the time, but with the channel deepened to 12 feet, as is now proposed, so that large barges may load grain at Quebec, Montreal, Three Rivers, and other points on the St. Lawrence, it seems to me the great grain product of eastern Canada will eventually find its way down the Richelieu River, Lake Champlain, the Champlain Canal, and the Hudson River to New York.

Mr. BURTON. I should think that problematical. It might be, but that grain is already near the great river of St. Lawrence, and the distance to Europe is shorter by the river and Gulf of St. Lawrence than through the Richelieu River, Lake Champlain, Champlain Canal, and the Hudson River to New York and then by ship from there.

Then, another thing, you have all the governmental regulations, and every effort will be made in Canada to provide for shipping that grain by a water route directly connecting Canada with European ports.

Mr. PAGE. But the Senator must remember that during a good part of the year the St. Lawrence River is closed by ice. Of course, navigation would be closed through Lake Champlain as well; but for all that there is a large lumber, pulp, and grain traffic there that it seems to me may be developed both from Quebec and from Montreal which will eventually increase the Lake Champlain and Hudson River traffic to a very great extent.

Mr. BURTON. I think so; but as to that grain traffic I doubt very much.

There is one point in this connection to be taken into account. There are facilities for shallow draft boats in and near New York. It is very much easier to provide wharfage facilities and warehouses for traffic that comes through a barge canal 12 feet deep than it is to provide for the ocean traffic. The ocean traffic comes in on boats from nearly 40 feet draft down to 20 and 15 feet, and in order that they may obtain wharves at which they may unload their cargoes it is necessary that there be deep water. There is a large amount of channel room around New York which would provide for boats or barges from a barge canal 12 feet deep, but which would not provide for one of these ocean steamers. So that probably will be a comparatively simple problem. The great strain is to obtain deep and not shallow water frontage such as would be required for boats from the canal. I should fancy that the Harlem River would provide for some of it, and that it might be barged into some of the shallow harbors and river channels in and around New York and Brooklyn, possibly clear around Coney Island to Jamaica Bay. It should be remembered that much of the freight brought from the canal will be consumed in Greater New York and near-by points. Another class of freight may be intended for transshipment, and for this deep channels are desirable, so that a transfer may be made to ocean steamers.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator if he anticipates that in the next half century there will be a type of boat built drawing only 12 feet of water that will take freight at Buffalo or Montreal and bring it through these canals to New York and then proceed coastwise without transshipping?

Mr. BURTON. That opens up a very broad question. Of course it is possible to use boats which ply in shallow channels on deep channels as well, but I do not think it is probable. Boats might be used on the Mississippi River of greater draft than the three that Columbus had when he discovered America. I have some figures somewhere showing the cost per ton of building a boat for deep-water navigation and for shallow-water navigation. A much cheaper boat will carry the traffic on the rivers. The model of the boats will be different. More attention will be paid to the steering gear on a river boat than on an ocean boat, and as a result transportation is so much cheaper on one of these less expensive boats that it becomes a question which is the most profitable to build, a boat that will take your freight through these canals, as the Senator says, and then out into the ocean, or to build boats that will carry the freight to the ocean side to deep water and then reload.

Mr. PERKINS. That would be much cheaper.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from California knows more about this subject than any of us. I think the great bulk of the traffic in such cases as that will be transshipped at the place where the shallower channel meets the sea.

Mr. PAGE. Is it expected that in the Mississippi River development as was just suggested by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], there will be a type of boats built that will take the freight from St. Louis down through the Mississippi River to New Orleans and then on down to Panama?

Mr. BURTON. A great many have said that. I have not taken what they said very seriously.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator thinks that is not practicable?

Mr. BURTON. In the first place, the model of your boat is altogether different. The method in which you maneuver the boat is very different on the river than it would be out in the Gulf. Then, again, I do not turn immediately to those figures, but my impression is that the cost of a steamer is about as 26 to 100. A boat that would stand the voyage out in the open sea must be much more solidly built than the one required in the river channel, and it is hardly profitable to build a boat which, in the first place, is much more expensive and, in the next place, can hardly be built so as to be suited for both shallow and deep water; at least, when you have the opportunity to transfer to deeper draft boats.

Mr. PAGE. The transfer costs about half a dollar a ton.

Mr. BURTON. Sometimes it costs more than that. It depends on your commodity. Everything is against the transfer, I can tell the Senator that. That is a strong statement to make, but, generally speaking, the expense of transfer has grown out of proportion to the expense of hauling. This is at least true of inland commerce, and it is one great fact that should be especially noticed in river transportation as related to railroad transportation.

Mr. PAGE. But is it not true that year by year they are managing to transfer freight from boats at a less and less sum? Fifty and sixty cents now cover the transfer of grain, coal, iron ore, and heavy material of that kind.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think we can fix that average. For instance, iron ore is loaded on Lake Superior from tipples into the boats where it would cost less than 10 cents. It is brought to a port on railroad cars and they are tipped over or put into a receptacle. It then goes down by the force of gravity into the boat. I do not suppose it costs 5 cents a ton. It all depends on your mechanism and on the materials you are handling. It would be much larger, I will say, on package freight that has to be handled carefully to protect it from breakage than it would be for handling ore and coal by transfer. Ore is about the least expensive probably to transfer.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. I wish to thank the Senator for his information. It is very interesting.

Mr. BURTON. It is given extemporaneously, and it is a subject which requires very careful thought. I do not believe in the idea that boats are going to be used on rivers and then go out into the open sea. You can build a boat that will do it, and you can even find men who are venturesome enough to go out upon one that is not well constructed into the ocean with its waves and storms; but it is not a natural method for going to sea.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. In answer to the question of the Senator from Vermont I wish to say that a Hollander, Mr. John H. Bernhard, has recently perfected a type of boat which he thinks is going to revolutionize that trade and extend transportation on our interior rivers. I have a letter in my hand from him, dated the 18th of this month, in which he says he incloses an article from the New Orleans Item. If it does not take up too much of the Senator's time, I should like to read it.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. Bernhard says:

> When the discussion of the rivers and harbors bill comes up in the Senate and you refer to this, kindly remember that this is not all, but I am getting ready to send within the next 10 or 15 days a 1,000-ton barge to Denison, Tex.—

That is away up the Red River, as the Senator probably knows, where there is very little depth to it.

> And on the 1st of September a barge will leave here fully loaded with sugar for Corpus Christi, Tex., going, where possible, along the Intercoastal Canal—

I will state that the Intercoastal Canal, where it exists, is 5 feet in depth—> but considering the fact that it is not entirely complete we will have to go part of the way coastwise, suffering a great loss of time. On the 15th of September I am going to send a barge from here to Jacksonville, Fla., also coastwise. If there was only the proper system of inland waterways, why, inland navigation would be revived so much the quicker.

I merely bring this in at this time in answer to the question of the Senator from Vermont, to show that in the opinion of this gentleman, Mr. Bernhard, who is one of the brightest men

I have met, it is probably entirely feasible to load a barge on the extreme upper Mississippi, send it down the river, and then on to Panama. If he can, with the small barges which he is now building, send one out in the Gulf from New Orleans to Jacksonville, and from New Orleans to Corpus Christi, a part of the way over a 5-foot waterway in the interior, and then out into the Gulf, it surely seems to me that with a perfected channel of not less than 6 feet up to Minneapolis, and not less than 9 feet that we now have from Cairo down, he can load those barges and let them go all the way to Panama.

Of course I am no expert on this subject, and I would not pretend to express an opinion, but I thought when we had the matter before our committee——

Mr. WEST. Are those barges towed or do they travel by steam?

Mr. RANSDELL. They are steel barges. He uses a propeller, I may say, rather than a stern wheel, and he uses a kind of gasoline engine.

Mr. BURTON. A Diesel engine.

Mr. RANSDELL. He is very hopeful. He testified before the Committee on Commerce that he is now delivering coal in the city of New Orleans from the coal fields of Alabama, through the Warrior and Tombigbee River system in their unfinished condition, at a very much lower rate than they have ever been able to get it, so that he can sell for 75 cents per ton cheaper than it has been sold there.

Mr. PAGE. If the project of deepening the Mississippi River is carried out, what depth does the Senator anticipate when the work is completed?

Mr. RANSDELL. Nine feet from Cairo to New Orleans; 8 feet between Cairo and St. Louis. The present project from St. Louis to Minneapolis and St. Paul is 6 feet.

Mr. PAGE. And from St. Louis to the Gulf how much?

Mr. RANSDELL. Eight feet for 200 miles, from St. Louis to Cairo, and 9 feet for the balance of the way. There are already 9 feet, I may say, from Cairo to the Gulf. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I listened to Mr. Bernhard with a great deal of interest as an enthusiastic and very intelligent young man, but my hopes in such cases are very much dampened by experience. About every other year for the last 20 years I have listened to men possessed of equal enthusiasm, who felt sure they had some invention which would revolutionize river traffic, and in almost every case their expectations have not been realized. I really was pleased, and almost startled, I may say, by what Mr. Bernhard said in regard to the ability to carry coal from the Black Warrior River region down through the locks to Mobile Bay, and then out to the Mississippi Sound, and then by the Mississippi to New Orleans. That route, however involves no very serious difficulty, because most of the way, even in the open Gulf, it is protected by islands near at hand.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, before the Senator gets off on that line I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. It strikes me that the shallow-draft boats in the Gulf of Mexico, especially along about September, would encounter great difficulty with the equinoctial gales. Does the expert say that these shallow-draft boats can weather the storms that we have on the Gulf?

Mr. RANSDELL. I have not gone into details. I will state to the Senator, but from my understanding of Mr. Bernhard's testimony these boats are so constructed that they will stand storms. They are entirely different from the old style of construction, and I gathered from him that in his opinion they would stand a reasonable storm; in fact, I think he said so. That is my recollection of his testimony.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURTON. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to know if these boats ever go out into the Gulf of Mexico?

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand so.

Mr. WHITE. They never get out into the ocean?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. Bernhard states here that he is going to take one of the boats over to Corpus Christi, and he would have to go out into the Gulf a part of the distance, and that he was also going to take one to Jacksonville, in which event he will have to go out into the Gulf.

Mr. WHITE. I have myself seen boats ply between Tuscaloosa, Ala., and the inland.

Mr. RANSDELL. Those boats do not go into the Gulf. He told us that a certain type of boat could go in the Gulf. Of course I am no expert and know nothing about it.

Mr. WHITE. In reference to these equinoctial storms, the boat would not leave port when storms are threatening.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to interrupt the Senator again if he will allow me.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Have there been constructed any inland waterways with a 12-foot channel, the depth now proposed in the new Erie Canal?

Mr. BURTON. On the Mississippi, for 320 miles to the Gulf, there is 30 feet now.

Mr. PAGE. The point I want to emphasize is this: Yankee ingenuity is equal to almost anything when it is compelled to accomplish a task. It seems to me that if we should develop a 12-foot waterway for commerce, passing down the lower Mississippi into the Gulf of Mexico, which is not a very calm sea, as I understand it, is it not probable that the mind of the Yankee will eventually develop a boat that can navigate this 12-foot waterway and also navigate the ocean?

Mr. BURTON. I do not expect it. There is a wide difference between an inland waterway 12 feet deep and the open sea, a difference in the storms and winds which confront a ship. As a result of that, river ships and ocean ships are constructed on entirely different models. I am very skeptical about the success on inland waters of any single boat which carries its power within itself. In France the self-propelled boat carries, I think, less than a sixtieth part of the traffic on the rivers. I may be in error about that, but that is my recollection. It carries, however, a very small proportion, and that proportion is diminishing. River traffic is most economically conducted by barges with tugs. On the Rhine, for instance, with its splendid possibilities, the traffic is exclusively, or almost exclusively, by barges hauled by tugs. The advantage of the boat which Mr. Bernhard has devised is the very small amount of space and the limited amount of weight required for the propelling machinery, and for the fuel which is used. Just what he can accomplish by that I do not know. He seems to have accomplished some results already.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio well remembers that 40 years ago there was a very large traffic on Lake Champlain. The vessels there were floating palaces. I do not know what depth they drew, but probably not over 12 feet, because they went down through the narrows at the south.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think they drew as much as that.

Mr. PAGE. But they were large vessels.

Mr. BURTON. I will ask the Senator from Louisiana, What did the Mississippi River steamboats draw? Not more than 6 or 7 feet, did they?

Mr. RANSDELL. About 7 feet, as I recall.

Mr. BURTON. And they were floating palaces.

Mr. RANSDELL. When heavily loaded, they sometimes drew from 8 feet to 8½ feet, as I recall.

Mr. BURTON. They probably were not loaded heavily except under certain conditions.

Mr. PAGE. I remember very well that the freight and passenger vessels on Lake Champlain 40 years ago were quite sizable vessels, and they went down through the narrows; but after a while the railroads got control of these Champlain Transportation Co. vessels and they cut off the travel by these boats south of Ticonderoga to Whitehall, and from that day to this the narrows have been filling up. It is true, as the Senator says, that the traffic through the narrows is now only about 500,000 tons, whereas 5 or 10 years ago the traffic was over 800,000 tons.

Mr. BURTON. How is that traffic carried—by barges or by self-propelled steamers?

Mr. PAGE. It is now carried largely on the ordinary canal boat. I do not think those canal boats generally carry over 300 tons, many of them less than that, and they are hauled by tugs.

Mr. BURTON. That is the equivalent of a barge. Do they put two or three together in one tow?

Mr. PAGE. Oh, yes; half a dozen or more. It is only a few years since the large steamers on Lake Champlain went through the narrows. Their passenger business was large and the freight traffic was quite large. But for a good many years—I should say for 20 or more—large vessels have not run south of Ticonderoga. The railroads have diverted this traffic at Ticonderoga to the West Shore Railroad line south to New York. The hope now is that we shall soon have that channel again open, so that sizable boats can be put on the whole length of the lake, and, indeed, go down into the St. Lawrence River and on to Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. BURTON. There are probably two or three reasons for the railroads taking over that traffic; their discrimination and their superior organization, which are artificial advantages, and, in addition to that, there are other advantages which you may call natural—their wider area of distribution, the great increase in cargo capacity per trainload of the railways; the traction power of the locomotive has enormously increased; the capacity of the cars has been made greater, and hence the capacity of the trainload. I should think, however, there would be a deal of traffic into the Lake Champlain region, which, if there were a 12-foot waterway up there, would be carried by water.

Mr. PAGE. The 12-foot waterway is not only assured, but it is already built from the Hudson River up to the lower end of Lake Champlain.

Mr. BURTON. Is it finished?

Mr. PAGE. It is finished now, I think, or will be finished next year.

Speaking of economic conditions, I will say that I well remember when the town of Swanton, on Lake Champlain, had a very good dock and our coal and salt came to that dock in large quantities. The railroad owned the dock, so that they were under no expense, except a very slight one to keep it in repair, and yet the dock has been abandoned, and the larger part of our coal now either comes by way of lake and rail to Burlington or comes all rail from the mines.

Mr. BURTON. It comes by rail from the mines?

Mr. PAGE. Yes; the coal from the Buffalo, Rochester, and the Pittsburgh region comes through all rail, as I understand it.

Mr. BURTON. As to that coming by way of Burlington, does it come part way by water?

Mr. PAGE. A great deal of it comes by rail, but there is some that comes by water and rail.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I be permitted to read, from the testimony of Mr. John H. Bernhard before the Senate Committee on Commerce on the 26th day of March last, on the very point which the Senator from Vermont has been discussing?

Mr. GALLINGER. May I interrupt the Senator from Louisiana, to ask if he will first state who Mr. Bernhard is? I am not familiar with that name.

Mr. RANSDELL. He is a Hollander, though his home, I think, now is in New Orleans. I am not sure as to that, but he gives that as his voting place, and he is there temporarily.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is he a naval constructor?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir. He claims that that is his business, and that his father and his grandfather before him were in that business. Mr. Bernhard has been in this country a few years.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. Here is what he says regarding his boat:

It is 240 feet long, 32 feet wide, 8 feet deep, and drawing 6 feet of water. They are equipped with two 75-horsepower gas engines, and have a speed of 8⅞ miles empty and an average of 7½ when loaded. The cargo is carried on deck so that coal can be spouted quickly on the barge, unhampered by hatches, and can be unloaded quickly—the hold of the barge solely used for strengthening purposes and becoming identical to a hollow beam. We have a water-tight bulkhead on either side of the hold, closing this off from the crew's quarters and engine room; there are five lattice trusses in the hold acting the same as a bridge girder, supported on two ends. That has the great advantage that you can now place steel in the hold where you need it the most.

As to the passage in the Gulf, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] asked Mr. Bernhard this question:

Allow me to interrupt you there. You said the boats were flat bottom and had no keel. Could such boats be navigated with safety on the ocean to Panama—across the Gulf?

The very question the Senator from Vermont has asked.

Mr. BERNHARD. Allow me to answer you in a rather lengthy way as to that. The first barge was ready on the 1st of July and the insurance companies had insisted upon an insurance of 5 per cent. In some places 7½ per cent is paid. I had asked them to reduce it because these barges were seaworthy, although they were designed only for inland waters, and we proved this as follows: On the 2d of July a party 20 miles above Pensacola got me on the long-distance phone. He said: "I am in a fearful fix. If by Saturday week, which is the 12th of July, 1913, I can bring my 3,000 barrels of rosin into New York, I will have delivered them before the expiration of my contract and will make a good profit on my rosin, while if they are delivered after Saturday, I will lose a considerable amount of money. I have them now on flat cars—32 flat cars." That was on the 2d of July, Tuesday. He said: "The railroad will not promise delivery Monday in New Orleans. I can not ship from Pensacola because no ship leaves. If I have them Monday morning in New Orleans I can make my money. What can you suggest?" I said: "A trial trip is going to be made very soon; either to-day or to-morrow with the first barge. I am very anxious to give her the severest test I can, because I can not go with every barge. I am willing to go through the Gulf of Mexico to Pensacola and take those 3,000 barrels of rosin." We went to that town, which was Bagdad, Fla., and arrived at 8 o'clock in the morning of July the 5th, a Saturday, and found the 32 flat cars loaded with 3,000 barrels of rosin waiting for us. It took only six hours to load the 3,000 barrels of rosin. Those 3,000 barrels of rosin were loaded on her in six hours, because we can take the sides down anywhere; we rolled the barrels from skids so fast that we needed two men to count them, and we were through at 5 o'clock in the evening. We went through the Gulf of Mexico and arrived at New Orleans the next Monday morning. If this man had taken his rosin to an express company he would not have had it delivered in time. We cut the freight rate 10 cents a barrel and made $750 in 39 hours, making a handsome profit.

That proves beyond any doubt the safety of the barge—not being constructed for outside waters, not being constructed for Gulf service, yet she went through the Gulf with a load for which she was not constructed.

These barges, on the 22d of October, were in the Gulf, three of them. At that time there was a 60-mile gale; two vessels in Gulfport Harbor got damaged. The Government revenue cutter had to go into Mobile for protection. Those three barges were out in the Mississippi Sound; one went for anchor and the other two fought the storm, and none got damaged. I remember the date so well because that was the date of the first trip up the Warrior River. We had been delayed, because at every step we had great difficulties to overcome. October 22 was the lowest stage of the water. All navigation had stopped because the river had on some of the bars less than 2 feet of water. We went up on this barge drawing 4 feet, but we had 2 feet of ballast, as with a draft of 4 feet the propellers were amply submerged.

We went up the river and had our troubles; but we made the trip on a river which was impossible for the smaller boats to navigate at that stage of the water level.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Ohio again?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not infinitely more practicable to build a vessel able to navigate on the ocean where you can build it for a 12-foot waterway than where you are limited to a 5 or 6 or 8 foot waterway?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I am not so sure about that. It is not merely a question of draft and size, but there is a question of handling and steering. In a river there are currents, and you have to be constantly taking pains to see that your boat is not driven against the banks. Possibly you may get into a cross current and turn right around. Thus it is necessary to have steering gear of greater relative importance on a river boat than on an ocean steamer. The ocean steamer, of course, has its steering gear, but it would be helpless in a river with a strong current; it would be constantly running into shallow water or running on the banks. Again, as I have said, the model is altogether different. Those vital differences between ocean navigation and river navigation are not removed by a difference in draft of 5 or 6 feet as compared with 12 feet. Of course, with 12 feet you could construct a larger boat, and, being larger, it would probably be more stanch.

Mr. PAGE. Would not the shallow-draft boat be a different type of boat? It would be almost a flatboat, would it not?

Mr. BURTON. The larger boat would have to have the same mechanism for steering gear and for operating in the channels and currents that would be required on the smaller boat.

Mr. PAGE. A boat does not have to be especially provided for channels and currents when it goes through the Erie Canal. There you have very calm water and the boats go through it with very little steering, as I understand.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; but even so you have to be careful to see that the boat does not go against the side of the canal.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that in time they will provide some steering gear, perhaps from the sides of the canal, in that great waterway from Buffalo to New York that will make it practicable to run a boat through there without injury to the boat even if she had only ordinary steering gear?

Mr. BURTON. I think it is possible to construct such a boat, although the qualities of such boats would be as different as mechanism which provides for going ahead on the one hand and which provides for going sideways on the other.

Mr. PAGE. But the boat which has been described by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is almost of the flatboat type, while the boat that draws 12 feet of water can be made after the type of an ocean-going steamer.

Mr. BURTON. I do not wish to say anything in disparagement of Mr. Bernhard's efforts or his extreme hopefulness in this matter, but my judgment is influenced very much by the fact that periodically for years some one has come forward with a new style boat that was sure to accomplish wonders. I read briefly here in 1910 from a prospectus of a new line of boats on the Mississippi River, which was one of the most glowing prospectuses I had ever read, and I was interested in it because among its projectors were men who had been insistent, violent almost, and offensive against the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House because that committee did not immediately recognize the necessity of a 14-foot waterway in the Mississippi. They said they could make money and pay great dividends, and their promises were largely quoted in the RECORD in some remarks made by me in April, 1910. They set forth what a splendid scheme they had for carrying freight down the Mississippi River even with shallow-draft boats. Well, where is that company now?

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to ask the Senator if they actually carried any freight? Mr. Bernhard has been carrying it.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know that they ever did.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. Bernhard has a boat going up the river now.

Mr. BURTON. My experience with them was that they were a type of men with whom hope was equally as gratifying as realization, and I am not sure that they ever did put any boats on the river. They were telling what they could do.

Mr. RANSDELL. I recall the company very well.

Mr. BURTON. I have before me now the figures for which I was searching, and they bring out an important point in regard to using boats both on the inland rivers and on the sea, namely, the average value of vessels per ton of carrying capacity. The figures are somewhat confusing because they are given not only for steam and sail vessels, but for unrigged vessels. The real test is the aggregate value of all, and so I will only give one set of figures, those for all vessels. These figures show what it costs per ton of freight-carrying capacity to build a boat. Atlantic coast and Gulf of Mexico, $56 per ton; Pacific coast, including Alaska, $78 per ton. I really do not know why there is the great difference between $56 and $78 in that instance, but I suppose because wages and materials are somewhat higher on the Pacific coast.

Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River, $55 per ton. That is just a dollar less than on the Atlantic coast and the Gulf of Mexico.

On the Mississippi River and tributaries, $5 a ton.

So that for all vessels, which no doubt takes in the different kinds of craft used for carrying freight, such as barges, the cost is eleven times as much per ton on the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River and eleven and one-fifth times as much per ton on the Atlantic coast and Gulf of Mexico as it is on the Mississippi River.

All other inland waters, $18 per ton.

Anyone who is about to establish a transportation line would be confronted with those figures. They are taken from the United States census report on transportation for 1906. At the very outset it will be seen that the average cost of a floating craft required to carry a ton is eleven times as great and a little more on the Gulf of Mexico than it is on the Mississippi River; so that if one were to build a boat on the Mississippi River with a view to taking it into the Gulf, he would have to take that cost into account. That is a very prominent factor in this matter which has been so much discussed, and you will see a great deal more in the everyday newspaper than you will in the scientific journals about utilizing a boat both in inland waterways and canals and also out on the ocean. It is possible, but I do not think it is probable, that a boat will run, for instance, from St. Louis down to New Orleans and then out into the Gulf and down to Panama. The conditions in regard to the model of the boat and the water through which the boat must pass are so different in the two bodies of water that the probabilities are strongly against it.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator expect within the next 20 years to see an inland waterway along the border of the Atlantic that will accommodate all the coastwise traffic?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I do not know about that; I would not wish to express an opinion at this time. There are many persons who take opposite sides on the question. I may discuss it at some time. There are certain inland waterways that I quite believe in, shallow waterways near to the coast, but far enough back so that they are central to a producing area or areas and suitable for frail craft, but, as regards attempting an inland waterway all the way from Boston around to Corpus Christi or Matamoras, I am not quite sure that I expect to see that in 20 years. I do not really believe it would be profitable.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator will excuse me for a moment, I should like to make one further statement. An inland waterway such as the Senator speaks about is very largely dependent on the figures which I have just given. If the boats using such a waterway were to go out into the Gulf, they would cost $56 per ton, while if they built boats exclusively for use on inland waterways, where the water is shallow, they would not cost more than $5 a ton of freight-carrying capacity perhaps.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator will excuse me, I should like to finish my statement.

Mr. PAGE. Just one word. Does the Senator expect that such an intercoastal waterway, if that is the proper name for that kind of a waterway——

Mr. BURTON. I think intercoastal waterway is an appropriate term.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator think that the traffic on such a waterway would be in barges drawn by tugs, or would it be in vessels operated by their own power?

Mr. BURTON. Probably the former, in barges drawn by tugs; but such a waterway would be so different in its different parts that you can not answer that question by a general statement applicable to all its sections. For instance, there is a proposition in this bill for what is called the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal, that would make available a waterway for traffic from Baltimore to Philadelphia. There is such a waterway now. It is probable that a considerable share of that traffic will be by boats propelled by their own power. It would depend largely on the depth. If it is only 8 feet or 12 feet, or even 14 feet, naturally the larger share of the traffic will be by barges drawn by tugs, but if it gets beyond that depth a larger share would be by self-propelled vessels, that can go out into the Chesapeake Bay and the Delaware Bay and even into the ocean.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Nebraska will excuse me, I promised to yield to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST].

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if he knows of the method of carrying lumber from Jacksonville to New York that is now employed by Mr. Cummer, who has great lumber interests in Florida? He employs what, I think, he calls scows, drawn by very heavy towboats, two or three of the scows being attached together with cables.

Mr. BURTON. That is, barges or scows.

Mr. WEST. Barges or scows; yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. And a very heavy towboat is used to draw them?

Mr. WEST. A heavy towboat is employed to draw two or more of them. In that way he carries immense quantities of lumber from Jacksonville to New York, although the vessels have to go around Cape Hatteras, where the weather is almost always very rough; but I understand he has never lost a cargo of lumber. These scows carry about 500,000 feet of lumber to the scow.

Mr. BURTON. Which would weigh, dependent on the kind of lumber and the degree to which it was seasoned, say 1,250 tons.

Mr. WEST. The lumber carried is green lumber, and I think 500,000 feet would weigh 2,500,000 pounds.

Mr. BURTON. That makes 1,250 tons, just as I estimated. I was not aware that was being done. I take it that is a species of navigation very similar to rafting. Are not the scows low and near to the water, not having much freeboard?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir; they are built for capacity, for holding lumber. They have a way of fastening the lumber on so that it is not lost. I think on some trips the cables have broken a few times, but they have never lost a cargo.

Mr. BURTON. They do not bring back a return cargo, I am quite sure.

Mr. RANSDELL. What do they draw?

Mr. WEST. I do not know, but they are shallow-draft craft.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator does not know their draft.

Mr. WEST. No, sir; but they are shallow.

Mr. BURTON. I may say to the Senator from Georgia that what he describes is closely related to the rafting of logs. The main thing to be accomplished is to securely tie the lumber so that it will not get loose. If they can do that, they might carry a quantity of lumber in a manner even more convenient than the rafting of logs. I do not look upon that as creating any exception to the general rules in regard to traffic itself. It is itself an exception of course.

Mr. WEST. I will say to the Senator that I know of nobody else who is engaged in this business except Mr. Cummer, who operates a very large mill. This was an experiment when they went into it, but it has proven very successful.

Mr. BURTON. What I should fear, of course, in any such attempt as that would be that they would meet some frightful storm that would either break the scows loose from the tug or wreck them.

Mr. WEST. Yes. I will say that they have been in terrific storms, and they have broken loose, but they have never lost a scow.

Mr. BURTON. With that kind of a load, even if the scow did get loose, if the lumber was properly fastened together, it would probably float without destruction. They could recover it. Of course, there are some varieties of lumber of such a weight that they might sink if cut loose in the water.

Mr. LANE. They lash it down. I have been on such craft where they loaded them to the sinking point and lashed the lumber down in order to get a better grip on the tide.

Mr. BURTON. Do they carry lumber in any way like that out on the Pacific coast?

Mr. LANE. Only in the bays.

Mr. BURTON. They do not carry it out to sea, do they?

Mr. LANE. No. They transport it in those large rafts of logs.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	James	Perkins	Stone
Brady	Jones	Poindexter	Swanson
Bryan	Kern	Pomerene	Thomas
Burton	Lane	Shafroth	Thompson
Camden	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Thornton
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Vardaman
Chilton	Myers	Smith, Ariz.	West
Clapp	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	White
Clarke, Ark.	Norris	Smith, Md.	Works
Gronna	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Hollis	Page	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. RANSDELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. STERLING and Mr. TILLMAN answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a standing order to that effect. It has never been vacated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, pending that I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KERN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate adjourn.

The Senate refused to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. SAULSBURY, and Mr. REED entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There as a quorum present.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I had practically finished my remarks upon New York Harbor.

The next harbor in order of importance, judged by the tonnage, is that of Duluth-Superior, which has a tonnage of 41,474,776 tons and has been improved at a cost of $7,692,213.60. This includes $574,000 expended upon Duluth Harbor prior to the consolidation of the two projects on June 3, 1896, and $695,000 expended prior to that date on Superior Harbor. It will be seen that this, the second harbor in the United States in the magnitude of its traffic, has been improved at comparatively small cost—a little less than $8,000,000.

The next harbor in point of traffic is that of Philadelphia, including the channel to the sea, which is about 101 miles long, according to the official figures. In 1912 this harbor had a traffic of 26,267,335 tons, including 4,685,234 tons carried on car floats between Philadelphia and Camden. I think it hardly fair to include this latter amount, so deducting it the aggregate traffic of the harbor, including the channel to the sea, would be about 21,600,000 tons. It is fair to include the channel to the sea, at least so far as regards boats which ply to and from Philadelphia. The main object of the improvement of that river is to afford access to the port of Philadelphia; and of the expense incurred all but $3,950,000 was for the improvement of the river below Philadelphia. That makes the cost of the river below Philadelphia about $15,000,000.

This very important harbor, the third in the United States, with the means of access to it, has been improved at very great expense, because of the troublesome channels and currents in the Delaware River. One feature of those currents is that the tide does not always flow back to the sea upon the same lines upon which it moves forward on the ebb toward Philadelphia, and a great deal of silt is deposited in the channel on the upward flow of the tide which is not removed by the ebb.

The depth of the channel leading to New York Harbor and in Hudson River around in the neighborhood of the city is 40 feet at low tide. In the Philadelphia channel it is at present 30 feet, but there is a project well under way for increasing that depth to 35 feet. The additional cost of this is estimated at $6,809,200. In many respects a harbor so located must labor under disadvantages as compared with one nearer to the sea and approached by a bay. The harbor of Philadelphia is in many respects very similar to that of the city of London and to that of the city of Hamburg.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio is willing to suspend for a short time his very interesting and instructive address, I should like to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURTON. I am willing to suspend for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will it be agreeable to the Senator to go back into legislative session, in order that the Senator may finish his speech?

Mr. BURTON. Either way is entirely satisfactory to me. I shall be glad to yield.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bryan	Lane	Pomerene	Smith, Mich.
Burton	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Sterling
Camden	Martin, Va.	Reed	Stone
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Swanson
Clapp	Nelson	Sheppard	Thomas
Hollis	Norris	Simmons	Thornton
James	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	West
Kern	Page	Smith, Ga.	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 22, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 21, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, Almighty and ever-blessed God, our heavenly Father, at the beginning of a new congressional day, to commend our souls to Thy care and keeping, that we enter not into temptation, that we may fulfill the obligations resting upon us conscientiously, in accordance with our highest conceptions of right and duty; in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed the bill (H. R. 12919) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for enlarged homesteads," with a slight typographical error in it, and I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was engrossed and passed, so as to return to the amending stage for the purpose of offering a slight amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the House vacate the proceedings as to the bill H. R. 12919 back to the amendment stage, in order to correct a typographical error. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12919. Page 3, line 23, strike out the word "proofs" and insert in lieu thereof the word "proof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McDERMOTT] is recognized.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I arise to a question of the highest personal privilege. On the 29th of June, 1913, there appeared simultaneously in the New York World and the Chicago Tribune an article signed by Martin M. Mulhall, a former employee of the National Association of Manufacturers, containing certain charges against me. On July 9, 1913, I arose in my place on this floor, and calling attention to the article in question, I denounced it as outrageous and untrue, and asserted that I had never received a cent from anybody belonging to the National Association of Manufacturers. I also stated that I was ready to go before any committee at any time that might be selected to investigate the charges contained in the Mulhall articles. Afterwards a resolution of investigation was passed. A select committee was appointed and an exhaustive and long drawn-out investigation was made, the result being that the committee found all the substantial charges against myself to be false and without foundation. The investigation disclosed the fact that on all occasions I voted in this House in compliance with promises and pledges I made my constituents; at all times, whenever occasion presented itself, voting for the measures coming before Congress advocated by organized labor. Unfortunately, I came to this House a poor man; fortunately, however, for myself, taking into consideration the character of the charges made against me, I leave this House a poor man. I have been compelled during my service as a Member of this House to borrow money. I have not been in a position to go to banks and to tender to them the security they require. I have been compelled to borrow from my friends. It so happened that afterwards persons from whom I borrowed money became the opponents of certain legislation which passed this House affecting their business as pawnbrokers and as liquor dealers. In the matter of the pawnbrokers bill I voted also according to the suggestion of a great labor organization here—the Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia. On account of these loans I have been censured by this committee. The committee in their findings, after reviewing carefully all the evidence presented against me, said, with reference to these money lenders and liquor dealers:

> There is no evidence that such lobbies as were maintained by these effected or prevented legislation, improperly or otherwise.

However, with reference to these transactions, the committee hold that I have been guilty of acts of impropriety. In their report the committee state:

> The Members of the House know Mr. McDERMOTT; know his ideals and his characteristics as the public generally does not know, and in the nature of things can not know them. His training and associations have not given him the ethical perceptions and standards relative to public office that usually characterize public men. We can not say that he has been corrupted in his votes.

It is true that I have not had the educational training and, perhaps, the social training and advantages that other Members of this House may boast or may have had. I have been invited to many places in Chicago and elsewhere that, perhaps, some Members may think above my social station; but I have preferred to associate with the people who have sent me to Congress, and when I am at home in Chicago I am to be found at my accustomed haunts and among my old companions, associating with the men and boys in the great Union Stockyards, the people I love and want to associate with. My training has been with them for over 20 years. I admire them and love them. They are open and above board. If they fight you, they fight you on the square; if they are against you, they come to you, face to face, and manfully tell you that they are against you, but they do not use the brigand methods of shooting at you from ambush. I never cast a vote that these honest, home-loving people criticized me for. I go back to them, and am willing and glad to do so. They will believe me, because they know I never lied to them; that I have always been their loyal friend and servant.

The committee action I have been discussing is the action of the select committee appointed to investigate the charges against me. Their report and the evidence presented before them was afterwards submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary of this House, with directions to report a proper course of procedure, and that committee has presented to this House their report, finding that I have been guilty of acts of impropriety and recommending that I be censured.

I have many warm friends in this House. Their elections are approaching. I do not desire to embarrass them in any way. I am conscious of no wrongdoing as a Member of this body. My only offense is that I have borrowed money. A censure by this House would carry with it a strong criticism of my friends and associates in my district—the findings of the select committee being that my associations have not given me the ethical perceptions and standards which ought to characterize men in public life.

I have the highest respect for my constituency. I do not intend that in this House the character and standing of my friends and the people I represent shall be either discussed or questioned in any manner. After all, the court of last resort in a matter of this kind is the constituency of the Member affected by such charges as these.

Inasmuch as the findings of fact made by the select committee are all in my favor, I consider myself fully vindicated. I feel that under the facts in this case the question of my censure ought not to be submitted to this House; but I am quite willing that it be now submitted to my constituents, and from the decision of the Committee on the Judiciary of this House I desire to appeal to my constituents. I have forwarded my resignation as a Member of this Congress from the fourth district of Illinois to the governor of my State, and I now here tender my resignation to the Speaker of this House and send to the Speaker's desk a copy of my communication to the governor. I go now from this Hall to my constituents for the purpose of appealing to them for the vindication to which I feel I am of right entitled. I have submitted my name to the voters of my district as a candidate for reelection to the Congress of the United States. I am willing to abide by their decision.

I ask that the letter containing my resignation, addressed to the Speaker of the House, be read, together with the copy of the telegram sent by me to the governor of the State of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have this day tendered my resignation as a Representative in Congress from the fourth congressional district of Illinois to Hon. Edward F. Dunne, governor of the State of Illinois, to take effect immediately. I attach hereto a copy of my resignation so forwarded to the governor.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,

JAMES T. MCDERMOTT,
Member of Congress, Fourth District, Illinois.

JULY 21, 1914.

Hon. E. F. DUNNE,
Governor of Illinois, Springfield, Ill.:

I hereby tender my resignation as Representative in Congress from the fourth congressional district of Illinois, to take effect immediately.

JAMES T. MCDERMOTT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this communication, I take it, which is a formal notice, should be placed on file?

The SPEAKER. It should be placed on file. The House does not have to pass on it. It can not accept the resignation of a Member.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15320. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Owego, N. Y.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

On amendment No. 158: Strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, excepting the reports of the Attorney General from the general provision relating to the time of submitting annual reports.

On amendment No. 159: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, requiring that the lowest prices paid for typewriters during the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 shall not be exceeded during the fiscal year 1915 shall apply to "substantially" the same model of machine.

On amendments Nos. 160 and 161: Limits the amount that may be prescribed for per diem rates of allowance to persons traveling on official business to $4, as proposed by the House, instead of $6, as proposed by the Senate; and strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, granting allowances of $8 per day to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation and General Appraisers.

On amendment No. 162: Strikes out the provision, inserted by the Senate, regulating the compensation and per diem allowances of internal-revenue agents.

On amendment No. 163: On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate: Accepts the verbal modification proposed in the appropriation of $200,000 for the relief of sufferers by fire at Salem, Mass.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on amendments of the Senate as follows:

Amendments Nos. 44 and 45: Establishing customs collection districts at Kansas City, Mo., and Tampa, Fla.

Amendment No. 91: Appropriating $237,840 for the Hot Springs Reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.

Amendment No. 92: Increasing the appropriation for Glacier National Park from $75,000 to $100,000.

Amendment No. 138: Appropriating $25,000 for the fish-cultural station in Utah.

Amendment No. 145: Appropriating $500,000 for the Government building at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Amendment No. 146: Amending the law prescribing the Government exhibit to be made at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
FREDK. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the statement there is an error as to what had been done with amendment No. 149. The statement recites that the amendment appropriates $250,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Macdonough memorial. That is an error in the printing. The agreement was for $140,000 instead of $250,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. On amendment No. 36, which made a preliminary appropriation for the construction of two revenue cutters recently authorized by law I see that the conferees have inserted as an addition to the appropriation:

> And authority is hereby given to contract for the construction of said revenue cutters within the limit of cost heretofore fixed for each of them.

At whose instance was this added?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The conferees did it.

Mr. MANN. Possibly the conferees were not familiar with the law that was passed, because that itself is an authorization for the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement was made that there was some question whether authority existed to contract for their construction under the wording of that act.

Mr. MANN. In consideration of the fact that since the gentleman from New York and I have been Members of the House there have probably been passed 40 or 50 such acts under which contracts have been let, I wondered why they discovered the necessity for inserting this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was easier to do this than to listen to arguments.

Mr. MANN. It does not do any harm, but it is entirely useless.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was a hot night, and very late, and sooner than suffer any longer we inserted the matter, because it did no harm.

Mr. MANN. I do not want the gentleman to think it necessary when we pass one of these acts in reference to the Lighthouse Service or the Revenue-Cutter Service, or any other service, authorizing the Secretary to acquire such and such property, that we authorize the contract to be let subject to the appropriations to be made.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will permit, then I suggest if the insertion of this language be necessary, hereafter when we make authorizations we must add that the proper department is thereby authorized to contract within this limit.

Mr. MANN. That would be necessary if this were necessary, but we have always treated it the other way, and they have let the contracts without difficulty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee as to the striking out of the $50,000 provision for the Alaskan exhibit at the San Francisco exposition. Is there any provision made anywhere for an appropriation for showing the Alaskan exhibit at the exposition in San Francisco?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is none made by the United States Government. What Alaska has done I am unable to state.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is that a complete report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 44, 45, 91, 92, 138, 145, and 146.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to certain amendments, the numbers of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendments Nos. 44, 45, 91, 92, 138——

Mr. MANN. Please stop the reading there. Let it go down to there, and there will be another motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I move to further insist on amendments 41, 42, 44, 71, 92, and 98.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. On any one of those amendments?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes, sir; No. 91.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I modify the motion so that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 44, 45, 92, and 138.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendments 44, 45, 92, and 138. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 91.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 91.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in Senate amendment No. 91.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 91. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 91: On page 115 of the printed bill insert the following:

"Hot Springs Reservation, Hot Springs, Ark.: For labor and material required in the installation of a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs to care for storm waters from the mountains of the Hot Springs Reservation, $237,840, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in accordance with plans described in House Document No. 1298, Sixty-second Congress, third session."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I would like to have 15 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield 10 minutes now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment upon which I shall insist is No. 91, page 115, House bill 7041, and which reads as follows:

"Hot Springs Reservation, Hot Springs, Ark.: For labor and material required in the installation of a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs to care for storm waters from the mountains of the Hot Springs Reservation, $237,840, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in accordance with plans described in House Document No. 1298, Sixty-second Congress, third session."

The hot springs referred to in the amendment are located on a Government reservation embracing between 900 and 1,000 acres of land.

The hot springs were probably visited in 1541 by De Soto, who died the following spring on the Mississippi, about 100 miles away. According to traditions the curative properties of the springs were known to the Indians long before the advent of the Spaniards. There is a tale that the various tribes battled from time to time for control of the hot waters, in which they believed the "Great Spirit" to be ever present, but that finally a truce was declared under which their benefits were extended to the sick of all tribes.

It is believed that the earliest white settlement was made about the year 1800. Dunbar and Hunter, who visited the place in December, 1804, found an open log cabin and a few huts built of split boards which had been erected by persons resorting to the springs in the hope of regaining their health. Manuel Prudhomme built a cabin there in 1807 and was joined the same year by John Perciful and Isaac Cates, who camped in the neighborhood and engaged in hunting and trapping. From this time on history is complete.

In 1832 the hot springs and the four sections of land surrounding them were, by act of Congress, set aside for the future disposal of the United States, not to be entered, located, or appropriated for any other purpose whatever, thus making the first national park reservation of the country and preserving in perpetuity, free from monopoly and commercial exploitation, the waters of the springs for the benefit of the sick.

At Hot Springs there are two great mountains, one called the East and the other the West Mountain, located on this reservation. On the East Mountain are the hot springs, and, as I remember, about 47 in number, furnishing 827,000 gallons per day. On the West Mountain, which is only across a small deep valley some two or three hundred feet wide, only cold water is found. No part of the city of Hot Springs is located on the Government reservation, except it be hotels and bathhouses built under lease from the Government. The city of Hot Springs normally contains from eighteen to twenty thousand inhabitants. The uses of the waters on this reservation, and especially the hot waters, are controlled absolutely by the Government of the United States. There are some 20 or 30 bathhouses in Hot Springs, and also a public bathhouse maintained by the Government free to the indigent poor and which is absolutely inadequate. Some of the finest bathhouses in the world, I am told, are located on the reservation, and, in addition to these, an Army and Navy hospital is maintained where our soldiers and sailors are cared for in times of sickness. This reservation and these hot waters belong to the people of the United States, and because Hot Springs is in the district which I have the honor to represent on this floor I am expected to and am proud to look after the needs and wants of these springs to the end that suffering people may have the greatest benefit from these wonderful healing waters. Because, Mr. Speaker, it is known throughout our broad land that these springs are owned by the Government of the United States, the poor, helpless, and afflicted people from all over the country visit them in the hope of receiving a cure, and when they have reached there thousands and tens of thousands have been restored to health again. I may be also permitted to state that not only do they come there from all over our Nation, but from across the waters and from almost every country in the world.

The amendment to which I have reference was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in 1913, and his report, together with the survey looking to the improvement embraced in the amendment, is found in House Document No. 1928, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is the improvement, in a word?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. For the information of the gentleman I had better read from the report. The recommendation to which I refer as having been made by the Secretary of the Interior is as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"Washington, January 20, 1913.

"SIR: In the sundry civil act approved August 24, 1912, provision was made for preliminary survey of the sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, Ark., in the following terms:

"The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, at the earliest practicable date, to make a survey of the sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark., and to prepare plans and estimate of the cost of increasing the present storm drainage system as well as the present sanitary sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, the report of survey, including estimate of cost of the work, to be submitted to Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of December, 1912. The expenses incurred hereunder shall not exceed $10,000; one-half of such expenses shall be paid out of the revenues derived from privileges and otherwise on the Hot Springs Reservation, and the other half shall be paid by the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

"By arrangement between the department and the United States Geological Survey this work was undertaken by Mr. Sledge Tatum, geographer in charge of the Rocky Mountain division of that bureau, and he has submitted his report, which, with accompanying report of J. W. Barnett, consulting engineer, and exhibits, is herewith transmitted for your consideration.

"It will be seen therefrom that an estimate is submitted in the sum of $26,595 for labor and material in perfecting a sanitary sewer system in Hot Springs and for conducting an experimental sewer purification plant, together with alternative propositions for providing purification plants in the sum of $70,000 and $20,000, respectively, dependent upon the system adopted as a result of the experience obtained in experimental plant. Estimate is also submitted in the sum of $327,540 for drainage system to care for storm waters from the mountains on the Hot Springs Reservation, which amount includes $89,700 for extending the Hot Springs Creek Arch from its present terminus on Church Street, in the city of Hot Springs, to South Water Street, approximately the city limits. The installation of the sanitary sewer system, however, it is stated, will obviate the necessity for continuing the Hot Springs Creek Arch, with its present terminus at Church Street, because the impurities which are now flowing into the creek under the arch will be cared for by the sanitary sewer system.

"To carry into effect the recommendations embodied in the report will require appropriations by Congress as follows:

"For labor and material for perfecting a sanitary sewer system in the city of Hot Springs, the installation and operation of an experimental purification plant, and providing purification tanks in connection with such system, $96,595.

"For labor and material required in the installation of a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs, to care for storm waters from the mountains on the Hot Springs Reservation, $237,840.

"The sewerage system in the city of Hot Springs appears to be such as to require early measures looking to the betterment thereof, and I therefore commend your favorable consideration to the report herewith transmitted, to the end that the appropriations necessary for the completion of the work be provided by Congress."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. How far is Church Street from the Army and Navy Hospital?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I should think about three or four blocks.

Mr. PAYNE. Three or four blocks from the Army and Navy Hospital. Has this drainage canal been extended down to Church Street?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Who did that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. The city of Hot Springs, largely, did it.

Mr. PAYNE. Not the Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Not the Government.

In order that you may understand, gentlemen, just why these improvements should be made and this appropriation granted I will explain to you that while the avenue between the two mountains to which I have referred is six or seven hundred feet above the sea level, yet storm waters coming down these mountains into the valley floods the main avenue in the city immediately in front of the hot springs waist deep to a man, flowing into these hotels and bathhouses on the reservation and flooding them, as also many portions of the city; and these floods come from the mountains on the reservation, causing bad waters to belch out of the now inadequate sewer system. I have photographs in my hand showing these flood conditions. People come there to be cured by these waters, and not to be made sick because of sewer conditions. If you ask me why it is that the city of Hot Springs does not take care of this situation, I reply that these people, while willing, benevolent, and patriotic, are the most burden-borne people in any city in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Under the constitution of the State of Arkansas a municipal corporation can not lend its credit and issue bonds, but the only way by which it may be done is by the forming of an improvement district by petition of the people to tax themselves for necessary improvements. This they have done, but the tax is insufficient, and they are unable to meet this great and needed improvement; and in taxing themselves they can not tax any portion of the reservation, because it belongs to the United States Government. I say that Hot Springs every year bears a great burden, and why? The indigent, poor, and afflicted come there from all sections of the Nation, and they land in Hot Springs without food and without money, and the grand, charitable people of that city will not let them starve while they are struggling for health and for life. [Applause.]

As I now recall, without the exact data before me, about 165,000 baths were given to the poor in 1913 in these hot waters. The cures that are wrought are wonderful to think about, if you knew and had seen what I have seen. I remember last Christmas of meeting an old man, a soldier in the Civil War, who had visited Hot Springs, to be treated for rheumatism, and as he was returning home he told me of how horribly he had been afflicted and how much he had been suffering, but that he was then a well man, and, further, he said that he had been almost totally blind for many years, but that when he reached home by the blessing of these waters he would be permitted to look into the faces of grandchildren that he had never seen; that bathing in these waters had restored his eyesight. [Applause.] This is only one instance of wonderful cures derived. There are gentlemen on the floor of this House who can testify as to the great curative properties of these waters.

Should you grant this amendment and allow the improvements to be made, the water which floods the streets and the bathhouses will be conducted out of the city into the Ouachita River and will make Hot Springs what was intended when reserved—a blessing to suffering humanity. I sincerely hope that the Members of this House will cheerfully agree to this appropriation. The money will be well, wisely, and humanely expended. You must remember that charity is the paramount virtue, that all else is but "sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal."

The city of Hot Springs, which is located largely to the south and southwest from the Hot Springs Mountain, has caused to be constructed extensive sewers and has expended thousands of dollars, but which has proven to be insufficient to take care of the storm and flood waters from the mountains on the reservation, and since the Government of the United States owns this reservation I am sure our great people would not hesitate or complain about the expenditures necessary to make these needed improvements.

Senator KENYON, of Iowa, in speaking in favor of this amendment the other day, said, "I have been there when the town was simply flooded and the sewers could not take care of the flood waters," and further said that "this water pours down from the mountains on the Government reservation, flowing onto the streets." Senator KENYON has often visited Hot Springs and knows whereof he speaks.

I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment will be agreed to. God put these waters in the mountain for sufferers, and their great uses should not be retarded.

When Christ was walking through the valleys and over the hills of Judea, visiting the homes where disease and distress prevailed, in order that He might bring relief and comfort to the sick and the sorrowing, He found in one small space a pool of water called the Pool of Bethesda. Around it gathered day by day a crowd of the afflicted, who were placed beside the pool by their friends, awaiting for the good angel to trouble the waters; and then it was that these poor invalids were dipped in to receive a blessing and a cure. As time moved on our heavenly Father saw that the increasing ages and populations would bring more afflictions to humanity and that greater opportunity for the blessings of health must be provided. The Allseeing Eye evidently scanned the great swelling brows of the mountains in Spain, France, and Italy, and the various beautiful valleys in these countries. He then looked over the immense reach of the Alps, with their snow peaks "pinnacled dim in the intense inane," but He saw no advantageous grounds for a Bethesda in that great scope of country. He then cast his eye over the Appalachian system, that stretches from the turbid waters of the St. Lawrence River to the deep blue waves of the Gulf of Mexico. Nothing along that majestic reach of mountains engaged His attention. He then looked over the mighty and eternal grandeurs and sublime solitudes of the gigantic Rockies, from where they take their beginning in the far-off ice fields of Alaska to where they lose their mighty range in the burning sands and storm-raging waters of the Straits of Magellan, but He saw no encouraging spot along that 10,000 miles of broken grandeur. He then looked over the line of the Ozarks, waving their modest green plumes from Missouri to Texas, and He discovered an unpretending little valley in Arkansas where the city of Hot Springs was afterwards located. He touched the spirit of the earthquake and the giant arose and heaved up the mountains on His shoulders and shook them apart and out came these hot waters, sparkling with radium and other medicinal qualities, inspired at every moment and in every drop by the healing presence of untiring angels, and here the lame and halt and afflicted from all over this land and from other parts of the earth come to get the healing blessing. Here the iron sinews of rheumatism are untied; here the steel fingers of paralysis are unloosed; here the agonies of the pain king are soothed and the crutches and chairs of invalids are thrown on the junk pile, while the whole valley and the mountain side are made vocal with the grand acclaims of those who have been restored to health, and from every lip comes that grandest of all doxologies:

Praise God from whom all blessings flow,
Praise Him all creatures here below;
Praise Him above, ye heavenly hosts,
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

[Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I became acquainted with the classic region of Hot Springs 30 years ago, when I went down there with Casey Young, of Tennessee, and John K. Storm, of Pennsylvania, the two majority Members and myself, as an investigating committee. We were there for a whole week, and when the witnesses began to appear and tell what the obligations of the United States were to the benighted inhabitants, I was curious to know about the matter and began to ask questions. The questions were ruled out by the majority members of the committee in charge, but they afterwards relented sufficiently to allow me to cross-examine the witnesses, which I did at the three sessions each day for six days. We finally examined the last witness, and on the day when we came to make our report, although I was the minority member of the committee, I was afterwards permitted to write the report myself, which will be found somewhere in the annals of Congress, I suppose, and that report was used as the text of Mr. Holman, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to ward off the annual raid made upon the Treasury for the improvement of Hot Springs.

Now, Hot Springs proved to be a Government reservation, not by the act of God, but growing out of a wicked lawsuit between two rival claimants who claimed to own the property; and when the case got to the Supreme Court of the United States, the Supreme Court, unfortunately for the United States, found that the United States was the owner of those reservations which my friend from Arkansas thinks were set aside by the providence of man nearly a hundred years ago for the benefit of future generations. It was a blunder if they were set aside at all, and the blunder was only found out at the end of this litigation, some 35 or 40 years ago.

When we went down there we found this condition: On one side was the Government reservation, where the springs were. On the east side of a gorge we found various bathhouses and one large hotel. On the other side were various business houses, on the west mountain, at the foot of the mountain, fronting on the Little Hot Springs River that flowed through the gorge. These were business houses, mostly occupied by gamblers at that time, who proceeded to relieve the people of the money they brought down there. There was a tradition that the Jesse James gang used to operate between Hot Springs and the Iron Mountain road, some 30 miles away, and that the James gang never attacked a party coming out of Hot Springs, because the pickings were too poor. [Laughter.] They always struck a party going into Hot Springs before the nurses and the doctors and the bathhouse people and the hotels had had any chance at them. [Laughter.]

Well, we went there to investigate the building of a new tunnel through this gorge, to take down the flood waters that came from the mountain, both from the reservation and the mountain above, where there were three large streams that joined at the Government reservation and made a heavy flow in time of great storms, when the rain rushed down the mountain. We were there primarily to investigate the complaint that the contractor was not putting the proper material into this tunnel that was there, and they tried to confine the investigation to that; but the people wanted to be heard on something else, and I wanted to hear them, and we went into everything connected with the whole business. When the Government found that it owned the reservations on each side, especially where the springs were, and the reservations where these gambling houses were on the other side of the gorge, they appointed a commission. That commission went down there and assessed the value of the improvements that had been put on by the various people who had built there supposing they were owners, and the commission made awards of the full value of the improvements. Then the Government turned around and rented these places to the former owners, with the improvements, at a nominal rental, and when we were down there the Government was doing a flourishing business in the way of building sewers and building this tunnel, which acted as a sewer for these ground-rent proprietors, including the hotel, which was also leased at a nominal rent, and the company making a mint of money all the time. That was the condition then. They wanted to extend this tunnel down to the Ouachita River. That was the dream of those people who, I suppose, wrote the beautiful poem that my friend recited as a peroration to his speech. By the way, they had a tradition down there that in the early days some immigrant in one of those prairie-schooner wagons stopped with his family at Hot Springs one evening, and after he had put out the teams, and while the family was preparing supper, he went to get a drink of water from a near-by spring. He dipped up a dipperful of it in his tin dipper and put it to his mouth, and the hot water burned his lips. He threw down the dipper and came rushing back and said, "Here, hitch up and get out of here quick. Hell ain't a mile off." [Laughter.] I do not know whether that had anything to do with the improvement that the Government has been building there at the solicitation of the inhabitants ever since or with the rule of the Jesse James gang in after years or not.

Now, they wanted to build this immense culvert on from the lower end of it down to the Ouachita River, about 6 or 7 miles away, as I remember it. They were also building an Army and Navy Hospital at the lower end of this tunnel. In the course of a few years complaint was made that the sewage went into the tunnel. The Government had no sewage. The sewage came from the tenant houses of the Government and from the residents way up the stream. Undoubtedly that polluted this Hot Springs Creek, and they said that the fumes of the sewage were coming from the lower end of the tunnel, and that it was detrimental to the Army and Navy people who were there for the curing of various disorders for which the waters seem to be a specific. They said they must have that tunnel extended right off, to carry away the fumes. I suggested to the House then, why not let the people at Hot Springs do a little bit of the sewer and culvert construction. Of course, they had the burden of now and then a tramp who came and went into the mudhole, or the rial hole, as it was called, where this free bath has been maintained ever since. They had to take care of some few poor people who came there; but they were able to take care of them, because the rich people came there and spent their money very freely, and every man in Hot Springs, including the attendants at the bathhouses, was getting a large income out of it when I was down there, and I have not heard that any of them went into bankruptcy since then. It looked reasonable to me that they should build sewers if they did not want this sewage to go into this large town. I suggested that they build a sewer on each side of the culvert and pay for it. But they would not do that. The noisomeness of the smell was not so offensive as to induce them to put their hands into their pockets, because it did not hit the pocketbook nerve. They have kept on until they have gotten the Government to build an extension of this culvert down four blocks to Church Street, and now they want it built down to the Ouachita River, 4 or 5 miles away, to carry the sewage into that stream and not offend the fastidious noses of the people who live in Hot Springs.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I just want to correct the gentleman. He is mistaken about the residential portion of the city being above the reservation. The residential portion is not there. It is away to the south and the southwest.

Mr. PAYNE. Part of it is there and part of it is below. It was when I was there. I do not know but they have built down more below, because I have not been there in 30 years. When I was there it was above and below.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Everything has changed since then.

Mr. PAYNE. Every once in a while we get an excuse for an appropriation for Hot Springs. When they build a courthouse we have to give them the land to build it on. In order that there may be room enough for the courthouse, we have to give them a big slice of land. Whether they are building on it or not I do not know. Application was made. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] shakes his head. I do not know, but we succeeded in beating the donation of land for the courthouse and allowed the citizens of Hot Springs to pay for it themselves. The greatest financial misfortune for the Government was the discovery at the end of this lawsuit that the Government owned these reservations down there in Hot Springs. It has been a source of expense ever since, and not a source of very large income. I have not examined the matter for a long time, but when I did examine it the Government was a loser because of its ownership of these reservations. Now, it is time Congress stopped and called a halt at Hot Springs, and let the people there do these things, just as they do in every other town in the United States, build the sewerage system and pay for it themselves. We have gone to work and made a survey at the expense of the Geological Survey and made a plan for them. Let them take hold and do it, and do not give them this $200,000 appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States, to be paid for by the rest of the people of the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Does the gentleman know that the Government is now receiving a revenue of about $50,000 a year from this?

Mr. PAYNE. I should be very glad to know that was so. The Government ought to get a good deal more of it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. They ought to get a good deal more out of it. If they get $50,000 a year for the next 30 years, they may get back into the Treasury what has gone out of it in the years past, when it was a burden upon the people of the United States. Let Hot Springs citizens do something for themselves. Give them a chance. It helps people so much to be required to help themselves. Nothing is so bad for a community as to be supported partly at the Government expense. It hurts citizens who are well to do the same as it hurts poor people to be helped without using their own initiative and their own energy. I hope the conferees will stick to the disagreement until the last gun is fired, and if they want a sewer system for Hot Springs let them come in with a bill by itself so that Representatives can vote their honest convictions and not seem to be holding up an appropriation bill that ought to have been passed two months ago in order to help citizens at Hot Springs, Ark.

They have made a lot of money there out of the Government, and the town has grown up out of the Government reservation. We have sealed up the springs, built a sort of a cone over them of cement in order that no drop of hot water shall be wasted, and we have piped and conducted it to one reservoir in order to keep every drop of hot water and protect it so that it may be used by these bathhouses that are run by the people who rent them. They are not run by the Government of the United States. Fifty thousand dollars a year! If a private individual owned it, he would get a million dollars out of it, and with the same price to the ultimate consumer and without any effort. It is only another illustration of the Government trying to do business. It can not do it at a profit; it can not do it and get its expenses out of it. There is no excuse for the Government doing it in this instance, because they could surround the legislation by such safeguards that private individuals could not gouge the public as they do now. I hope that this provision will not get into the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the peculiar attitude of the people directly interested in Hot Springs, Ark., is illustrated by amendment No. 96 of the Senate. An estimate was made by the Secretary of the Treasury of $20,000 to repair the free bathhouse at Hot Springs. At the hearing it developed that the free bathhouse was in bad condition; that the tubs needed repairing; that the plumbing was out of order, and that these repairs were essential and necessary if the free bathhouse was to be put in decent condition for use.

The House committee brought in the item of $20,000 for that purpose. The Senate struck it out, I suppose, at the instance or suggestion of those particularly interested in these appropriations. And having stricken out that necessary item of $20,000, they then ask us to spend $235,000 for the building of a sewer for the people of Hot Springs.

Now, it occurs to me that these gentlemen interested in Hot Springs and the Hot Springs Reservation would be in a better position before Congress if they showed less interest in the construction of these structures which should be constructed wholly or partly by the people of Hot Springs and more interest in those things that are necessary from a congressional standpoint for the utilization of the springs by people of limited means. If there is any excuse at all for the Government maintaining the hot springs and spending a large amount of money there, it is by reason of the fact that we furnish free baths to those unable to pay for them.

This free bathhouse is utilized by many thousands of poor and afflicted people every year. It is in a shameful condition of disrepair, as all those familiar with the situation understand. And yet the friends of Hot Springs struck out this item, necessary from a governmental standpoint, and insist on our providing a sewer system for the city.

I regret that the conferees on the part of the House agreed to strike out the item of $20,000. I understand their position, that when the people locally interested say that they do not want it they could not well insist on keeping it in. What they do want is to wait a year or so and have us appropriate a large sum of money for a new bathhouse, which is not necessary. The old bathhouse, with a reasonable appropriation, can be put in good condition.

It occurs to me that people locally interested in Hot Springs are not evidencing very good faith in the matter when they use their influence to strike out a necessary appropriation for a public purpose in order to strengthen their demand or request for a large appropriation for the purpose of an expenditure that should be borne wholly or largely by the people locally.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this proposition is a matter that concerns the local community, but I look upon the proposition like I look upon all questions coming before the House where the Government is involved, whether in Washington or somewhere else. I think that where the Government of the United States owns a piece of property it ought to stand in the same attitude toward that property that an individual does. I do not think that because the Government of the United States owns a piece of property in a State or a community it ought to be made a burden on that community. On the other hand, I do not believe that because it owns a piece of property it ought to be expected to do for that property any more than anybody else in the community ought to do.

As I understand the situation, it is that here are two mountains which the Government owns as a reservation. The drainage of these mountains comes down a narrow gorge that happens to be a street. The Government owns one side of the street and private individuals own the other side of the street. The sewerage is on the Government side of the street and on Government property. The sewer system is not large enough to carry off the water. When there is a heavy rainfall it comes down the side of the mountain and follows the gorge, and the sewer system is not big enough to carry the water off. That is the whole proposition—whether the Government is going to make the same contribution to carry off this water from its own land that would be made if the Government sold the land to a private individual.

If the Government does not want to own the land, it can give it away, sell it, or dispose of it in some way. If these two mountain sides were owned by a private individual, running that spring, as the Government does, to raise revenue from it, undoubtedly the State of Arkansas or the city of Hot Springs would assess that drainage area in building this sewer. To-day the sewer is on the Government side of the street and I think on Government property. The Government rents out that property and receives rentals, and the only question involved in this case, I think, is whether or not the Government should contribute as a private individual would to take care of this storm water. As to the amount of the contribution the Government should make, I know nothing about it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. The Government already has built most of it some 30 years ago—this improvement in front of its own reservations where the hot springs are and where the property is on the other side of the street—and paid for it, and this is to be a continuation of that improvement, and not because that improvement is not adequate to carry off the water from the Government property.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not so understand it, because the pictures the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] showed me shows where the water dams up, and it is in the gorge between the Government property.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. And these pictures were taken by the Government of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. But the gentleman says that this improvement is to be continued from the lower end of it at Church Street, southward.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know anything about where it is. I say this is a practical business proposition put to this House. It is the same thing as is involved in the District of Columbia. I say where the Government owns a large amount of property in this District it ought to contribute to the District government, and I have always stood for that proposition; and if the Government continues to hold this reservation, it is nothing but equitable and just that the Government should make a contribution toward taking care of the drainage waters. If the Government does not want the property, sell it and dispose of it.

Mr. MADDEN. Does anyone know what the total cost of the improvement would be?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman speaks of the equity of the Government making a contribution to the building of this sewage system. This is a proposition to have the Government build it, not to make any contribution. The city of Hot Springs is not participating in it at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is a question for the conferees to consider. I am not arguing the question of what they ought to do.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the motion is to recede and concur, which would put the Government to the expense of building the whole thing.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I want to say that the city of Hot Springs, lying far to the southwest, has its own sewage system, and it takes all of its taxes to maintain that, and the Government is throwing this water down on the city.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish it understood that I am saying what part the Government should contribute in dollars and cents, because I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman in favor of this motion to recede and concur?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Government ought to contribute toward it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to know if the gentleman is in favor of the motion?

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I want to know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would really prefer the gentlemen to take the matter to the conferees and decide what is a fair proportion for the Government to pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the question before the House is to recede and concur in this amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose the gentleman from New York is not in favor of doing anything.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not in favor of doing anything unless you desire to build sewers for every municipality that can work the Government upon some specious plea for doing it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very remarkable situation in which the House finds itself. The Senate has incorporated in this bill an amendment to appropriate $237,000 to build a sewage system for the city of Hot Springs, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], interested as we all are in keeping the appropriations within reason upon this side of the House, is supporting this motion, although he states he is not familiar with the facts. The plea upon which the request is made is that the Government owns the mountain, and that the surface waters from storms flowing down the mountain flow through the city of Hot Springs. Will anybody suggest that a private owner of any property should be compelled to build a sewer for a city because the surface water flows down the natural grade to where a sewer should be built? Twenty-eight thousand dollars will build the necessary sanitary sewer for the city of Hot Springs. Forty-six thousand dollars will build a more improved type, rather than an experimental type. But the city of Hot Springs, built upon a Government reservation, upon lots sold at a great bargain by the Government to those who located there, upon lots leased to residents of Hot Springs, and every dollar the Government gets outside of the Arlington Hotel lease is only $7,500 a year, and until two years ago it had received for the ground rental for property upon which is a $500,000 hotel only $5,000, and for a few years and during the greater period of the 20-year lease only $2,500 a year, because Congress has been so easy, because it has been so simple a matter to get money out of the Federal Treasury. To keep this rich gold mine for the benefit of the people of Hot Springs, Ark., it is now proposed, when this bill is being pressed for final enactment into law, to try and crowd into it an item of $237,000, not for the benefit of the Government, not to perform an obligation of the Government, but to relieve the people of Hot Springs, Ark., from the obligation to provide the sewer facilities necessary for that city. Has anybody ever proposed during the three or four years that this matter has been under consideration any system, any plan, any scheme for the construction of a sewer and the apportionment of a proper charge to the Government for which it might be under obligation to pay?

A few years ago, when an item was inserted in this bill to appropriate $10,000 for a survey to find out what was necessary, the House conferees insisted that one half of the necessary amount be paid out of the revenues of Hot Springs Reservation and the other half by the city of Hot Springs, Ark. The survey cost a little under $7,000, and there was nearly a riot in the city of Hot Springs because it was proposed that a single dollar should be imposed upon the people of that community in order to ascertain what was required in the way of sewer facilities. This item has no business in this bill. The conferees on the part of the House—the House itself—has no information that would justify them in acting favorably upon this item. The committees of the House that have jurisdiction should take it, and if a sewer system is necessary it should be provided by the city of Hot Springs, with a Government contribution that could be worked out and reported to the House with the information necessary to justify the House in acting. We have been contending, Mr. Speaker, during this session and other sessions of the House against the imposition of such items as this. It is difficult enough to prevent these appropriation bills from being loaded down with other indefensible propositions, possibly forced through here under stress of circumstances. This item can not be justified. It is simply a naked attempt to let the Federal Government spend $237,000 to build a sewer system for the city of Hot Springs, Ark., and relieve the people of that community of all obligations——

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). To provide sewer facilities and make the Federal Government bear a burden that does not belong to it and far beyond what any reasonable man would suggest it should bear. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Does the gentleman realize that this is not a recommendation by the citizens of Hot Springs but by the Secretary of the Interior, and that he requests an expenditure identically the same as that carried in the amendment to this appropriation bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know something about the history of this item. I know that there was an active and efficient young man, who was a clerk in the District Department, who visited Hot Springs Reservation a few years ago and had conversations with some of the leading citizens of Hot Springs. They presented to him a number of suggestions as to what should be done by the Federal Government. He undertook, as representing the United States Government, to pass upon what the Federal Government should do, and he recommended that $237,000 should be appropriated, as here suggested. I have never known of a Secretary of the Interior who had any personal information about it or to make any recommendation about it. It has never been submitted in an estimate to Congress, but has been put in this bill twice by the Senate. The House rejected it on a former occasion, and I hope it will be rejected on this occasion. I desire to say to my friends on this side of the House that in the adjustment of the differences between the two Houses on this bill those representing the House endeavored to agree upon those things that could be justified before the House and the country. The bill as passed by the House carried $110,000,000. The Senate added $4,300,000 to it. The House receded from $1,600,000 of items; the Senate receded from $1,800,000 of items. There are in dispute about $737,000. Of the items on which the House receded to the extent of $1,600,000 I believe that at least half were for the acquisition of sites for public buildings. It is unfair of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with the little information he has on this subject, to urge the House to agree——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman's statement is unfair——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The position I take on the matter, and I think it is eminently fair, is that when the committees of this House have a problem before them where Government property is involved they should look at it exactly as if it were individual property, because that is fair to the Government and it is fair to the citizens. If there is a drainage area that extends over a very wide area of country in my community, and if water shall be on that area, it is assessed, and if the Government owns a large portion of that area it should not put all the burden on that people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has said that already. I have not taken the position that we should deal differently with this matter than if it were a private individual. I take the position that the people of Hot Springs, Ark., should not be permitted to use the Federal Treasury to do their work. This is not before a committee of the House; it was not before a committee of the House; no committee of the House has examined into it. The gentleman from Alabama insists that the conferees shall not agree to items in this bill over which his committee has jurisdiction. Why should he urge the conferees to agree to an item over which some other committee than the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction? I am opposed to agreeing to this item. I can not tell—I do not know where anybody can obtain the information as to how much, if anything, the Federal Government should contribute to this sewer. I do know it should not contribute $237,000; I do know that the people of Hot Springs, Ark., should not have this sewer system built at the expense of the Federal Government and without cost to them, and therefore I am opposing the item.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman answer this question for me?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would not interfere with the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee, but this is an appropriation bill——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the item is not authorized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not necessary to have an authorization for the committee to act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman's committee has not jurisdiction over this question, what committee of the House has?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Public Lands, I suppose, as this is a Government reservation, but certainly the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is an appropriation. The gentleman from New York himself would very quickly antagonize a proposition for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to make a direct appropriation and not an authorization. And this is an appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In apportioning the cost between the Federal Government and the people of Hot Springs it ought to be fixed by legislation. We have no information upon which to act intelligently. We did have an estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury of $20,000 to put in suitable condition the baths and plumbing in the public bathhouses used by the poor unfortunates who go there as charity patients to take the baths. But they do not vote in Hot Springs, Ark. The people who want this sewer do. So it was insisted that the money that should be used in putting the bathtubs and bathing places in shape, so that these poor, unfortunate derelicts who might have the benefit of the baths might take them without danger of contamination should be eliminated from the bill, and that this item, not recommended by the department, for the benefit of the people who ought to pay the cost of it, should be incorporated.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to have a clear understanding of this. Does the Government take care of the water on the Government property? Is the sewer already on the Government property, and is this to construct a sewer on the Government property? Who owns the property on each side of the street?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. The Government owns on both sides of the street?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But some of it has been sold, or some of it has been leased under ground leases.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then private individuals live on one side of this sewer?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some of the baths are operated by the Government and some, I understand, by the lessees from the Government. On the other side is property owned by other persons. Now, a septic sewer, that would relieve the situation of all the offensiveness, can be built, one kind for $28,000 and the other for $46,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not this legislation; and if the Committee on Appropriations had reported it to the House, would it not have been subject to a point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is legislation, of course, and has no business here.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the total cost of the proposed improvement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. And what is the proportion of the property owned by the Government as it relates to the whole property to be benefited by the improvement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. Does anybody know?

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I can tell you.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield for that purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Then nobody knows what the proper proportion of the Government contribution toward this improvement would be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the total proceeds of the sale of lots amounted to $82,000, and that was permanently appropriated for the operation and maintenance of the bathhouses.

Mr. MADDEN. So, as a matter of fact, there is not anybody connected with this case who can tell what the proportion of the city of Hot Springs should be and whether there should be any proportion levied against the Federal Government at all?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not been able to obtain that information in the examination I have made of the question.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, until we do obtain that information, the House surely ought not to approve this project.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has four minutes.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me a few minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] I want to state that the reservation of the Government now comprises 1,100 acres. The greater part of the city of Hot Springs is not now, nor was it ever, on what is known now as the Government reservation. The gentleman from New York speaks about the conditions that existed 30 years ago. Those conditions may have existed then, but do not exist now. At that time it was a straggling village of a few thousand people, while to-day it is a city of 20,000 or 30,000 people, and each year 165,000 poor people visit there to take advantage of these wonderful curative waters. This is not a proposition to build a sewer system for the city of Hot Springs, and any man who knows the facts or who will take the public document that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] had in his hand a moment ago and study it, and study the map there, will see that this is a proposition to provide a storm sewer for the Government reservation and not for the city of Hot Springs.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield to me for a second?

Mr. WINGO. For just a second.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. I desire to state to the House that there used to be a creek down this valley. Will the gentleman refer to that?

Mr. WINGO. The culvert that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] referred to was the one the Government built along the stream, the narrow gorge that lies between the two Government properties, to take care of a creek that ran through there, and not to take care of the sewage. The greater part of Hot Springs has been built up since the gentleman from New York was there. The greater part of the residences of the city lie down to the south and west of the reservation, and that part has its own sewerage system. This proposition is that the Government shall build this sewer to take care of the waters that come from the Hot Springs Reservation, on Government property. The gentleman says there is no sewage that comes from the Government property. The Government has an Army and Navy Hospital, and the boys from the Army and Navy are treated there. Every year thousands go to the Army and Navy Hospital and are taken care of at the Government buildings on the side of the East Mountain. Drives have been laid out, and the curb and surface drains have caused the water to shoot down with great force into the street in the narrow gorge, on one side of which is entirely Government property and on the other side mostly Government property; and the water rushes out there in time of rain from the Government reservation of 1,100 acres, so that the water floods what? The residences? No. The business houses? Yes, to some extent; but the greater part of the property that is damaged is the property of the United States Government bathhouses on which we have spent thousands of dollars in years past.

Ah, but the gentleman says there has been no proper estimate. There has been a proper estimate by the Interior Department. This is a business proposition for the Government to take care of its own property.

Oh, they say, it is not proper for the Government to make this appropriation. The Government is almost the only party to be protected. Instead of the Government bearing this expense, if the private property only were assessed, it would amount to confiscation. True, these waters that run down there do flow out into some part of the city. That is true. The water does flow until it reaches a higher grade, reaching into some parts of the business district. It is simply a proposition as to whether or not the Government will take care of its own property and protect that property, and incidentally the business section of the city, from the storm waters that flow from the reservation. Hot Springs does not ask for this as a matter of favor or charity, but as a matter of justice. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the House is confronted with the proposition to recede on an item for nearly a quarter of a million dollars for a sewer system which the gentleman from Arkansas says is not for the benefit of the city of Hot Springs, but which we, the members of the Committee on Appropriations, who have investigated the matter from year to year, say is for the benefit of the city of Hot Springs.

Now, the very fact of that dispute shows the lack of wisdom in passing such an appropriation upon a supply bill with no more investigation than can be had here. Here is a Government reservation. Men build a town alongside of it, and then they say that because they are alongside of it and there is surface drainage from the Government land, that imposes an obligation on the Government to build a sewer to take care of such drainage waters.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I have but a few minutes. That is a proposition I will not agree to. The gentleman from Alabama

[Mr. UNDERWOOD] undertakes to make a comparison between the District of Columbia and the Hot Springs Reservation. There is no real, just basis for such a comparison. But if there was, it would hardly be a good one, because the Government of the United States has rarely got its equal rights when it came to dealing with the citizens of the District of Columbia. I fear that the gentleman from Alabama is qualifying himself for service in that other body, whose chief work is not in the interest of economy; and I ask this body, which is charged with the duty of holding down expenditures—I ask those on this side, who have made some claim to economical tendencies—to hesitate before we agree to lay on the Government the entire cost of an elaborate sewerage system, a system more elaborate than is necessary, even if one is built. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The vote is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] demands a division. Those in favor of receding and concurring will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-three gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. Those opposed will stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eighty-nine gentlemen have arisen in the negative. On this vote the ayes are 43 and the noes are 89.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point of no quorum and demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker has declared that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is too slow.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TAYLOR] to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 91 and concur therein will, when their names are called, vote yea; those opposed will vote nay.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 170, answered "present" 4, not voting, 192, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 91.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 145.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 145.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] makes a preferential motion, that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 145 and concur in the same.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that that amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 145: On page 167 of the printed bill insert the following:

"PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

"Building to install the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition: For the construction of a suitable building in that part of the reservation of the United States known as the Presidio of San Francisco, State of California, in which the Government Exhibit Board, created by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, shall install, display, and safeguard the exhibit of the Government of the United States at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, $500,000: Provided, That the said building shall be so located and planned and shall be of such a permanent character as will make it available and useful for military purposes of the United States after the close of the said exposition, and shall be on such general plan and design and in such location as shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the said building shall be erected under the authority of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise, as he may direct: Provided further, That not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended from the appropriation made herein, on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, for entertaining the officers and representatives of foreign governments who may attend and participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in consequence of the invitation of the President of the United States, extended in pursuance of the authority of Congress.

"The provisions contained in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914,' which provides for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, be amended as follows: Under the head of 'To provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition,' the paragraph on page 81, which reads as follows: 'The President of the United States is authorized to detail three civilian officers or employees from the executive departments as members of a commission which is hereby constituted as the National Exposition Commission, one of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each commissioner shall receive in addition to his original compensation his actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence. Said commissioners may appoint a secretary at $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for clerical, office, and other necessary and actual expenses of said commission,' and insert in lieu thereof the following: 'The President of the United States is authorized to detail two civilian officers or employees from the executive departments, also one to be appointed from civil life, as members of the commission which is hereby constituted as the National Exposition Commission; one of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State, the commissioner appointed from civil life to receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum until the exposition closes. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each commissioner detailed as aforesaid shall receive, in addition to his original compensation, necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence while on duty in San Francisco. Said commissioners may appoint a secretary at $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for clerk hire and actual expenses of said commission.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman want, five minutes?

Mr. KAHN. There are quite a number of gentlemen who would like to be heard upon the motion. I would like about 40 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Make it 30 minutes on a side. There are some very important matters yet to come up.

Mr. KAHN. I suggest 40 minutes. I have had numerous requests for time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Make it 35 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Thirty-five minutes on a side, then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that there be 35 minutes on a side on the pending motion, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and one-half by myself, and that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that debate on these two motions be confined to 35 minutes on a side, one-half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and that at the end of the 70 minutes the question be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized for 35 minutes. If no one wishes to speak, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. KAHN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, it is about three years and a half since Congress, by giving the stamp of its approval, located the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, and in accordance with this action the President of the United States extended an invitation to the nations of the world to participate in this exposition.

In the sundry civil bill a year ago an appropriation of $500,000 was made for the preparation of a Government exhibit at this exposition, and ever since that time the work of preparing the exhibit has been going on under the auspices of officials designated by the President. The importance of making a suitable exhibit by the United States is self-evident. It is this country that has extended the invitation to foreign powers. The United States is, in a sense, the host of all foreign countries and of all foreigners who bring to this land their wares, their curios, and their objects of art for the education and enlightenment of all who may attend the exposition.

March 31 last the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, transmitted to Congress a letter from the Secretary of State calling attention to the inadequate arrangements for housing the Government exhibit. Secretary Bryan stated that in order to be imposing the exhibit should be collected under one roof, and the statements of Secretary Bryan were indorsed by the President, and the entire matter referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, of which I have the honor to be chairman.

In accordance with these suggestions I was directed by the committee to confer with Secretary Bryan and Secretary Garrison, and two hearings were held upon the proposed bill, which was duly introduced into the House and is now upon the calendar.

A large part of the Panama-Pacific Exposition is to be located upon the Presidio, a Government reservation where the military department of the Pacific is at present located. Ever since the war in the Philippines it has been found necessary by the War Department to make this military department at San Francisco the largest and possibly the most important in the United States. The buildings for that purpose are inadequate, and it was through the cooperation of the Secretaries of State and War that the idea was suggested that a suitable building could be provided by the United States in which to house its exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and yet the building be so constructed as to make it available for the purposes of the Department of War after the close of the exposition.

Secretary Garrison, when he appeared before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, emphasized the necessity of more accommodations for the military arm of the Government at the Presidio. He stated that at present the buildings occupied by part of the soldiers were little better than shacks, and except for the favorable climate Congress would have been called upon to provide appropriations for permanent buildings on the Presidio long ago.

The attention of the committee was called to the number of foreign Governments that had accepted invitations to make an exhibit on this occasion. A majority of the States will have buildings commensurate with their importance, and altogether an estimate of $50,000,000 is made as the amount that will be invested in the great exposition of 1915. This country should not be guilty of parsimony in a great enterprise of this kind. The richest country in the world should be properly represented at what is expected to be the greatest exposition of modern times. [Applause.]

In view of the fact that the bill reported by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions has not been reached upon the calendar, I append the bill reported from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions and the report on same:

A bill (H. R. 16327) to provide an appropriation for the erection of a building within which to install a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to enable the said Government Exhibit Board created by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, properly to install, display, and safeguard the exhibit of the Government of the United States at the Panama-Pacific Exposition the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection in that part of the reservation of the United States known as the Presidio, which may be used in connection with the said Panama-Pacific International Exposition, of a suitable building in which to install, display, and safeguard the said exhibits of the Government of the United States: Provided, however, That the said building shall be so planned and of such permanent character as will make it available and useful for military purposes of the United States after the close of the said exposition, and shall be on such general plan and design as shall be approved by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the said building shall be erected under authority of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise, as he may direct.

[House Report No. 686, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

GOVERNMENT BUILDING, PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. UNDERHILL, from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 16327:

The Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, having had under consideration a bill to provide an appropriation for the erection of a building within which to install a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, report the same with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "Pacific," insert the word "International."

On page 1, line 8, after the letters "tion," strike out all the rest of the line and lines 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 to and including the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words, "the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to erect by contract or otherwise."

On page 2, line 1, after the letters "ing," insert the following: "in that part of the reservation of the United States known as the Presidio, at a cost not to exceed $500,000."

On page 2, line 8, after the word "War," strike out the rest of the line and all of lines 9 and 10.

Amend the title so that it will read, "A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to erect a building within which to install a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for other purposes."

On April 2, 1914, the President of the United States sent a message to the Congress, transmitting the statement of the Secretary of State, recommending an appropriation for the erection of a building within which to install a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The message of the President and the statement of the Secretary of State are as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending an appropriation of $500,000 for the erection of a building within which to install, display, and safeguard at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco the Government exhibit authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913.

As pointed out by the Secretary of State, many of the Governments officially invited guests by the United States to participate in the exposition are erecting buildings within which to house their exhibits at the exposition. The Government of the United States should not be behind these in appropriately providing for its national exhibit.

I commend the recommendation to the favorable consideration of Congress.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 31, 1914.

The PRESIDENT:

The sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, appropriates $500,000 for the purpose of inaugurating, installing, maintaining, and returning a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to open at San Francisco next year, of such articles and materials as illustrate the functions and administrative faculty of the Government of the United States tending to demonstrate the nature and growth of our institutions, their adaptation to the wants of the people, and the progress of the Nation in the arts of peace and war; and authorized the President to provide for the collection and exhibition of such articles and materials under the direction of a board which is created by the act, to which is imposed the duty of determining the nature and character and extent of the exhibits to be made and which is charged with the collection, purchase, preparation, safe-keeping, and exhibition and return of such articles and materials as the board may decide shall be exhibited. But no provision is made by that act or by any previous or subsequent act for the erection of a suitable building within which these exhibits may be installed, displayed, and safeguarded.

The policy of the Federal Government to support the exposition was fixed by the joint resolution of February 15, 1911, which requested the President of the United States to invite all the nations of the earth to participate therein, and the invitation extended in pursuance thereof by the President to all the nations of the earth to take part in the exposition gives to the exposition in the minds of the foreign Governments an official character.

Twenty-seven of these Governments have responded favorably to the invitation, most of which have buildings in course of construction in which to house their exhibits, while many of our States have signified their intention to take a worthy part in the exposition and have made provision for the erection of State buildings. Of the Governments which have not yet accepted the invitation, few have actually declined, while others are awaiting the assembling of their legislative bodies for appropriate action.

I deem it important that the Government of the United States should make at the exposition such a display as will be commensurate with the international scope and importance of the exposition and as will comport with the dignity and standing of the United States. This can not be done, and the exhibit would be of little value if scattered through the exposition buildings, space in which I understand is already insufficient for individual exhibitors. To be imposing it should be collected together under one roof. The site set apart for the building is on the Government reservation in the Presidio. A building there erected by the Government could no doubt be utilized after the exposition for Army uses and it should be constructed with that end in view.

The sum of $500,000 is not too large for this purpose, and I recommend that Congress be requested to appropriate that amount for the erection of the building.

Respectfully submitted.

W. J. BRYAN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 30, 1914.

Your committee is satisfied that a building of the character contemplated by this legislation ought to be erected at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Twenty-six or twenty-seven foreign Governments have accepted the invitation of the President of the United States to participate at said exposition. Each of these Governments will construct a building for the housing of its exhibits. As the Government of the United States is the host at this exposition, it is but fitting and proper that our Government should also have a building wherein its exhibits can be displayed to the best possible advantage. Unless a building such as is contemplated by this bill is constructed, the exhibits of the United States Government will be scattered through a number of buildings and the very purpose of assembling the Government exhibit so that it may be an object lesson to the citizens of the United States as well as visitors from abroad will be destroyed. In expositions that have been held heretofore, the Government display has invariably been one of the main attractions. Your committee has been informed that the exhibit contemplated by the commission authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913, will be the most comprehensive and instructive that has ever been assembled. It would be a pity to scatter it through half a dozen or more buildings. The citizens of the Republic ought to know the many activities in which the Government is engaged and those activities ought to be exhibited in the most comprehensive and instructive manner. We feel that they can be shown to much better advantage under one roof in a building such as is contemplated by this bill, as otherwise many of them will be lost sight of by a large part of the visitors and the very purposes of a Government exhibit will be destroyed.

In addition to these foreign Governments nearly all of the States of the Union have accepted the invitation to be represented and will put up their own buildings to house their exhibits and provide places of assembly for the citizens of the various Commonwealths.

The building contemplated by this legislation will be of a permanent character and will be so constructed that it can be used by the War Department when the exposition is over. The Secretary of War appeared before your committee and pointed out that he believed a proper building for exhibition purposes could be so constructed that after the close of the exposition it could be converted into a barracks. He pointed out that it is absolutely necessary to erect barracks at San Francisco for one regiment, because the troops there are now living in most curious buildings that look like soup kitchens temporarily turned into living apartments. He called attention to the fact that they are long, low-framed buildings, built of cheap lumber, and that if it were not for the splendid climate of California they would probably not have been able to stand as long as they have. He said frankly that in the climate of the eastern section of this country they would not have stood so long. The Secretary of War further stated that it will be impossible to go on for many more years without erecting a barracks for Infantry at the Presidio; that it has been the policy of the department in recent years to put up one substantial building, mostly of some kind of concrete, and housing just as many men as can be housed under the one roof, because that saves in utility and upkeep.

In view of the fact that the buildings that are used at present for barracks by the enlisted men of the Army in the Presidio are entirely inadequate for the purposes for which they are being used, and believing that the construction of the building authorized by this bill will serve a useful and permanent purpose, and in further view of the fact that the legislation is recommended by the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the War Department, your committee feels that the building should be authorized by the House of Representatives.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be notified when I have used five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAY). The Chair will notify the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, when it was proposed to hold an exposition to commemorate the opening of the Panama Canal, two cities in the United States competed for the opportunity to hold the exposition, San Francisco and New Orleans. New Orleans asked that $1,000,000 be appropriated for an exhibit and for buildings for a Government exhibit. San Francisco pledged itself that it would not ask a dollar from the Federal Government for a building or for an exhibit. On January 31, 1911, when the question was before the House as to whether San Francisco or New Orleans should be selected, Mr. KAHN said:

California did not propose at any time to come to the Congress for a single dollar of appropriation for this exposition. The legislature of our State on the 23d of January last unanimously passed a joint resolution pledging the honor of the people of California never to ask for a single dollar in aid of this international exposition, and the people of California keep their faith.

I was one of the Members of this House who voted for San Francisco upon the strength of those pledges. Subsequently the House had a bill before it to appropriate $2,000,000 urged by the people of California for a governmental exhibit for buildings and for an elaborate commission. That bill was defeated in this House. Later the Senate incorporated in the sundry civil bill an item appropriating $1,500,000 for a Government exhibit for buildings and a commission. The House voted on three separate propositions—to give $1,000,000, to give $750,000, and to give $500,000. It voted down the first two propositions, but voted to appropriate $500,000 for a Government exhibit, providing a board to consist of officials of the Government to be detailed for that purpose, eliminating all paid commissioners, and providing in the law that the exposition company should furnish the necessary building or buildings to house the Government exhibit. The board created under that act has been appointed. It has been at work, has planned and designed the Government exhibits, the space has been allotted for them in various buildings, and these exhibits are being prepared to be sent when the time comes for the exhibition in San Francisco.

The Senate has incorporated in this bill an amendment providing $500,000 for a building, which can not be constructed in time to house the exhibits for the opening of the fair, on the pretense that a building suitable for military purposes on the Presidio will be suitable for exhibition purposes. It also provides for the appointment of a commissioner from civil life, at a compensation of $5,000 a year, and that $50,000 of the $500,000 shall be available for the entertainment of distinguished persons who are to visit the fair. Although California promised never to ask for a dollar, pledged its sacred honor by resolution of the legislature, by promises of Representatives on the floor of this House, they have obtained $500,000 for Government exhibits, $104,000 for the entertainment of officers of visiting fleets at Hampton Roads, Panama, and San Francisco, $200,000 for United States customs and other officials at the fair, and having thus already obtained $800,000 in appropriations, it now has the effrontery to try and induce Congress to appropriate $500,000 more.

I voted for San Francisco as a place to hold the exposition in good faith, and replied upon the statements made. I believe that we should compel the people interested to live up to their pledges. There is no excuse for appropriating this $500,000. A building that will be suitable for exhibition purposes will be ridiculous and useless as barracks and quarters for troops. This building, if erected, unless it is to be a permanent exhibition building, will have to be destroyed. It will not be suitable for the exposition and also for the Army. It seems to me, in view of the records that have been made, in view of the promises that have been made, in view of the assurances, in view of the action Congress has taken, this Democratic House should not be induced by any specious plea to do anything to relieve the exposition company of its obligations, and appropriate this money. I hope the House will refuse to appropriate the $500,000. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN].

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has called the attention of the House to the fact that certain pledges were made at the time Congress adopted the resolution that carried with it the official indorsement of the Government of the United States to the city of San Francisco to hold the Panama-Pacific Exposition to commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal. The city of San Francisco and the State of California made the pledges in good faith. Many things have happened in that State, as they have all over the country, since that time over which the people in California and San Francisco have had no control. Our people intended as far as they were able to carry out their pledges, and have done so.

In the case of permanent buildings the exposition had to forego a number of the permanent buildings contemplated at the time this exposition was first put under way that were intended for the permanent use of the citizens of San Francisco after the exposition closed. Every way in which the company could economize has been taken advantage of, so that every obligation would be fulfilled. We are asking the Congress of the United States at this time to provide $500,000 for a permanent building, $450,000 to be used for a permanent building and $50,000 for the entertainment of distinguished visitors. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations states that it is hardly possible to construct a building to house the Government's exhibit that will be suitable for the purposes of the War Department after the exposition closes. I call your attention to the Senate amendment, which provides—

That the said building shall be so located and planned and shall be of such a permanent character as will make it available and useful for military purposes of the United States after the close of the said exposition, and shall be on such general plan and design and in such location as shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

It is not within the province of the exposition company to say where it shall be located, what its design shall be, but it is for the Secretary of War to select a location and approve the design for War Department purposes, for barracks and quarters to be used by one of the greatest military reservations the United States has after the exposition closes. This is not the ordinary appropriation for exposition purposes. The building is to be of a permanent character, owned by the United States and placed on the Government reservation.

The Secretary of War will have entire jurisdiction over the location and the plans and designs of that structure. It is not likely that the Secretary of War, after appearing before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, favoring this appropriation, is going to permit the War Department to be used for an ulterior purpose. It not only has the indorsement of the Secretary of War, but has the indorsement of the Secretary of State, and a special message was sent to this House by the President of the United States favoring this appropriation, and the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions has reported that bill favorably, and it is now pending on the calendar. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that space has been allotted for the Government exhibit in different parts of the exposition grounds. Is national pride not to be taken into consideration in this matter? When the people of this country and the people of the world go to visit San Francisco in 1915, is not the Nation in duty bound to provide a suitable place for its exhibit, as well as to provide a suitable exhibit? The exposition company is doing all it possibly can. Conditions have not been of the very best since 1907. When we were about recovering from the disaster of 1906 the panic of 1907 came along, and when we got the official sanction of the Government to hold the exposition we were hopeful that financial and industrial conditions would be so good that the people of the city and State would respond as Californians always do. Unfortunately the opposite has been the case, and the company and the people generally have contributed as generously as present conditions will permit.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, was not public pride just as great when we made the original appropriation as it is now?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Yes; but conditions have changed, as I have stated. Otherwise this and other appropriations would not have been asked. In this instance the Government of the United States is asking Congress to act.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the gentleman to tell me what those conditions are. I voted for this original proposition with the idea that no money was to be appropriated, and I will probably vote for this, but I would like to know what the change is.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. The Secretary of War has stated that this building can be used for Government purposes, and it is intended it shall be used for Government purposes, and the plans and designs for that building will be such that the War Department, at a small cost, will have suitable accommodations for the Army at the Presidio Military Reservation.

Nearly all of the foreign Governments, with the exception of England and Germany, have accepted our invitation to participate at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, for the purpose of celebrating the completion of the Panama Canal, and in every instance have made an appropriation, not alone for an exhibit but for an appropriate building characteristic of the country itself and its arts and industries, and also to house the exhibits of its citizens.

Over 30 States of this Union have accepted the invitation to participate; have selected their sites; made appropriations for suitable buildings, which are now in course of construction.

Why should we, as a nation, when we invite the world to participate, hesitate about making an appropriation for a suitable building in which to house our exhibit so that Americans generally when they visit the exposition might take pride in their own participation?

The President of the United States and the Secretary of State, realizing that this Nation should be suitably represented, have asked Congress in this instance to act. Notwithstanding the statements of some of the gentlemen on the floor that promises were made that no appropriations should be asked for, the Chief Executive, understanding the situation, has given his approval to the proposition now before the House.

The military reservation of San Francisco will derive benefits in the way of permanent improvements that will save this Government hundreds of thousands of dollars, not alone in the filling in of lands, the estimated cost of which was $300,000, but in the permanent beautification of the grounds in the matter of parks, flower beds, beautiful trees, and well-built roads. All these improvements will be permanent and remain the property of the Government after the exposition closes.

It should be borne in mind that this is not the usual exposition appropriation for a temporary building which will be torn down, but has for its purpose a building of a permanent character, under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, that will be used for military purposes.

The Government of the United States should lead the way for the other nations of the earth, and it would have been a great stimulus to this exposition if this course had been followed. Our action up to date has proven more harmful than helpful to the success of the exposition. It has resulted in other nations being slow to take part, and in at least one instance has resulted in one of the nations refusing to participate at all.

These discussions on the floor of the House are not helpful, and instead of boosting this great exposition will do a great deal of harm. I trust that at this late day the House of Representatives will make up for whatever negligence we might have shown in the past by adopting the motion of my colleague [Mr. KAHN] to concur in the Senate amendment and provide for this permanent building, which shall be used during the exposition period to house the Government exhibit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this appropriation, but I take occasion now to call the attention of the House to the fact that in addition to a glorious climate and a few native sons, California produces the best bunch of liars that I ever knew. I say this, of course, in an impersonal sense. I happened to be a Member of the House in 1911, when the contest waged between my city of New Orleans and San Francisco took place, and I recall with distinctness the iteration and reiteration of the fact that California and San Francisco were quite self-sufficient, that they needed no Government aid and they wanted no Government aid, and that neither at that time nor at any future time would they ask for Government aid. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that up to the present time $800,000 have been appropriated by the Federal Government to assist in this fair, and now $500,000 more are asked, making, in all, $1,300,000. When we from Louisiana came here with a naked, plain, straight-out proposition, saying that we wanted $1,000,000, we were told by gentlemen who voted for San Francisco that they were voting for San Francisco because no Government appropriation would be asked for or accepted, and yet these gentlemen from California are here exceeding our request made three years ago by $300,000.

I can well believe, Mr. Speaker, that the two great universities on the Pacific slope—Berkeley and Palo Alto—have created a chair for the special purpose of promoting the gentle art of mendacity.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana yields back two minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions at the time San Francisco was selected as the place to hold the exposition to commemorate the opening of the Panama Canal. It is true that the representatives of San Francisco made a proposal to Congress and to that committee which did not contemplate that there should be a Government exhibit or a building. That was not a part of their proposition. Their proposition was simply that when the President should be satisfied that a corporation under the laws of the State of California had been organized and had $15,000,000 at its disposal for the purpose of inaugurating and carrying on an exposition for this purpose, then an invitation to all of the nations and peoples of the world should be extended to come and participate in the exposition.

The proposition of New Orleans was that the United States Government should inaugurate the exposition and should contribute $1,000,000 as provided in that bill. I should have voted for San Francisco even if their bill had carried a provision for a Government exhibit. I want to correct the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ]. I do not think it is fair to say that the representatives from San Francisco and California have been guilty of mendacity in this matter. If you examine the hearings before the committee at the time these representations were made, you will observe that they said they did not ask and would not ask that the Government of the United States should either have a Government exhibit there or a Government building for that exhibit. They did not say, and it was brought out in the discussion that they would oppose the Government having an exhibit or a building, and, in fact, some one, I think, made the remark during those hearings that the Government of the United States could not very well honorably abstain from having an exhibit at an exposition to participate in which they invited all of the other nations of the world. That was in 1911. We passed the resolution that San Francisco proposed, and afterwards, two years later, the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions brought in a bill to provide for an expensive commission, as the gentleman from New York has said, and for a $2,000,000 appropriation, to aid in carrying on the exposition. I opposed that most strenuously, because I thought it was a violation of the spirit of the proposal made by San Francisco, and it was not necessary. However, there was nothing in what San Francisco did or said or promised which prevented the United States Government from having an exhibit there if they wanted to. This is an industrial exposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman not recall that in his previous speech he quoted Mr. Scott, the head of the exposition company, as saying that he would not take the exhibit?

Mr. STEENERSON. I know what I said.

Mr. SHERLEY. He would not take it if they gave it to him.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, they could not prevent the Government of the United States from exhibiting at an exposition. We must remember that the United States Government, in addition to its regular Government work, is one of the greatest industrial institutions in the world, carrying on forestry and irrigation; we are making cannon and ammunition and carrying on factories in almost every line of industry, and this being an exposition of an industrial character, it is appropriate that the United States should take part in it and have an exhibit. Two years after the proposal of San Francisco was made, the United States Congress, whether with or without the request of San Francisco, or California, appropriated for a Government exhibit. Congress had the right to provide for a Government exhibit, and did so in the sundry civil bill a year ago. I do not think much weight should be given to the argument that San Francisco promised not to ask for a Government exhibit. That fact should not and did not prevent us from having one, if we saw fit to do so. Manifestly, Congress thought that it would not be proper to be unrepresented at an exposition to which it invited other nations and which was to commemorate one of the greatest events in history, a triumph of peace and industry and not of war. Over a year ago provision for a suitable Government exhibit was made.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; I decline to yield now.

The question now comes up on the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, which contains an item appropriating $500,000 for the construction of buildings at the Presidio in San Francisco which can be used temporarily for the housing of the Government exhibit and afterwards permanently as barracks and buildings suitable for that military post.

I am advised that the Secretary of War strongly favors the proposition, that the present buildings used for the troops are in poor condition and would have to be discarded within a year or two, anyway, and that by a comparatively very slight expense the buildings proposed to be built could be made to suit the purposes of the War Department after the exposition is ended.

Although, as I have stated, I opposed the $2,000,000 appropriation, I shall vote in favor of the present item. As the event we are to celebrate—the completion of the Panama Canal—draws near, it is natural that we should all feel a just pride in the great achievement. It is an event that swells the heart of every patriotic citizen. It is an event that fills with enthusiasm every friend of civilization throughout the whole world. The interest of the people of the world is constantly growing. I am advised that applications for space at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco are so numerous that it will be impossible to fill them, only in part. When we made the appropriation a year ago for the Government exhibit we provided that suitable buildings for the housing of all said exhibits shall be provided by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. without expense of any kind to the Government of the United States, and that company, I am informed, is ready and willing to provide the buildings, but that if the Government would provide these buildings in the manner indicated it would give them much more space for other exhibits and would aid greatly in making the exposition even a greater success than it otherwise would be. I think, therefore, that as reasonable men we ought to take into consideration and account the changed situation, the changed circumstances. In view of these circumstances it seems to me we ought to favor this item and appropriate this additional $500,000 for the erection of these buildings, which may be used by the exposition for the Government exhibit and afterwards as permanent structures for the War Department. I believe thoroughly in holding people to their word, especially in the matter of expositions, for our experiences in the past have not always been satisfactory; but I do not think it fair to accuse the people of San Francisco of bad faith. The Chief Executive recommended Government participation. This proposition for a building comes favorably recommended by the State Department. The committee, through a sense of fitness of things, brings forward this measure of their own accord, and it seems to me under all the circumstances that we can well afford to support the modest appropriation for these buildings which will in the course of time be of permanent use to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States are beginning to regard the Congress somewhat in the light of gypsy horse traders, and twice in my experience here I have myself been cheated. A number of years ago we increased the salary of the President of the United States to $75,000 a year on the positive assurance of the gentlemen who were back of the proposition that that would cover mileage, salary, and all, as was then being expended as salary and mileage. In the next Congress the same gentlemen who insisted the presidential salary bill meant a total of $75 000 brought in another bill providing for $25,000 for mileage for the President. I voted for the $75,000 proposition and got flimmed. Some years later the gentlemen from California proposed that the Panama exposition be sent to San Francisco, and with much eloquence and with forceful assurance, to me at least, they captured the exposition for San Francisco largely on the theory that San Francisco was going to pay all the expense. I voted for San Francisco under those conditions, and now in another Congress we are told that we are not responsible for what promises were made in other Congresses, but I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the United States most certainly remember those promises, and we certainly ought to keep faith with the same. I believe the proposition ought to be voted down.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have never been overenthusiastic in the matter of international expositions, and I will suffer no particular sorrow when the custom of holding these expositions passes. But I remember that I was moved once before sentimentally in this body on account of San Francisco, and I am willing to be moved in that splendid city's behalf in the same way to-day. It is a little less than 10 years ago that San Francisco was stricken by an earthquake——

Mr. KAHN. Less than eight years ago.

Mr. MURDOCK. Less than eight years ago—a disaster which appealed to the sympathy of the Nation and met immediate response in Congress. San Francisco has done a wonderful thing since, a thing which is not paralleled in the history of the world, in building itself up, a greater, finer, better city than before. The exposition is to be a crowning achievement. The men who came here at the time of the contest between the two cities which sought the exposition and made promises that they would not ask for governmental aid did a foolish thing. So far as I am concerned they did not deceive me. Despite their promises I knew the request for aid would come, and I am willing to vote to-day for the Government to build a structure there worthy of the Government, and for this further reason—I have read in the last six or eight months repeatedly in the cable dispatches instances where foreign Governments asked to make exhibits are hanging back. The Panama Exposition at San Francisco consequently has had, within the knowledge of everyone here, a hard row to hoe. Now, we can not expect other Governments to appropriate money to take part in that exposition if we as a Government hang back ourselves. Certainly the event of opening the canal is one worthy of a fitting celebration, and this Government ought not to stint the exposition so far as it is concerned. This appropriation, in my opinion, ought to be made regardless of promises which have been made by the officials of that exposition in the past.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I will.

Mr. FALCONER. Does the gentleman figure that a provision for a permanent building that the Government needs there is in any way in conflict with the promises made by the delegation from California several years ago?

Mr. MURDOCK. Well, I should say yes, but regardless of the promises, this Government ought to erect a suitable building at San Francisco. Now, I have quite a record in Congress on expositions. I voted under protest for the $4,600,000 as a loan to St. Louis, and my protest was based on the fear that St. Louis would never pay the money back. St. Louis did pay the money back and if I had to vote on the proposition over again I should again cast my vote for St. Louis, and that without hesitation. We ought not to be too hard in our terms in a matter in which the whole Nation is concerned before the world. I believe this appropriation should be passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this progressiveness is shocking. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, my vote in favor of San Francisco as against New Orleans was secured by the promise of the representatives from California that they never would ask or accept a dollar from the United States, a promise not made vaguely, but made definitely, precisely, and it has been quoted here by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Now, to have such a proposition as this come before the House makes me feel as if I had been defrauded and my vote had been secured by false pretenses and I certainly can not participate in that fraud. I am not disposed to criticize or feel harshly toward the Representatives from California here. I appreciate their delicate position. I appreciate that they must consider public sentiment at home and, therefore, as I say, I feel leniently toward them. I feel they are in a different position from the rest of us, that they have to represent their people, and are advocates and not judges, but I think all the rest of this House, everybody who sits in a judicial capacity and who votes as he thinks is right, stultifies himself if he votes for a proposition like this.

They said they would not ask for a dollar. They have already had $800,000, and now they are asking for $500,000 more. And the argument of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], it seems to me, was so specious that I do not see how he could even deceive himself. The United States, of course, can offer this appropriation, but we all know the initiative and pressure brought upon the House for every one of these appropriations was from California, and it was not any voluntary offer of the United States to do it. And therefore, after the promises so specifically made, it seems to me that it is shameful and shameless for California now to ask this contribution.

The proposition that the building is for a barracks is obviously a mere subterfuge and evasion. A building costing $500,000 for exposition purposes will either be not good enough for the exposition or it will be too good for a barracks. If the United States wants permanent barracks, let us build them; but let us not deceive ourselves or be deceived by the pretense that this is not a plain proposition to do what we were told we never would be asked to do, and a repudiation of the pledge which caused many of us originally to vote in favor of San Francisco.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used four minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was originally before the House I voted for New Orleans. There is no question here, it seems to me, involving the gentlemen from California. This is not a request upon their part, nor does it come from the city of San Francisco or the State of California. In 1911, Mr. Speaker, we passed a resolution authorizing the President of the United States to invite foreign nations to participate in that exposition. We thereby committed ourselves to this project, say what we please about it. These foreign nations are to take part; they are constructing their buildings, and it would be a reflection on the honor of this Government if we did not make some sort of exposition of our Government affairs and resources at that place.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] says it is a mere subterfuge. I can not believe that the Secretary of War would make himself a party to a subterfuge. He has gone before the committee and has stated that in the course of a very short time, at best, we will be forced to erect barracks on the Presidio; that the present buildings are nothing more than soup houses; that a building can be erected for this purpose; and that the only loss to the Government would be the use of the building during this exposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State and the President of the United States have asked Congress to make a fit appropriation commensurate with the dignity of this Government and the great event to be celebrated at that exposition. It is not any sharp practice, it is not a question of deceit, and I am amazed that gentlemen stand upon this floor and attack Representatives from the State of California who do not ask it for themselves or for their people, but it comes as a request of the President, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of War, and we ought to grant it in order to preserve our honor among the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this appropriation. If I am able to determine the nature of a contract, the State of California, two or three years ago, when they were seeking to get this exposition, made a solemn contract with the Government of the United States, and that contract was that if you would give the exposition to the city of San Francisco the time would never come when they would ask the Government of the United States for one dollar. You can not twist the English language to mean anything else. That was the bold, bald, emphatic statement made by what I supposed then and suppose now to be the accredited spokesmen for the State of California, and the entire West, where they wanted this exposition held. On the strength of that statement, in my mind and my judgment there is not a shadow of doubt but that the resolution was carried. You can call this thing what you will, but it is an adjunct of the exposition. That is all it is and that is all it is intended for. And after having come upon the floor of the House, in a strenuous fight led by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], to hold this exposition at San Francisco, with Mr. Rodenberg, of Illinois, leading the fight for New Orleans, finally sufficient votes were secured upon these promises to hold that exposition at San Francisco. Now, does this later request come with very good grace? I do not criticize anybody, but I put it squarely to the gentleman from California if it comes with very good grace to appear before the Congress of the United States, after having made the statement that you never would take a dollar, and after receiving $800,000, that you first said you would never ask for, and request this appropriation of $500,000 more? I do not believe it does; and I do not think this amendment ought to carry. It ought to be overwhelmingly defeated in order to teach people to stand up to their contracts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, it seems to me the question of what was said in the debate when the original resolution was passed ought not to be considered now. I think everybody recognizes and realizes that at present that resolution, so far as the vote was concerned, stands where it was thought it was going to be before all the pulling of eagle feathers occurred on the floor of the House. There is not the slightest doubt in the world that any statement made by any Member of the delegation from California did not have relation or refer to the Government itself participating in this exposition. Here is the question of a building to be erected for the War Department on Government land to be used only for a few months by the exposition for the purpose, not of the exposition, not for California, not for San Francisco, but for the United States Government, that it may exemplify the kind and character of this Government. Our history——

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In just a moment. It is to be erected so that it may exemplify the principles on which this Government was founded, the Declaration of Independence, and all those things that relate to it; that they might be placed there in this exposition, and, in addition to that, exhibits showing our material advancement, so that civilized peoples of the world may come to the Government building and see what has been done by the United States.

The Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions had under consideration a similar bill to the provisions now under consideration in this bill.

The bill was prepared in conference with Secretary Bryan, of the State Department, and Secretary Garrison, of the War Department, and meets with their approval, and the same was sent to the committee by the two Secretaries. The Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions reported favorably on the bill H. R. 16327, which is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16327) to provide an appropriation for the erection of a building within which to install a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to enable the said Government Exhibit Board created by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, properly to install, display, and safeguard the exhibit of the Government of the United States at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to erect, by contract or otherwise, a suitable building in that part of the reservation of the United States known as the Presidio, at a cost not to exceed $500,000, in which to install, display, and safeguard the said exhibits of the Government of the United States: Provided, however, That the said building shall be so planned and of such permanent character as will make it available and useful for military purposes of the United States after the close of the said exposition, and shall be on such general plan and design as shall be approved by the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War.

The provisions of the present bill are as follows:

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Building to install the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition: For the construction of a suitable building in that part of the reservation of the United States known as the Presidio of San Francisco, State of California, in which the Government Exhibit Board, created by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, shall install, display, and safeguard the exhibit of the Government of the United States at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, $500,000: Provided, That the said building shall be so located and planned and shall be of such a permanent character as will make it available and useful for military purposes of the United States after the close of the said exposition, and shall be on such general plan and design and in such location as shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the said building shall be erected under the authority of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise, as he may direct: Provided further, That not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended from the appropriation made herein, on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, for entertaining the officers and representatives of foreign Governments who may attend and participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in consequence of the invitation of the President of the United States, extended in pursuance of the authority of Congress.

The provisions contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," which provides for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, be amended as follows: Under the head of "To provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition," the paragraph on page 81, which reads as follows: "The President of the United States is authorized to detail three civilian officers or employees from the executive departments as members of a commission which is hereby constituted as the National Exposition Commission, one of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each commissioner shall receive in addition to his original compensation his actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence. Said commissioners may appoint a secretary at $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for clerical, office, and other necessary and actual expenses of said commission." and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The President of the United States is authorized to detail two civilian officers or employees from the executive departments, also one to be appointed from civil life, as members of the commission which is hereby constituted as the national exposition commission; one of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State, the commissioner appointed from civil life to receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum until the exposition closes. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each commissioner detailed as aforesaid shall receive, in addition to his original compensation, necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence while on duty in San Francisco. Said commissioners may appoint a secretary at $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for clerk hire and actual expenses of said commission."

The objects and purposes of the bill reported by the House Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions has for its object the same purpose as this amendment. This amendment is more extensive and in detail, and gives some additional legislation. A year ago an appropriation of $500,000 for the preparation of a Government exhibit at this exposition was made, and ever since that time the work of preparing such an exhibit has been going on under the auspices of the officials designated by the President. That the United States should make a suitable exhibit is self-evident. This country has extended an invitation to foreign powers to participate in this world exposition, and being the host of all foreign countries and all foreigners who bring to this land their wares, arts, and methods of education, and of all who may attend the exposition, therefore it is certainly incumbent upon the United States to do its part.

On April 2, 1914, President Wilson sent a message to the Congress, transmitting the statement of the Secretary of State recommending an appropriation for the erection of a building on the Presidio grounds in which to install the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The message of the President and the statement of Mr. Bryan, the Secretary of State, are as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending an appropriation of $500,000 for the erection of a building within which to install, display, and safeguard at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco the Government exhibit authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913.

As pointed out by the Secretary of State, many of the Governments, officially invited guests by the United States to participate in the exposition, are erecting buildings within which to house their exhibits at the expostion. The Government of the United States should not be behind these in appropriately providing for its national exhibit.

I commend the recommendation to the favorable consideration of Congress.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 31, 1914.

The PRESIDENT:

The sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, appropriates $500,000 for the purpose of inaugurating, installing, maintaining, and returning a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to open at San Francisco next year, of such articles and materials as illustrate the functions and administrative faculty of the Government of the United States tending to demonstrate the nature and growth of our institutions, their adaptation to the wants of the people, and the progress of the Nation in the arts of peace and war; and authorized the President to provide for the collection and exhibition of such articles and materials under the direction of a board which is created by the act, to which is imposed the duty of determining the nature and character and extent of the exhibits to be made and which is charged with the collection, purchase, preparation, safe-keeping, and exhibition and return of such articles and materials as the board may decide shall be exhibited. But no provision is made by that act or by any previous or subsequent act for the erection of a suitable building within which these exhibits may be installed, displayed, and safeguarded.

The policy of the Federal Government to support the exposition was fixed by the joint resolution of February 15, 1911, which requested the President of the United States to invite all the nations of the earth to participate therein, and the invitation extended in pursuance thereof by the President to all the nations of the earth to take part in the exposition gives to the exposition in the minds of the foreign Governments an official character.

Twenty-seven of these Governments have responded favorably to the invitation, most of which have buildings in course of construction in which to house their exhibits, while many of our States have signified their intention to take a worthy part in the exposition, and have made provision for the erection of State buildings. Of the Governments which have not yet accepted the invitation, few have actually declined, while others are awaiting the assembling of their legislative bodies for appropriate action.

I deem it important that the Government of the United States should make at the exposition such a display as will be commensurate with the international scope and importance of the exposition and as will comport with the dignity and standing of the United States. This can not be done, and the exhibit would be of little value if scattered through the exposition buildings, space in which I understand is already insufficient for individual exhibitors. To be imposing it should be collected together under one roof. The site set apart for the building is on the Government reservation in the Presidio. A building there erected by the Government could no doubt be utilized after the exposition for Army uses and it should be constructed with that end in view.

The sum of $500,000 is not too large for this purpose, and I recommend that Congress be requested to appropriate that amount for the erection of the building.

Respectfully submitted.

W. J. BRYAN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 30, 1914.

A building of the character contemplated by this amendment ought to be erected at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Twenty-seven foreign Governments have accepted the invitation of the President to participate in this exposition. Each of these Governments will construct a building for the housing of its exhibits. The Government of the United States being the host at this exposition, it is eminently proper that the United States should also have a building wherein its exhibits can be displayed to the best possible advantage. Unless a building such as is contemplated by this amendment is constructed the exhibits of the United States Government will be scattered through many buildings, and the very object and purpose of assembling the Government exhibit so that it may be an object lesson to our visitors from abroad, as well as to the citizens from all over the United States, will not be attained.

At the exhibitions that have been held heretofore the Government display has invariably been one of the chief attractions. The exhibit contemplated by the commission authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913, will be the most comprehensive and instructive that has ever been displayed by the United States at any exposition. The Government exhibit should not be scattered through a half dozen buildings. It would be very unfortunate if they had to be thus scattered. The people of the United States should be able to see and view the many attractions in which the Government is engaged, and those attractions and works should be exhibited at one place and under one building and in the most comprehensive and instructive manner. They can be arrayed to a much better advantage when grouped together in one building. Otherwise many of them will be lost sight of by a large number of the visitors, and one of the chief objects and purposes of the Government exhibit will be destroyed.

Nearly all of the States of the Union have accepted an invitation to participate, and will construct their own buildings to house their exhibits and provide places of assembly for the people of the various States. This will be in addition to the exhibits of foreign Governments.

The building contemplated by this amendment will be of a permanent character and will be so constructed that it can be used by the War Department when the exposition is over. It will be placed on the Government property on what is known as the Presidio. The Secretary of War, in speaking of the construction of this building when he appeared before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions of the House pointed out that he believed a proper building for exposition purposes could be so constructed that after the close of the exposition it would be easily and inexpensively converted into a barracks. His statement before the committee of the House, in part, is as follows:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when I was out at San Francisco on an inspection tour this summer, I found that while some of our buildings at the Presidio were in good condition and were suitable for the purpose for which they were being used, there was a great number of buildings there, which we had to use under the circumstances, which were entirely unfit. Many of them had been temporarily erected at the time of the Philippine troubles, when we were having great numbers of troops, and since that time they have been patched up and kept in use, but they are really not such buildings as should be used for housing troops or for other governmental purposes.

They endeavored to enlist me—and very properly—in an attempt to have the Presidio present an appearance to the visitors who would come to the exposition which would be a credit to the military branch of the Government, and, of course, to the Government itself. I told them that I did not feel justified in asking for a direct appropriation in the Army bill, except for enough money to put into such shape as we could the existing buildings and to fix up the offices and other things that would necessarily have to be used. I therefore asked for no extra appropriation for this purpose in the Army bill and none was granted. Out of what was granted, such an allotment was made, under due administrative procedure, as was thought proper by the Quartermaster General, and that will be placed at the disposal of the commander of that department and will be utilized to paint these old buildings and repair them where they have gone into disrepair, and generally make the Presidio as presentable as possible.

The question was then taken up about the necessity, from the standpoint of those who had the interests of the Government at heart, of a building specifically to house the Government exhibits. I told them I had no concern with that, except as an intellectual concern—none as an official—and if they could get the department of the Government that was concerned to recommend it, I would take such interest in it as was proper. They said if they could get the Department of State and the President interested and show them the desirability of the United States Government doing that which, I think, 26 or 27 other Governments were doing, namely, have a building of their own, they would arrange to put this building on the Presidio and erect it under our supervision and make it so that we could convert it into some useful Army purpose. If they can be so built as to be changed into barracks, it would be of immense advantage to the Government, and really would be no loss whatever. Its use during the period of the exposition would be the only loss to the War Department.

It is absolutely necessary sometime to erect barracks there for one regiment, because they are now living in most curious buildings. They look like soup kitchens temporarily turned into living apartments. They are long, low frame buildings, built of cheap lumber, and I think it is only the splendid climate that enable them to stand as long as they have. I do not think in our climate here they would have stood so long. They are technically called cantonments, because they are all in long rows.

Mr. HAMLIN. You spoke of "them" making certain recommendations. To whom do you refer?

Secretary GARRISON. I refer to the officials of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition—the president, Mr. Moore, and I do not recall the name of the other gentleman—who particularly enlisted my attention.

Mr. HAMLIN. The reason I ask that question is that the statement was made that San Francisco was not asking this.

Secretary GARRISON. At the time I was there, as I now recall it, the mayor of San Francisco was absent.

Mr. HAMLIN. The parties in charge of the exposition spoke to you?

Secretary GARRISON. Yes; they came to me.

Mr. KAHN. I have not spoken to you about this matter.

Secretary GARRISON. No, sir; not in any way. Now, to continue what I was going to say: If this building can be so constructed that by the expenditure of a very inconsiderable amount of money—and perhaps it could be saved out of the initial appropriation—it could be turned into a barracks, then there is no question but that it is an economical and wise and proper thing for the Government to do, providing it wishes to initially have that sort of a building there for exhibition purposes. Of course, if you give me $500,000 to build a barracks, I will do it immediately, because it is needed. If you do it in this indirect way, it would be just as beneficial to the Army.

I would send for the Quartermaster and the Chief of Engineers, and I would say, "Gentlemen, you have $500,000. Can you construct a building for exhibition purposes to be used during the exposition, and, with no structural change—only interior changes—convert it into a barracks afterwards?" And I would take their judgment in the matter.

Mr. FRANCIS. If it is not completed in the way contemplated, is it your opinion that an appropriation would have to be asked for it soon from the War Department?

Secretary GARRISON. Oh, yes. You can not go on with the Presidio for many more years without erecting a barracks for Infantry. You must have them there for the Pacific coast. I just ordered a brigade there that was on the border. Their present cantonments are very inadequate for the purpose.

The present plan is to erect, as nearly as possible, one building for our barracks, following out the idea of the continental countries, where they get a whole regiment where we have our officers' quarters. It is perfectly amazing, for we have 8 and 10 miles covering some of our military posts. They have to be kept up. Sewer pipes have to be put down and gas pipes and all that sort of thing, and the present conception of that is to keep these things—if we can build a barracks and house a regiment—on a half acre of ground, instead of spreading it over an acre and a half of ground. It is not a matter of ground that makes the difference, but it is these accessories, and of course those are expensive things. The upkeep is an expensive thing. It is not the initial investment but the constant upkeep.

I am rather inclined to think, with this modern conception, the Quartermaster General and the Chief of Engineers could suggest a building with that money which could afterwards be converted into a barracks for practically a whole regiment—probably for eight companies, and then spend a small amount of money for the other four companies. My own opinion is, if this was spent under our direction, the Army would get a very practical benefit from it, because when they got the exhibits out it would be a mere matter of removing the partitions. In all these modern barracks the rooms are low and there are places in the center for the gun racks. The partitions could be removed or additional partitions could be put up if the room was too large.

We are trying to concentrate everything, and instead of having a lot of these little contonments we are trying to put up one substantial building, mostly of some kind of concrete, and housing just as many men as we can under the one roof, because that saves in utility and upkeep.

It is conceded on all hands that it is absolutely necessary to erect a barracks on the Presidio at San Francisco for one regiment. The present buildings are old, inadequate, wooden structures, built of cheap lumber, and if it were not for the splendid climate of California they would probably not have been able to stand as long as they have. It is further conceded that it will be impossible to go on many years more as they have without erecting a barracks for the Infantry at the Presidio.

The construction of the building contemplated by this amendment will be in line with the policy of building by the War Department in recent years, to put up one substantial structure and house just as many men as can be housed under the one roof, because that saves in utility and upkeep.

The fact that the buildings that are used at present for the barracks by the enlisted men at the Presidio are entirely inadequate for the purposes for which they are being used—and the construction of the building authorized by this amendment will meet a useful and permanent purpose—there should be no question or doubt on the part of any Member of the House in voting for this amendment.

This legislation is recommended by the President of the United States, by the Secretary of State, and by the War Department, and surely after such investigation by the administration and those in charge of this kind of work and the needs and necessities of such a building the House should unanimously recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

This is to be a Government work, necessary and permanent. It will enable the proper display of the Government's exhibit and attractions, and then after a few months' use can and will be readily converted into quarters for the Army stationed at the Presidio.

From every consideration and from every viewpoint it is a question of economy in the long run; and that being the case, every Member should feel that he is doing the right thing when he casts his vote for the amendment.

I sincerely trust that the Senate amendment will be agreed to, to the end that ample provision may be made for construction of this building at this time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fourteen minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the people of California believed they would not require a Government exhibit. It is true they believed they would not require a dollar from the Federal Treasury. But some months after Congress decided that San Francisco should be the place where the exposition to commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal should be held 17 of the powers of Europe sent commissioners who met in the city of Berlin and agreed upon an exposition treaty. The terms of that treaty were such that unless a Government exhibit were made by us practically all of Europe would be absent from this exposition at San Francisco. Those facts came to the knowledge of the exposition company and created consternation. And because those facts stared the Government of the United States in the face the President sent a message asking for a Government exhibit.

That is how the matter came before this House. Then Congress voted for a Government exhibit. It was to be spread through all the buildings of the exposition.

Personally I had no objection to that; but the Secretary of War believes, and the men who are on the exposition board believe, that it would be better to have all of the exhibits of the Government under one roof. I spoke with one of them this morning, and he told me that it would be much better to have the exhibits under one roof in a Government building.

Practically every civilized country in the world will have a building at the exposition at San Francisco. England and Germany are the two notable exceptions. On the floor of the House of Commons, when Sir Edward Grey was asked why England was not going to participate, he said that this Government had done nothing for the exposition at San Francisco, and for that reason he did not see any reason why England should be called upon to be represented there. That is what we have had to face.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield just now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KAHN. I would like to yield to my friend, but I have only 14 minutes. If I can get more time, I will gladly yield.

Japan is putting up a building with an exhibit at a cost of $600,000. France is putting up a building with exhibits to cost $400,000. China will put in a building and an exhibit at a cost of half a million dollars. The commissioners of the Argentine Republic are in this city to-day, and they announce that the Argentine Republic is spending $1,150,000 for a building and an exhibit. Italy, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Sweden, and even little Switzerland will have beautiful Government pavilions. All of Central and South America will have buildings; and nearly every State in the Union will have its own State building.

Now, this proposed Government building is to be a permanent building for the Army, and the Secretary of War authorized me to say upon this floor and upon his responsibility that the building is needed, and that such a building can be constructed.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I regret that I can not yield. Their purpose, as I understand it, is to put up the frame at this time and later on complete the interior of the building. The Presidio of San Francisco is a three-regiment infantry post. At the present time there are decent barracks there for one and one-half regiments. The other barracks are mere whitewashed shacks, put up during the Spanish-American War; they were not even constructed by skilled mechanics. They were put up by the soldiers themselves. They are whitewashed temporary quarters, a disgrace to the Government of the United States. The Secretary of War stated before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions that in any other climate they would have had to be abandoned long ago. These buildings that it is proposed to pull down are in the exposition grounds. I have pictures—photographs—of them. They are, as I said a moment ago, a disgrace to the Government of the United States.

Now, let me tell you some of the things that the exposition company has done for the Government in the Presidio. For years estimates have been sent to Congress by the War Department asking that a certain marsh on the northern end of the Presidio be filled in. The estimates, as I now recall, were for $300,000. That work has been done by the exposition company. They have given to this Government $300,000 worth of work that the Government needed in that one spot alone. They have laid out a magnificent parade ground for the Government of the United States. The exposition company paid for it. It does not cost the Government a dollar. They have laid out magnificent parks and roads and parterres, where shrubbery has been planted; they have set out beautiful trees on the Presidio grounds. They have beautified the Presidio of San Francisco in a way that this Government never would have done, probably, or would not have done for years. The work that the exposition company has done is probably worth $400,000 to the Government of the United States.

Now, if this proposed building were simply to be torn down when the exposition is over, if it were not to be a permanent building, perhaps there would be good reason why it should not be constructed. But it is to be a permanent building. It is to house the soldiers of the United States; and any gentleman who has ever been in the Presidio of San Francisco and has looked upon the whitewashed shacks in which the soldiers now live will realize how important it is to put up decent barracks and quarters for the soldiers who wear the blue.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I wanted to ask the gentleman this question: If conditions such as he describes have existed, why has not the Secretary of War or the War Department appealed to Congress for relief?

Mr. KAHN. The Secretary of War has done that repeatedly, and the Committee on Appropriations has always turned down the items in the estimates. I can show the gentleman the estimates. They have not been sent down in the last few years, because they got tired of sending them down.

Mr. DUPRÉ. When was the last time?

Mr. KAHN. I do not recall; but I know that the grounds at that time were needed for field artillery maneuvers; but the Congress never provided the funds for filling in the swamp, and it has all been filled in since by the exposition company.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BARNHART. Is it not a matter of fact that the project of constructing this building on the Presidio has been before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for a long time?

Mr. KAHN. It has never been before that committee to my knowledge.

Mr. BARNHART. It has been to my knowledge.

Mr. KAHN. I repeat, it has never been before that committee, and I can not yield any further. It has never been before that committee at any time. It has been before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, because the communications from the President of the United States and the Secretary of State recommending this appropriation were referred to that committee; but the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has never had any jurisdiction whatever of this matter. The gentleman probably has in mind the marine hospital, which is several miles away from the exposition grounds and which has nothing whatever to do with the exposition.

Now, reference has been made to the $100,000 in the naval appropriation bill and to the $200,000 for the customhouse. The $200,000 will come back into the Treasury of the United States, every dollar of it, through the customs revenues that will be collected at the exposition at San Francisco. The $100,000 for the Navy will not be expended at San Francisco. The great bulk of it will be expended right here and at Hampton Roads. That is where the fleets will come together. That is where the great entertainment is to be. The naval officers of the world's fleet are to call here upon the President of the United States. They are to be entertained here in Washington long before they reach San Francisco, and at Hampton Roads, and the bulk of the money will be expended here and at Hampton Roads; so that those expenses should not be charged up against the exposition. The fleets will go to San Francisco as a finality, but the ships of war are first going to assemble in Hampton Roads, and the money was intended to do the entertaining there. I believe that but a small part of it is to be expended at San Francisco. All that the Congress has appropriated for the exposition is $500,000 for a Government exhibit.

I have told you under what circumstances that money came to be appropriated. I am now explaining to you why the other $500,000 is asked for. That has not been asked by the exposition company, so far as I know. It has been asked by the executive officers of this Government. The President of the United States and the Secretary of State recommended it. The Secretary of War himself appeared before one of the committees of this House and pointed out the necessity for it. The Secretary of Commerce on a recent visit to San Francisco realized the necessity for it, and upon his own motion wrote me a strong letter in which he said it was absolutely essential, or words to that effect, that this building be put up for the honor of the people of the United States.

As far as the directors of the exposition company are concerned, they, as the hosts of the Nation, are going to put up the most magnificent exposition that the world has ever seen. Every American citizen will take pride in it. Every Member of Congress will be proud of what the people of California have done for this Government in planning and executing this superb exposition. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] stated how the people of San Francisco were stricken eight years ago. Their undaunted courage in rehabilitating their city has gained for them the admiration of mankind. But, sir, only two years ago a killing frost in one night destroyed practically the entire citrus fruit crop of the State of California, valued at approximately $30,000,000. It was a terrific blow to our citizens. Yet the people of that State have gone into their pockets and have put up over $30,000,000, or will have put it up by the time the exposition doors open, for this undertaking to which the nations of the world have been invited by the President of the United States. No other exposition ever came to Congress for so little as this. St. Louis, in the region in which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] lives, got $11,600,000. Of this sum $4,600,000 was paid back, but the balance was practically an outright gift in aid of the exposition. The city of Chicago got nearly $6,000,000 as an outright gift in aid of the exposition. Yet we have not asked for a dollar and do not intend to ask for a dollar in aid of the exposition itself. What has been asked for has been asked simply because conditions compelled it. If we could have looked into the future, if we could have foreseen the attitude of European nations, we probably never would have made the statements we did. But we made them. We made a mistake, because we could not foresee the future. We did it honestly, we did it sincerely; we are but human, and it is only human to err. But as American citizens you are interested in the success and the excellence of this exposition just as much as we are. I certainly hope that Congress in its wisdom will vote for this building, which is so earnestly needed. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] concludes his eloquent remarks with the statement that San Francisco will never ask anything for aid of the exposition itself. A few years ago that statement would have convinced me that the future would warrant the statement, but unfortunately I recall that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was even more emphatic and equally eloquent in his promise that they would never ask a cent even for a Government exhibit or any building for that Government exhibit. Why, the gentleman's enthusiasm carried him so far that he said a Government exhibit did not amount to much, anyway.

Mr. KAHN. I thought so.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will put into the RECORD the language of the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. I said that.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman said that we had gone so far with Government exhibits that there was nothing new in them, that they would go into every State in the Union and get State exhibits; that they were raising their own money and did not want any of Uncle Sam's money. The trouble then was that they were faced with a contest that they thought they were going to lose, and which they would have lost if they had not gotten a new hold and have come here with that promise. It was not definite enough originally to suit them, and they had a subsequent hearing, and then they made it ironclad. Now, I believe in men keeping their word. I believe in communities keeping their word. I believe in States keeping their word; and if we are ever to stop the abuse of obtaining money from the Government under false pretenses we have got to do it now. [Applause.]

If I let my personal feelings for individual members of the California delegation control me here, then I might vote in the affirmative and have the pleasing reflection that I had done something that was pleasing to them.

I say to you now that the very recital of the instances of St. Louis and Chicago shows that we have got to stop now if we are ever to get done with this proposition of helping along every community that wants to have an exposition. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] undertakes to say that because St. Louis got it—in his kindness he adds "St. Louis, near the gentleman's district"—therefore California ought to receive Government aid, and the statement is made here that if this building is not given the Government is going to be disgraced. Why, in point of fact, the exhibit at the San Francisco exposition by the Federal Government will be the best that has ever been made by the Federal Government. I make that statement on the authority of the men who are preparing this exhibit and because this time they were chosen from departments that knew something about the business, and were not chosen simply in order that they might draw a salary and enjoy themselves at the exposition. You are going to have the Atlantic Fleet in San Francisco Harbor. Can there be any naval exhibit that will equal that? You are going to have the Army at the Presidio. Can there be any exposition of the Government's Army activities equal to the actual soldiers and the actual guns; the actual Army itself there?

Now, what has happened? I am not going to take the time to read the statements made by Mr. Scott on behalf of the exposition company or the statements made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] on behalf of that company, but they would have you believe that this is a spontaneous uprising on the part of the people of America to have this additional sum appropriated. What nonsense. Are we children? Do we not know the men who have been here in Washington for months? Do we not know something of the banquet that was given? Do we not know of the pressure that has been put upon men to vote this thing through? If other men do not know, I know, because they knew I was opposed to it, and I have had many men interested urge me not to make this fight. It is not a personal fight. I am doing what I believe to be my duty because of the promises then made to this House.

Oh, but they say you ought to have all the Government exhibits gathered together. What is the fact about that? The exposition company itself determined that it would be better to have the exhibits according to objects rather than from localities. For instance, they were going to have educational matters put together, so that you would have the effect of comparison. The Government exhibit was arranged to be put around according as the activities of the Government dovetailed into other exhibits. All of a sudden they discovered these exhibits must be grouped in order for the United States to have a creditable exhibit. Then they get the assistance of the Army in order to find some other excuse. Oh, how plausible they have been. First, when the fight was on, nothing was wanted. Then when the fight was won they made the excuse that they had not been able to get foreign Governments to exhibit. Now that the foreign Governments have agreed to exhibit, it is a new excuse. Now they say you must do it because the Army needs a building. If the Army needs a building at the Presidio for Army purposes, let us examine into it as an Army estimate and see to it that the plan is adapted to that purpose, and then appropriate the money, but do not let us be fooled and be made cat's-paws to pull the chestnuts out of the fire.

The Secretary of War comes before the Committee on Expositions and favors this proposition. I never knew a Secretary of War yet who was not anxious to get buildings and appropriations for the Army. And if he can get a $500,000 building, even if it is not suitable he is that much to the good. As to his knowledge whether the building could or could not be built for the two purposes, I read this statement:

Mr. KONOP. You say if a building like that could be constructed, the exhibits could be housed in it and then it could be ultimately used by you. The question is, can it?

Secretary GARRISON. I do not dare to commit myself on that, because I know nothing about it. That would have to be decided by the Quartermaster General. I would have to take the judgment of some one else.

Further along, the Secretary says:

I would suggest to you, gentlemen, that if you are interested in the question of whether this money could be expended on that reservation in such a way as to be useful, useful to the Army afterwards, that you permit me to send up right now, if you have the time, for the Quartermaster General, and, if necessary, the Chief of Engineers, so that you can find out from them by asking for yourselves. I would find out by asking them, because in such matters I take the advice of men who are experts.

Evidently the committee did not have time, because the experts were not called. Now, we are told that because he appeared before them we should be in favor of it. He did not volunteer; he was asked to come and give his testimony. I have a proper respect for these distinguished gentlemen, but with that respect I think this House knows more about the history of these expositions, about the broken promises, about the faith that has not been kept, about how Congress has been buncoed in the past than all the Cabinet officers put together. [Applause.] Therefore, with all proper and due respect for the distinguished gentlemen, I prefer to follow my own judgment and the record in the case than to follow their recommendation in this matter. Five hundred thousand dollars! Why, we had a fight two years ago, after we had beaten the bill that provided for a commission of seven men and which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] declared was the most indefensible proposition ever brought on the floor. They tacked onto the sundry civil appropriation bill an appropriation of a million and a half dollars. We had roll call after roll call, and, in my judgment, it would have been possible to have defeated the proposal to appropriate anything. But we did not do it, we gave them $500,000, and it was my understanding then that that was the end of the thing. Now, there seems to be no end—always there is a new excuse, always a new reaching out, always a plausible explanation.

How can the Congress rely on statements, what shall it take, what assurance has it now that we will not have to pay the debts of the exposition company on the ground that conditions were not what they expected, and therefore they are in a different position? Certainly not the statements made by the gentlemen on the floor to-day, because statements made by the same gentlemen on the same floor other days have not estopped them or the exposition company from coming here and asking for the money. I repeat that if Congress is going to have any respect for itself, if it is going to have any respect for the promises made to it, it must stand up now.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is the gentleman from Kentucky in favor of the Government exhibit at San Francisco?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is beside the question, because the exhibition has been prepared and provided for. I was in favor of it, but I thought then and think now that San Francisco owes it to her own self-respect, to put it mildly, to pay all the expense of that exhibit.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the gentleman take the position that the citizens of San Francisco should pay for the National Government exhibit?

Mr. SHERLEY. I take the position that if I obtain something of value on my promises, if I am an honorable man I will keep my promises. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is not the exposition in commemoration of the completion of the Panama Canal?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but we have had expositions and commemorations of everything under the sun. What is the trouble about foreign Governments exhibiting? Is it because Uncle Sam is hesitating about furnishing money because of the promises that have been made? No; it is because the world is sick and tired of being buncoed in the matter of these expositions.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Foreign governments have agreed to exhibit, and it may be that they find it profitable.

Mr. SHERLEY. They perhaps have the same sort of pressure brought to bear on them over there that we have here. I know something about legislative bodies, and they are pretty much the same the world over. The proposition here is, Are you going to let them bunco you the second time? They broke their promise when they secured the exposition at San Francisco; they broke it when they came back and got $500,000. Read the act that Congress passed. It provided that the exposition company should furnish the building or buildings to house the exhibit. If they wanted all the Government exhibit in one building, they had the opportunity right there. It was their right to have it determined and they determined it. The exhibits have been made up on that theory. Now, all of a sudden somebody discovers that that will not do, that we must have it all in one building at the expense of half a million dollars. The gentleman from Kansas says that he has been moved by sentiment for the great city of San Francisco. We all have admiration of that city's history in connection with its great disaster. But I do not like this sentiment at this time; it is too expensive, about half a million per sentiment. I am in favor of getting to the time where we may have faith kept. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired, all time has expired, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 109, answered "present" 6, not voting 206, as follows:

So the motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. CARTER (for) with Mr. McCOY (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas with Mr. BURKE of South Dakota.

Mr. GARNER with Mr. TEMPLE.

Mr. HAY with Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. COADY with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. HOUSTON with Mr. Moss of West Virginia.

Mr. BELL of Georgia with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. BROWN of West Virginia with Mr. PLATT.

Mr. CASEY with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. WILSON of New York with Mr. WOODS.

Mr. BRODBECK with Mr. FARR.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to order a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks a recapitulation of the vote. On as close a vote as this it ought to be had. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to be noted as present? I was not here during the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can count the gentleman as present to make a quorum.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote and lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object to laying the motion on the table.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman's withdrawing the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to reconsider and lay that motion on the table.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New York demand a division of the question. The question is, first, on the motion of the gentleman from California to reconsider the vote by which the motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment 145 was agreed to.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. SHERLEY) there were—ayes 66, noes 83.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 110, answered "present" 6, not voting 222, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. McCOY (for) with Mr. CARTER (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. DANFORTH.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. GOULDEN with Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. GORDON with Mr. MCKENZIE.

Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut with Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MCCLELLAN with Mr. MORIN.

For the session:

Mr. UNDERWOOD with Mr. MANN.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Illionis, Mr. MANN, voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have a standing pair with the gentleman from Illinois and I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. UNDERWOOD was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER. I voted "aye" and I desire to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. McCOY was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I thought there was a rule about Members standing around the desk.

The SPEAKER. That is in reference to the Clerk's desk, not the Speaker's desk. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have not voted, but I presume I can be counted for a quorum.

Mr. KAHN. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. NELSON, of Wisconsin, can be counted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair noted him as present; that is, the Chair will announce his name to the Clerk in a minute or so. Are there any other Members present who did not answer at all on this roll call? If so, the Chair would like to know who they are so that they may be counted. The Clerk will note Mr. NELSON, of Wisconsin, as present, and the Chair is rather inclined to the opinion, not dead sure about it, because the language is rather obscure, notwithstanding what the Chair said here a few days ago, that when a Member is counted as present that he has a right to vote. It is not very clear and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] gave in his adherence to it, but it is a hazy kind of a performance.

Mr. BUTLER. The Chair ruled against me the other day; the Chair would not let me vote the other day.

The SPEAKER. If you read one section of the rule alone, the gentleman had no right to vote; but if you take two entirely different sections of the rule and put them together it looks like the intention was, when you come to the justice of the matter of counting a Member present, that he has the right to vote.

Mr. GARNER. In the very nature of things, if he can be counted present he ought to have the right to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make that ruling, and the Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON]——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because the rule provides that no one shall vote unless he was present in the House giving attention when his name is called or should have been called. The question of whether a quorum is present has not been developed, and it is only upon a call of the House where the doors are closed and the Sergeant at Arms is directed to bring in the absentees that a gentleman can vote before the roll is closed whether or not he was here at the time his name was called. Under the proposed other ruling it makes it possible for a Member to come in and vote at any time.

The SPEAKER. Well, inasmuch as it makes no difference, the Chair will let the question stand open. However, the Chair with his present information would allow him to vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule authorizes the Speaker to have noted as present gentlemen who have not voted, but it does not give him any authority to permit a Member to vote who did not vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from New York, for whose parliamentary opinion he has great respect, to two different sections of Rule XV, section 1 of which is as follows:

> Upon every roll call the names of the Members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, in which case the name of the State shall be added; and if there be two such Members from the same State, the whole name shall be called, and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

Now, that is proposition number one. Here is clause 3.

> On the demand of any Member, or at the suggestion of the Speaker, the names of Members sufficient to make a quorum in the Hall of the House who do not vote shall be noted by the Clerk and recorded in the Journal, and reported to the Speaker with the names of the Members voting, and be counted and announced in determining the presence of a quorum to do business.

Now, taking those two sections together, it does not mean that the Speaker counts a gentleman present who did not vote——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But, Mr. Speaker, has the point of no quorum been raised?

The SPEAKER. There is a time when the Speaker has to raise it himself. Whenever the roll call develops the fact that there is no quorum the Speaker must take notice of it, if that is the proper term. What does the gentleman from New York say to those two sections?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in all the history of the House since the adoption of the rules referred to I have never known of an instance, either in the precedents or in the practice of the House, where a Member under these circumstances has been permitted to have his vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. Well, how the Chair came to dig into this matter was, after the interlocutory performance which he had with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] here a few days ago, one of the old and experienced Members of the House, who devotes a great deal of attention to parliamentary law, came to the Speaker privately and called his attention to these two sections taken in conjunction:

On the demand of any Member, or at the suggestion of the Speaker, the names of Members sufficient to make a quorum in the Hall of the House who do not vote shall be noted by the Clerk and recorded in the Journal, and reported to the Speaker with the names of the Members voting, and be counted and announced in determining the presence of a quorum to do business.

Now, turn back to section 1, and it says:

And thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

The Chair stated that the matter was not very clear, that it was somewhat hazy; but it seems if you take those two sections together—and especially section 1 points out section 3—that a Member that is noted by the Speaker or the Clerk, or somebody for him, as being present has a right to vote.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the Speaker hear me for just a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear any gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to be heard just as to the suggestion as to the effect of a rule that a Member coming in after the close of a roll call and being noted as present by the Speaker may vote. Outside of the question of the rule—and the rule does not seem to be entirely clear, although the practice has been entirely uniform—but outside of the rule the effect of a decision of that kind would be that it would not be necessary for Members to come in during the roll call. They could saunter in at their leisure and get in at any time before the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER. It is only in a case where a quorum has not developed.

Mr. MONDELL. I am assuming the somewhat chronic condition that sometimes exists, and exists now, where we are right on the margin of a quorum all the time. There is scarcely ever a quorum in the House at the beginning of a roll call or in the House at any one time. The quorum comes in and goes out; but if under those circumstances Members were not required to be here when their names were called they could come in at any time before the vote was announced and could be recognized by the Speaker and vote. It seems to me it would lead to interminable delay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. In a minute. Inasmuch as counting the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] would not make a quorum, anyway, the Chair feels like leaving the matter open until we can have a general consultation as to what the rule means, because it is extremely hazy and extremely important, too, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] suggests.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] demands a division. Those in favor of the House adjourning will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Seventy-six gentlemen have risen in the affirmative.

The Chair thinks, after consulting the Manual, that the motion to adjourn as made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] at the particular time at which it was made was out of order——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER (continuing). Until after the announcement of the result of that vote. And there is not a quorum present. The yeas were 95, the nays 110, present 5, and 1 noted—not a quorum.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It does not take——

Mr. KAHN. I move a call of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I had moved that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] had moved to adjourn. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MAPES. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. The roll call having revealed that there is not a quorum present, does it take a majority of those present to second the motion to adjourn before the Speaker can entertain it?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is only after the call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Only on the call of the House. Of course the motion to adjourn takes precedence. The only trouble about it was that when it was first made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] it was out of order. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 87, noes 79.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 100, answered "present" 5, not voting 224, as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. McCOY (for) with Mr. CARTER (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. TREADWAY.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH.

Mr. GUDGER with Mr. CURRY.

Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. BARTHOLDT.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "present." I desire to change my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

Mr. McCOY. I withdraw my vote of "present" and vote "yea."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. If the House now moves to adjourn, will this come up as unfinished business to-morrow morning, or would it come up Thursday morning, to-morrow being Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that it would go over until Thursday. The previous question was ordered on this, was it?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I find that Mr. CARTER, of Oklahoma, with whom I was paired, voted "present" on the supposition that I was not here, so that I will have to change my vote again and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. McCOY, and he answered "Present."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. This matter coming up on a conference report, would not the conference report have priority on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think the language of the Calendar Wednesday rule is that "immediately upon the approval of the Journal" the Speaker shall cause the roll of the committees to be called, and so forth. I am not sure; I may be mistaken in my memory of the exact wording of that language, but I think it is "immediately upon the approval of the Journal." If I am correct as to that language, of course this could not come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Here is what the rule on Calendar Wednesday says:

> On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of this rule, unless the House, by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith, shall otherwise determine.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, on the motion to reconsider no previous question was demanded or ordered, so that it does not come within the category, although a motion of very high privilege. Of course, if this motion to reconsider is to be disposed of to-morrow it brings the entire matter before the House, and there is another amendment still to be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled on two or three different occasions, and the action of the gentleman from New York has borne out the ruling of the Chair, that even a conference report could not be considered on Calendar Wednesday except by unanimous consent. The gentleman from New York has asked unanimous consent on several occasions on Calendar Wednesday to set aside that day. Now, this is a part of a conference report. The present Speaker ruled that no bill could be taken up for consideration on Calendar Wednesday without a motion to dispense with that day. The Chair thinks, under all the circumstances and rulings on the subject of Calendar Wednesday, the previous question not having been ordered on the motion to reconsider, that it goes over until Thursday. The Chair is desirous, as are the Members of the House, of observing the integrity of Calendar Wednesday so far as it is consistent with common sense.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ADJOURNMENT.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 22, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Stamford Harbor, Conn., with a view to securing increased depth and removal of obstructions to navigation (H. Doc. No. 1130); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

2. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusion in case of James Crabtree, heir at law of Eli Crabtree, deceased, and executor of Sarah Crabtree, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1131); to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GOEKE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17894) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," approved February 17, 1911, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 995), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 289) granting permission to the Army and Navy athletic associations to use the polo field in Potomac Park, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 996), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 754) for the relief of Jacob M. Cooper, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 998), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 5065) for the relief of Mirick Burgess, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 999), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1063) for the relief of Philip Cook, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1000), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLAYPOOL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 5168) for the relief of the King Theological Hall, and authorizing the conveyance of real estate to the Howard University and other grantees, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1001), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee an Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17919) for the relief of W. A. M. Streeter, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:
